PREFACE.

King Solomon who wrote the wisest words and performed some of the most foolish acts said (B. C. 977) that of making many books there is no end and because he left that record, every writer succeeding him has felt it incumbent on himself to apologize for every book he offers the public. This of course does not apply to Fiction or Poetry, which grows like weeds; but History Philosophy and Science must have reasons for their publication.

The editor makes his bow and says he published a History of Adams County in 1900, which called for this work. While engaged on the History of Adams County 1898 to 1900, he secured much of the material for this work.

The following correspondence will explain itself.

Portsmouth, Ohio, May 9, 1901.

Captain Nelson W. Evans, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Dear Sir:—We are aware that you have on hand the material for a History of Scioto County, which you have, with much patience and great labor, been collecting for years. We believe you have the ability to prepare a History of this County which will certainly be equal, if not superior, to any county history ever published in Ohio. Such a History will be interesting and valuable, not only to our own citizens, but to the people of the whole state.

The Pioneer History of this county has never been fully and accurately written; it should be preserved in durable shape. The beginning of the new century is a fit time to record in permanent form the lives and labors of our forefathers, who, at great sacrifice laid so well the foundations of Our Country's Prosperity.

We therefore request you, not only on behalf of ourselves, but on behalf of all the citizens of the county, to undertake the publication of such a History. In this important work we can assure you of our most hearty aid and co-operation.

Respectfully,

John G. Peebles, George D. Selby, Wm. Moore, Peter F. Boynton, J. W. Bannon, Simon Labold, Leonidas H. Murphy, Will M. Pursell, A. T. Johnson, F. V. Knauss, C. Gillilan, H. D. Hibbs, F. C. Searl, Chas. Kendall, A. R. Morrison, C. A. Goddard, Wm. Duis, L. Taylor, Horace Leet, Levi D. York, John A. Winkler, Samuel Reed, Geo. E. Krickner, Geo. M. Appel, Irving Drew, F. B. Kehoe, Anselm T. Holcomb, Edward T. Reed, Henry Hall, J. J. Spencer, Frank B. Finney, Noah J. Dever, John K. Duke, J. L. Taylor, M. D., C. J. Moulton, P. J. Kline, M. D., S. S. Halderman, M. D., Harry W. Miller, Augustus M. Damarin, W. D. Tremper, John B. Warwick, M. D., Thomas T. Yeager, J. B. Tracy, Ph. Zoellner, W. O. Feurt.

To the foregoing letter, the writer gave the following reply:
To Messrs. John G. Peebles, William Moore, A. T. Holcomb and others.

Gentlemen:—Your letter of the 9th inst., has been received and carefully considered. With your endorsement, your aid, and sympathy, I will undertake to prepare, edit and publish a History of Scioto County, in connection with a Pioneer Record of Southern Ohio. The success of a book of this character does not depend wholly upon the editor. To make it a perfect book several things must combine. There must be financial backing. I should have 750 good orders to begin with. Every citizen of the county who can possibly take a book, should do so. Every citizen should acquaint himself fully with the enterprise, speak kindly of it, and favor it in every respect. He should give his order promptly when the subject is presented to him. He should give all the information he possesses which would be valuable in the book, and should volunteer it. He should give the addresses of all the former citizens of the county residing elsewhere, who can furnish information for the work, or who would be interested in it. With such general interest manifested in the work, there could be no question as to its success. I will prepare a Prospectus which will be published in connection with this correspondence, fully describing the projected book, and in case I receive the requisite number of orders to justify the publication, Scioto County shall have a History which will be better than any of its class heretofore published.

It shall be a book which every citizen will desire to read, to refer to constantly, and no citizen of the county will ever regret that he gave the project his endorsement. Very respectfully yours,
May 22, 1901.

NELSON W. EVANS.

In consequence of the above correspondence the editor began this work. In order to secure additional support and to make the work more interesting, he added the Pioneer Record of Southern Ohio. During the progress of the work, he enlarged its scope and contents and has published a much larger volume than originally contemplated. He flatters himself that he has produced a local history which has had no predecessors in the field he sought to occupy. For him the adventure was entirely novel. He learned much and formed many delightful acquaintances in the progress of the work, but would not consider a repetition of it. He expresses his deep obligations to each and all of his patrons whose support was essential to the production of the work. He desires to acknowledge his obligations to his faithful assistants who worked under his direction in the production of the work, but special commendation is due Thomas L. Bratten, whose careful, diligent and thorough labor on the manuscript has given the work its accuracy.

The editor is of the opinion that the public needs to be much better taught and educated, as to the importance and value of the preservation of local history and that the work of doing this should be taken up by local Boards of Education, and Teachers of the Public Schools. His experience has satisfied him that a proper work of this character should be edited by a citizen of the locality of which he writes and one who has a love for the work. His friends have said this volume will be his monument. He trusts that it does and shall reflect credit on those, who by their financial support and by their contributions of valuable matter have made the work what it is. If the editor has succeeded in preserving and sending down to posterity the memories of those hardy men and noble women who conquered the wilderness and who have conferred upon us our exalted civilization he considers he has done well.

The name "Scioto" is a Shawnee Indian name. A number of definitions have been given to the term and the Editor is unable to determine which is the correct one. "Falling Water," "fresh water" and "hairy" are all given as definitions of the word. The Editor is more likely to believe that the first definition is the correct one. The Shawnee Indian language was never reduced to writing and is now among the dead languages, of no use or value whatever. The only terms which survive are certain names of localities. The first we hear of this country in any manuscript is in the Second Charter of Virginia issued by King James of England, "the wisest fool in Christendom," May 26, 1609. In that document there are about 10,000 words of unnecessary verbiage, as was customary in those times, but for our purpose it is sufficient to say that on that date he granted certain persons and societies, named in the charter, all the land along the coast of the Atlantic from Old Point Comfort two hundred miles north and from the same point two hundred miles south and hence west and northwest from sea to sea. In other words the north and south lines of this grant were at right angles to the general trend of the Atlantic coast. This language included all of Southern Ohio and much more country. Augusta County, Virginia, was created on the 1st day of November, 1738, by the General Assembly of the Colony of Virginia. It was named for the Princess Augusta, wife of Frederick, Prince of Wales, son of King George II and the father of George III. Frederick County was created the same year. The Act separated all the territory west of the Blue Ridge and extended in other directions to the utmost limits of Virginia. It is said in Waddell's Annals of Augusta County, Virginia, to include nearly all of the states of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Illinois, and, as contended by Virginians, a part of Western Pennsylvania. In point of fact the country was not fully organized until October 30, 1745, when the Governor issued a "Commission of the Peace" and named the first Magistrates of the County, twenty-one in number. The first of them was James Patton, second, John Lewis, and amongst others Robert Poage and Robert Cunningham. James Patton was the first Sheriff of the County, appointed by the Governor. The Justices met December 9, 1745 and took the oath of office. The first will presented in Augusta County was that of Robert Wilson. It was executed November 3, 1745 and was proved and admitted to Probate on February 11, 1746. The first deed recorded was that of Andrew Pickens to William McPheeters for 12 1/2 acres of land for five shillings. In 1749 Robert McClanahan was Sheriff of the County and his descendants in Adams County at this time. Prior to 1751, Colonel Richard Henderson and Company claimed to have purchased the territory embraced now in Scioto County and perhaps a hundred times as much more from the Shawnee Indians. Colonel George Croghan was at the mouth of the Scioto river, at Alexandria, in 1752. When he learned of this claim he communicated it to the Governor of Virginia and the General Assembly of Virginia passed resolutions to investigate it and did so. In 1777 a great deal of testimony was taken, amongst others the great Patrick Henry testified. On June 4, 1777, Colonel Henderson wanted to take him in as a partner in the deal and also Colonel William Byrd, but Patrick Henry, Esq., as he was then styled, declined the offer because the land belonged to Virginia and as usual with him, replied with a great deal of eloquence. Several Indians figured in the deal among those named are Dragging Canoe, Oconostoto, Raven Warrior and others. While the colony took a great deal of interest as to what Colonel Henderson would say, he never came forward to substantiate his claim and hence the matter was abandoned. See page 270 et seq. of the Virginia State Papers, 1652 to 1781. In 1769, a new County was created in Virginia known as Botetourt and then it was that the territory now embraced in Scioto County became a part of Botetourt County. It was named in honor of Norborne Berkeley, Lord Botetourt. He was Governor of Virginia in 1768. Scioto County remained a part of Botetourt County until December 20, 1783. It is said there are deeds on record in that County which embrace lands in Adams and Scioto Counties. On the date just mentioned Virginia ceded its territory north of the Ohio river to the United States and appointed Commissioners to execute the deed which was executed by the Virginia Commissioners on March 1, 1784. On July 13, 1787 Congress passed the Ordinance of 1787 creating the Northwest Territory. July 27, 1788, Washington County was proclaimed. It embraced all of Scioto County east of the Scioto river. On July 10, 1797 by proclamation of Governor St. Clair, Adams County was created. It embraced within its limits the whole of Scioto County and from that date until May 10, 1803 the territory of Scioto County was a part of Adams County. On April 30, 1802, Congress passed a law enabling the formation of the State of Ohio, and by an Act of February 10, 1803, the state was formally recognized by Congress. The first legislature of Ohio met on the 3d day of March, 1803. On the 24th day of March, 1803, the Legislature passed an Act to create the County of Scioto which reads as follows: "Be it enacted, etc., That all that tract of country comprehended in the following boundaries be, and the same is hereby erected into a county by the name of Scioto, to-wit: Beginning on the Ohio, one mile on a straight line below the mouth of the lower Twin Creek; thence north to the Ross County line; thence east with said county line to the line of Washington County; thence south with said line to the Ohio; thence with the Ohio to the place of beginning. That all actions, suits and prosecutions now pending in the county of Adams shall be determined in the said court; and that all fines, forfeitures and public dues, which have incurred to or which are due and owing to the county of Adams shall be collected by the sheriff or collector of said county, in the same manner as though no division had taken place. That until a permanent seat of justice shall be fixed in the county of Scioto, by commissioners for that purpose, Alexandria shall be the temporary seat of justice, and courts held at the house of John Collins. That this Act shall take effect and be in force from and after the first day of May next. (Passed March 24, 1803)." On the 6th of April the Legislature appointed for Associate Judges: John Collins Joseph Lucas and Thomas William Swenney. There are sketches of John Collins and Joseph Lucas herein, but oblivion has already secured Mr. Swenney. It is believed that he left the County soon after its organization to go west, but whether for his own good, or that of his neighbors is not now known. However these judges did meet on the 10th day of May, 1803, and organize the County as will be found in the work under the title, "Journal of the Common Pleas Court of Scioto County from 1803 to 1810." The south and west lines of the County have never been changed. The original east line took in about 1-3 of Lawrence County and from 1-4 to 1-6 of Jackson and the north line included more than half of Pike County. In 1804 at the Second Session of the Legislature the east line of Scioto County was changed. That part of Gallia County lying west of the seventeenth range of townships was placed in Scioto County. That made the line of the County to start from opposite Ashland, Kentucky, and run due north to the upper line and took in 2-3 of Jackson County and retained 1-3 of Lawrence. In 1815 Lawrence County was created and the boundaries were as follows: Beginning on the Ohio river, at the southeast corner of township number 2, in range 15 thence west to the southwest corner of said township; thence north to the northeast corner of township 3, range 16, thence west to the northwest corner of said township, thence north to the northeast corner of township 5, in range 17; thence west to the range line between the seventeenth and eighteenth ranges, thence north to the northeast corner of township 4, range 18, thence west to the northeast corner of section 3, in said township, thence south to the northeast corner of section 3, in said township, thence south to the northeast corner of section number 29, in said township, thence west to the northwest corner of section 27, in township 4, range 19, thence south to the southwest corner of section 34, in township 3; thence west to the southwest corner of section 3, in township 2 in said range, thence south to the French Grant line, thence southeastwardly to the east corner of said grant, thence southwesterly to the corner between fractional sections numbers 3 and 4, in township 1; thence south to the Ohio river; thence with the meanders up the river to the place of beginning. This west boundary included the southeast and east sides of the French Grant and the north line of Elizabeth Township, Lawrence County, to the southeast corner of Section 36, range 19, thence the line was west and north of Decatur township, Lawrence County and on the east line of Washington Township, Lawrence County as shown on the map.

Topography.

The latitude of Scioto County is 38 degrees, 48 minutes north, longitude 83 degrees west. The whole southern border of the County is the Ohio river, whose course from Sciotoville to the southeast corner is east of southeast. From Sciotoville to Portsmouth, the river runs almost east to west, but from Portsmouth to the southwest part of the County the general course is west of southwest. The result of this course of the river is that the City of Portsmouth, the County Seat, while on the southern border of the County, is nearly in the center. The County is intersected by the Scioto river which empties at Portsmouth and whose course from Columbus to Portsmouth is south. The main watercourses of the County, tributaries of the Scioto river, are Bear Creek which rises in Pike County and flows some eight or ten miles and empties into the Scioto about three miles below the Pike County line. The next important tributary is Brush Creek which empties into the Scioto about eight miles north of Portsmouth. The principal tributary of this stream rises about two miles back of Rome, in Adams County, and flows south for several miles and then east until it strikes the Scioto County line, near the village of Wamsleyville. This stream flows east to near Otway, where it is joined by the waters of Rocky Fork coming from the southeast. At Otway the north fork of the Scioto Brush Creek empties into the south fork. At Rarden, six miles northeast of Otway, there is a small stream comes in from the north called Rarden's Fork which rises in Pike County and from the south a small stream empties called Dunlap, but the most important stream of the north fork comes to Rarden from the northwest rises in Adams County not far from Locust Grove. Below the mouth of Scioto Brush Creek, Pond Creek, a stream six miles long, empties into the Scioto two miles south of Brush Creek. There is a small stream called Dry Run which empties into the Scioto two miles north of Portsmouth. There are a few streams emptying into the Ohio between the west line and the city of Portsmouth. There is first, Lower Twin, just above Buena Vista in Nile Township, then a mile further, Upper Twin, a small stream. Then Pond Run comes in nine miles from Portsmouth and flows along parallel with the hills for some time before it empties into the Ohio river. Six miles from Portsmouth, is Turkey Creek, which empties into the Ohio, and one mile below the City is Carey's Run. The Scioto has but few tributaries on its east side between the Pike County line and the Ohio river. The principal one is Miller's Run, which empties into the Scioto from the east, two miles above Lucasville. The other streams south of that and between that and Portsmouth are too insignificant for mention. Coming up the Ohio from Portsmouth, the first small stream is Munn's Run, four miles from Portsmouth, named for the Revolutionary soldier, James Munn. At Sciotoville is the mouth of the Little Scioto, which comes from the north and has its sources in Madison Township of Scioto County and Hamilton and Scioto Townships of Jackson County. Long Run flows easterly for some five miles east of Harrisonville and is a tributary of the Little Scioto. There is one on the east side of Madison Township, another on the west side, the latter being the largest tributary. The next important stream emptying into the Ohio in Scioto County, is Pine Creek which has its sources in Bloom Township and flows through Vernon and Elizabeth Townships, Lawrence County, back into Green Township and empties into the Ohio near Wheelersburg. There are no other streams worthy of mention in the County except Genat's Creek which flows past Ohio Furnace and empties into the Ohio about two miles below Haverhill. Some of the roughest lands in the state of Ohio are found in Scioto County and west of the Scioto river. Of this land the best specimens are found in the upper part of Nile Township and in the lower part of Brush Creek Township. The lands on the east side of the Scioto river are of a very different character from those on the west side. The hills are less steep and rocky and more susceptible of cultivation. The whole country was timbered originally, including Scioto County, which timber will be described under the title following:

Timber.

As to the distribution of timber on the mountains, there was, pine, chestnut-oak and chestnut. On the next lower bluffs, grew white-oak, red-oak, black-oak, cedar, gray-ash, blue-ash, elm, hickory and poplar. On the low grounds were the sycamore, cotton-wood, walnut, cher ry, hack berry, hickory, hump and a few beech trees. In the Fall and Winter the line of the white limbs and bodies of the sycamore trees marked the course of the streams, and anyone standing on the top of a hill or mountain viewing the landscape could observe the course and sinuosity of the streams by the white branches and bodies of the sycamore trees.

Trees and Plants.

The following plants grew in Scioto County and the region round when the first settlement was made by white men, and had medicinal properties:

POPULAR NAME.	LINNEAN NAME
Senna,	Cassia Ligustrina.
Artemisia,	Polygonum Sagittatum.
Chivers, or Goose-grass,	Gallum Spurius.
Lobelia, several sorts,	Ruehus.
Palma Christi,	Datura Stramonium.
James's Town Weed,	Malva Rotundifolia.
Mallow,	Hibiscus Moschentos.
Syrian Mallow,	Hibiscus Virginicus.
Indian Mallow,	Sida Rhomboides.
Virginia Marshmallow,	Sida Alabellum.
Indian Physic,	Napaea Hermaphrodita.
Euphorbia Ipecacuanha,	Napaea Dioica.
Pleurisy Root,	Spiraea Trifoliata.
Virginia Snake Root,	Asclepias Decumbens.
Seneca Rattle-Snake Root,	Actaea Racemosa.
Valerian,	Polygala Senega.
Gentian,	Valeriana locusta radiata.
Ginseng,	Gentiana, Saponaria, Velloso, et Centaurium.
Angelica,	Panax Quinquefolium.
Columbo Root,	Angelica Sylvestris.
Tobacco,	Nicotiana.

The following were the plants and trees which bore fruit suitable for eating:

Tuckahoe,	Lycoperdon.
Jerusalem Artichoke,	Helianthus Tuberosus.
Granadillas,	Passiflora Incarnata.
Peach,	Panicum, many species.
Indian Millet,	Holcus Laxus.
Wild Oat,	Zizania Aquatica.
Wild Pea,	Dolichos of Clayton.
Lupine,	Lupinus Perennis.
Wild Hop,	Humulus Lupulus.
Wild Cherry,	Prunus Virginiana.
Cherokee Plum,	Prunus Sylvestris fructu majori.
Wild Plum,	Prunus Sylvestris fructu minori.
Wild Crab Apple,	Pyrus Coronaria.
Red Mulberry,	Morus Rubra.
Persimmon,	Diospyros Virginiana.
Sugar Maple,	Acer Saccharinum.
Sour-bark Hickory,	Juglans Alba cortice lymoso. C.
Common Hickory,	Juglans Alba, fructu minore rancedo. C.
Pecan, or Illinois Nut,	Unknown to Linnaeus.
Black Walnut,	Juglans Nigra.
White Walnut,	Juglans Alba.
Chestnut,	Fagus Castanea.
Chinquapin,	Fagus Pumila.
Hazel Nut,	Corvus Avellana.
Grapes,	Vitis various sorts.
Scarlet Strawberries,	Fragaria Virginiana.
Whortleberries,	Vaccenium Uliginosum.
Wild Gooseberries,	Ribes Grossularia.
Cranberries,	Rubus Oxycoccos.
Black Raspberries,	Rubus Occidentalis.
Blackberries,	Rubus Fruiticosus.
Dewberries,	Rubus Caesius.
Cloud-berries,	Rubus Chamaemorus.

PLANTS AND TREES.

POPULAR NAME.	LINNEAN NAME.
Maize,	Trea Mays.
Round Potato,	Solanum Tuberosum.
Pumpkins,	Cucurbita Pepo.
Cymlings,	Cucurbita Verrucosa.
Squashes,	Cucurbita Melopepo.

The following trees and shrubs are designated as ornamental, although many are also useful:

Plane Tree,	Platanus Occidentalis.
Poplar,	Lerisdendron Tulipifera.
Black Poplar,	Populus Nigra.
Yellow Poplar,	Populus Tremula.
Aspen,	Tilia Americana.
Linden or Lime,	Acer Rubrum.
Red Flowering Maple,	Aesculus Pavla.
Horse Chesnut,	Bignonia Catalpa.
Catalpa,	Magnolia Tripetala.
Umbrella,	Swamp Laurel.
Swamp Laurel,	Magnolia Acuminata.
Cucumber Tree,	Laurus Indica.
Portugal Bay,	Laurus Barbonia.
Red Bay,	Rhododendron Maximum.
Dwarf-rose Bay,	Many Species.
Laurel of the Western Country,	Laurus Benzoin.
Wild Pimento,	Laurus Sassafras.
Sassafras,	Robinia Spuedo-acacia.
Locust,	Gleditsia.
Honey-locust,	Cornus Florida.
Dogwood,	Chionanthus Virginica.
Snow Drop,	Ruberis Vulgaris.
Barberry,	Cercis Canadensis.
Red Bud, or Judas Tree,	Ilex Aquifolium.
Holly,	Crataegus Coccinea.
Cockspur Hawthorn,	Euonimus Europaus.
Spindle Tree,	Euonimus Americanus.
Evergreen Tree,	Itea Virginica.
Elder,	Sambucus Nigra.
Papaw,	Annona Triloba.
Candleberry Myrtle,	Myrica Cerifera.
Dwarf Laurel,	Kalmia Angustifolia.
Ivy,	Hedera Quinquefolia.
Trumpet Honeysuckle,	Lonicera Sempervirens.
Upright Honeysuckle,	Azalla Nudiflora.
Yellow Jasmine,	Bignonia Sempervirens.
American Aloe,	Calyanthus Floridus.
Sumach,	Agave Virginica.
Poke,	Rhus, many species.
Long Moss,	Phytoloca Decandra.
	Tellandsia Usneoides.

The following trees and shrubs are classed among the very useful:

Reed,	Arundo Phoaagmitis.
Virginia Hemp,	Acneda Cannabina.
Flax,	Lenum Virgineanum.
Black, or Pitch Pine,	Pinus Taeda.
White Pine,	Pinus Strobis.
Yellow Pine,	Pinus Virginica.
Spruce Pine,	Pinus Follis Sngularibus, C.
Hemlock Spruce Fir,	Pinus Follis Sngularibus C.
Arbor Vitae,	Thuya Occidentalis.
Juniper,	Juniperus Virginica.
Cypress,	Cupussus Disticha.
White Cedar,	Cupussus Thyoides.
Red Cedar,	Quercus Nigra.
Black Oak,	Quercus Alba.
White Oak,	Quercus Rubra.
Willow Oak,	Quercus Phellos.
Chestnut Oak,	Quercus Prinus.
Black Jack Oak,	Quercus Aquatica.
Ground Oak,	Quercus Pumila.
Live Oak,	Quercus Virginiana.
Black Birch,	Betula Nigra.
White Birch,	Betula Alba.
Beach,	Fagus Sylvatica.
Ash, several species,	Fraxinus Americana.
Elm,

Native Wild Flowers.

The subject is treated in the History of Ohio by Caleb Atwater, and the following list of flowers found growing wild by the early settlers. This list was prepared by R. Buchanan of Cincinnati, in 1838.

SCIENTIFIC NAMES.	COMMON NAME.
Argemone Bulbosa.	Turkey Pen.
Anemone Thalictrifolia.	Rue anemone.
Anemone Virginiana.	Thimble weed.
Erythronium albidum.	Dogtooth violet, white.
Erythronium Americanum.	Dogtooth violet, yellow.
Trillium sessile.	Wake robin, purple.
Trillium pendulum.	Wake robin, white.
Trillium grandiflorum.	Wake robin, white.
Delphinium tricolor.	Larkspur, ever flowering.
Delphinium exaltatum.	Larkspur, tall late flowering.
Viola Cucullaria.	Blue violet.
Viola Canadensis.	Changeable colored.
Viola pubescens.	Yellow violet.
Eranthis bitermata.	Windflower.
Monarda didyma.	Bergamotte.
Monarda oblongata.	Bergamotte.
Iris versicolor.	Blue flag.
Commelina Virginica.	Day flower.
Houstonia cerulea.	Dwarf pink.
Houstonia purpurea.	Dwarf pink.
Palmonaria Virginica.	Blue bells.
Dodecatheon integrifolium.	False cowslip.
Spigelia Marylandica.	Pink Root.
Phlox divaricata.	Early sweet william.
Phlox aristata.	Early prairie sweet william.
Phlox paniculata.	Tall meadow sweet william.
Phlox pyramidalis.	Tall meadow sweet william.
Phlox maculata.	Spotted stem sweet william.
Phlox reptans.	Creeping sweet william.
Polemonium reptans.	Greek valerian.
Campanula Americana.	Bell flower.
Labella Cardinalis.	Cardinal flower, scarlet.
Claytonia Virginica.	Spring beauty.
Gentiana saponaria.	Blue gentian.
Gentiana ochroleuca.	Marsh gentian.
Gentiana quinqueflora.	Marsh gentian.
Gentiana crinita.	Fringed gentian.
Tradescantia Virginica.	Spider wort.
Phalangium esculentum.	Wild hyacinth.
Lilium canadensis.	Meadow lily.
Lilium superbum.	Superb lily.
Lilium catesbeii.	Catesby's lily.
Convallaria racemosa.	Solomon's seal.
Convallaria grandiflora.	Large flowering.
Saururus cernuum.	Lizard's tail.
Oenothera biennis.	Evening rose.
Oenothera grandiflora.	Large primrose.
Cassia Marylandica.	Senna.
Cassia Chamachrista.	Senna.
Baptisia corulea.	Indigo weed, blue.

SCIENTIFIC NAME.	COMMON NAME.
Silene Virginica ,	Catch fly, scarlet color.
Silene regia ,	Catch fly, meadow pink.
Spirea lobata ,	Pride of the meadow.
Spirea aruncus ,	Pride of the meadow.
Gillenia stipulacea ,	Indian physic.
Gillenia trifoliata ,	Indian physic.
Rosa parviflora ,	Small rose.
Rosa rubiflora ,	Small rose.
Rosa lucida ,	Many species.
Rubus odoratus ,	Rose flowering raspberry.
Sanguinaria canadensis ,	Blood root.
Saracenia purpurea ,	Side saddle plant.
Nymphae odorata ,	White pond lily.
Naphar advena ,	Yellow water lily.
Aquilegia canadensis ,	Wild columbine.
Clematis Virginica ,	Virgin's flower.
Clematis viorna ,	Leather flower.
Caltha palustris ,	American cowslip.
Dracocephalum Virginianum ,	Dragon head.
Scutellaria cordifolia ,	Scull cap.
Euchroma coccinea ,	Painted cup.
Ruellia strepens ,	Painted cup.
Antirrhinum linaria ,	Snap dragon.
Collinsia verna ,	Snap dragon.
Chelone glabra ,	Shake head.
Martynia proboscidea ,	Unicorn plant.
Dentaria laciniata ,	Tooth root.
Geranium maculatum ,	Crow foot.
Hibiscus militaris ,	Swamp hibiscus.
Liatris scariosa ,	Blazing star.
Liatris spicata ,	Gay feather.
Eupatorium coelestinum ,	Blue eupatorium.
Eupatorium ,	Various species.
Aster nova anglica ,	New England Aster, many species.
Aster shortii ,	Star wort.
Aster , various species of,	Star wort.
Solidago , various species,	Golden rod.
Achillea millefolium ,	Yarrow.
Helianthus , twenty species,	Wild sun flower.
Rubeckia purpurea ,	Wild sun flower.

Silphium perfoliatum ,	Ragged cap.
Habenaria incisa ,	Ragged cap.
Habenaria psychoides ,	Ragged cap.
Orchis spectabilis ,	Gay orchis.
Aplectrum hyemale ,	Putty root.
Asclepias tuberosa ,	Swallow wort.
Apocynema cannabinum ,	Indian hemp.
Asarum canadensis ,	Wild ginger.
Sweet Buckeye,	Pavia ohlensis .

Vines.

Fox Grape,	Vitis Vulpina .
Sweet Prairie Grape,	Vitis Sciotoensis .
Hill Grape,	Vitis Accuminatis .
White Grape,	Vitis Alba maxima .
Red Large Grape,	Vitis Rubia maxima .
Frost Grape,	Vitis Bigantea ohlensis .

Grasses.

Southern Ohio was a great grass country, especially, along the rivers and in the prairies and barrens. Even in the woods, in many parts of the country, grasses grew abundantly. On the prairies, there were grasses, intermingled with flowers. There was a clover, called "buffalo clover," but the original native grasses have disappeared and the imported grasses have taken their place.

Animals.

The following animals were found by white men when they first explored the country: Bison, elk, bear, black bear, black and yellow wolf, sometimes called the gray wolf, the panther, black and gray fox, red fox, catamount, wild cat, raccoon, opossum, polecat, beaver, otter, muskrat, mink, weasel, gray squirrel, chipmunk, fox, squirrel and hare.

Birds and Fowls.

The following is a list of the birds and fowls found in the country when first visited by white men. The common name is given first and the technical name is given second.

SCIENTIFIC NAME.	COMMON NAME.
Tyrant, Field Martin,	Lanius Tyannus.
Turkey Buzzard,	Vultur Aura.
Bald Eagle,	Falco Leucocephalus.
Sparrow Hawk,	Falco Sparverius.
Pigeon Hawk,	Falco Columbarius.
Fork-tail Hawk,	Falco Furcatus.
Fishing Hawk,
Little Owl,	Brix Asco.
Blue Jay,	Corvus Cristatus.
Baltimore Bird,	Orjorus Baltimore.
Black Bird,
White Bill Woodpecker,	Picus Principalis.
Larger red-crested Woodpecker,	Picus Picatus.
Red-headed Woodpecker,	Picus Erythrocephalus.
Gold-winged Woodpecker,	Picus Auratus.
Red-bellied Woodpecker,	Picus Carolinus.
Nuthatch, Small Nuthatch,	Trochilus Colubris.
Humming Bird,	Trochilus Colubris.
Wild Goose,	Anas Canadensis.
Buffe's Head Duck,	Anas Bucephala.
Summer Duck,	Anas Sponsa.
Largest Crested Heron,	Ardea Herodias.
Crested Bittern,	Ardea Violaria.
Blue Heron, Crane,	Ardea Ceryle.
Brown Bittern, Indian Hen,
Wild Turkey,	Meleagris Gallopavo.
American Partridge, Quail,	Tetrax Virginianus.
Pheasant, Mountain Partridge,
Ground Dove,	Columba Passerina.
Pigeon of Passage, Wild Pigeon,
Turtle Dove,	Columba Carolinensis.
Lark, Sky Lark,	Alauda Alpestris.
Field Lark,	Alauda Magna.
Red-winged Starling, or,
Marsh Blackbird,	Virginia Loxia Cardenalis.
Red Bird,	Muscapa Rubra.
Summer Red Bird,	Muscapa Carolinensis.
Cat Bird,
Black-cap Fly Catcher,
Blue Bird,	Motacilla Sialis.
Wren,	Montacilla Regulus.
Crested Titmouse,	Parus Becolor.
American Swallow,	Hirundo Pelargus.
Purple Martin,	Hirundo Purpurea.
Goat Sucker,	Great Caprimulgus Europaeus.
Bat,
Whip-poor-will,	do do

Serpents.

There were two species of rattle snakes which had their dens in the hills, the small spotted rattle snake and the large black rattle snakes; two or three species of black snake; water snakes of several species; and the common garter snake, copper-head and lizards.

Fishes.

The fishes in the waters of the Ohio river were as follows: black, yellow and white perch; spotted perch, pike, trout, buffalo, several species of sucker, two species of sturgeon, eels, herrings, garfish, chubs, minnows, and catfishes of two species, black and yellow.

Geology.By the Editor.

To make an extensive chapter on this topic would be a fraud upon our patrons and readers, because we would necessarily have to reproduce something already written. The editor of this work is not a geologist and to assume to be one would be to quote from some one else. Instead of quoting and occupying space much needed for other subjects, it is best to refer to the works where a good descriptive geology will be found. The article on the Geography and Geology of Ohio, in Howe's Historical Collection of Ohio, published in 1889, in two volumes, contains an article by the late Professor Edward Orton, State Geologist, which gives the subject so full that it could not be quoted here. In Geology, only the latest works are reliable and this is about the latest. No complete treatise on the Geology of Scioto County has ever been written and the editor could not write one solely for this work; for two reasons: first, he is not fitted for that task, and second, if he were it would not pay to do it for a work of this scope. Professor Orton's treatise beginning on page 61 occupies to page 89. In 1836, the State first began to study its geological formations and those studies have been pursued ever since. In 1869, the State had a second geological survey and again in 1881. The rocks and clays in Ohio grew, or were stratified in water. There are no igneous or metamorphic rocks in the State. All our formations grew in the sea. One time the waters of the Gulf of Mexico covered our State. The waters of the Gulf extended to Lake Erie and were warm. On page 64 of the work referred to is a good map of the geological formation of Ohio. On the opposite page is a map showing in what territories the various outcroppings exhibit themselves and in this article we refer to those maps as one and two. One has the vertical section of the rocks of Ohio, and two is entitled Geological Map of Ohio. The reader will please place those maps before him and then this article will be readily understood. Scioto County is in the Carboniferous System, nearest the top. It has under it the Devonian, the Upper Silurian and the Lower Silurian. The Carboniferous System is divided into eight parts of which Scioto County belongs to the Subcarboniferous limestone. It lies under six measures and has eleven under it. The lowest rocks in the state No. 1, Trenton Limestone, crop out at Point Pleasant in Clermont County where General Grant was born. The series count from 1 at the bottom of Map 1, to 18 at its top. No. 2 the Utica Shale, shows at Findlay, 800 feet below the surface. No. 3, Hudson river series, shows at Cincinnati. No. 4, Medina Shale, shows at many points in South Western Ohio. It produces the gas at Lancaster 1902 feet below the surface. It crops out only in Southern Ohio. No. 6, the Niagara group, is in Adams County, Clark, Miami, Montgomery and Green. The Dayton stone comes from this system. The Hillsboro sandstone is also the last upward element in this group.

No. 7, the Lower Helderberg, shows up at Greenfield, in Highland County, and at Lima in Allen County and in Lucas and Wood Counties. No. 8, the Upper Helderberg, yields the Columbus and Delaware limestone. This is the finest limestone in Ohio. No. 9, is the Hamilton Shale. No. 10, is the Ohio Shale, found in Cleveland and in Erie and Huron Counties. No. 11, the Waverly Group, is named for the sandstone found near Waverly in Pike County. This is the same stone quarried at Buena Vista, by the Rarden Stone Company, at Rarden, Ohio, and the Henley Stone Company, at Henley, Ohio. No. 12, the Subcarboniferous limestone is found in Scioto, Jackson, Hocking, Perry and Muskingum Counties. No. 13 to 17, is the conglomerate and coal measures. They bear the coal, fire clay, limestone and cement rock found in Scioto County. All the seams belong to the bituminous division. By reason of these coals, Ohio comes only second to Pennsylvania in the production of coal. The coal measures contain the iron ore and fire clay. The ore seams in these measures, at Hanging Rock, are not over twelve inches in thickness. The clays of this region are used for fire brick, stone ware, earthen ware, sewer pipes and paving bricks. Ohio leads all other states in the industries growing out of these clays. Ohio is first in its production from stone quarries. There was never any glacier action in Scioto County. It lies south-east of the glacier limit.

Oil and Gas.

In some remote geological period there was an upheaval from the workshops of Vulcan in the center of the earth, under Tennessee, Kentucky and Southern Ohio, and this created the Cincinnati anticlinal, or arch. The Trenton limestone is the floor of the formation described, and the roof of the anticlinal. The dip is thirty feet to the mile westward in our locality. Under this anticlinal is the petroleum and natural gas. The shales of the Waverly sandstone region and the Waverly stone itself are permeated with petroleum. Petroleum is found in paying quantities within fifty miles southwest of Scioto County, in the Bath County, Kentucky oil fields. It is not in our province to discuss how petroleum and natural gas are formed in the bowels of the earth, or the various qualities of each. Newton Robinson distilled the finest oil, from the oil bearing shales at Buena Vista and would have made a fortune at it but the discovery of petroleum in Pennsylvania ruined his enterprise. There must be a porous rock to contain the oil and an impervious or nonporous rock to hold the oil down as a cover. This condition must exist before oil can be found in paying quantities. Salt water is always found in connection with oil and gas. To find oil there must be the source, reservoir and cover. The cover of the oil rock is usually a fine grained impervious clay shale. If this shale is found the rock underneath, if a sandstone, or limestone, contains oil. It is likely to be found at the surface of the Trenton limestone or at the bottom of the Ohio shale, No. 10, in the series given. Oil and gas occur in all rocks which have a heavy shale cover. The oil is associated with salt water in the stratum which contains it. The oil is pressed upward by gravity until it reaches the cover of shale which holds it down; when that is penetrated it escapes. Clay is an agency in the primary accumulation of petroleum. This is true in eastern Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. Sandstone rocks are sure receptacles for oil and it is sometimes called "oil sand" but it is really a sandstone rock. In the Findlay gas and Lima oil fields, limestone is the oil sand, but it has the same shale cover as elsewhere found. The pressure which drives the gas to the surface with such a mighty force, when the roof of the gas cover is penetrated is not fully explained by scientists. The pressure of the water about and under the gas reservoir is the best theory of the force which drives the gas to the surface. When gas and oil wells are exhausted, salt water follows and hence it is supposed that water is the force which drives the gas and oil to the surface with such great force. This water pressure is falsely termed rock pressure and the term has been adopted. It is 750 pounds in the Pennsylvania wells and 400 pounds in the Findlay wells.

Sources of Gas and Oil in Ohio.

These are given by Professor Orton as follows:

1. The Berea Grit in No. 11, in the table, in Eastern Ohio.
2. In the Ohio shale in Northern and Central Ohio. This is in No. 10 in the table.
3. In the Clinton limestone in Wood, Hancock and Fairfield Counties. This is in No. 5 on the table.
4. In the Trenton Limestone in Northwestern Ohio. No. 1 on the bottom in the table.

In Lancaster, in Southern Ohio, the largest pressure of gas exists. At 2,000 feet wells have yielded 1,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day when first struck, but wells there cannot be sunk for less than $3,000 to $4,000 each. Gas and oil were discovered at Findlay, in November 1884. There were surface indications of gas and oil at Findlay long before it was found. In one instance the gas had been used to light a dwelling for forty years before the discovery. The first flow was at 1,100 feet, but the great find was in November 1886, when the great Karg well showed a daily yield of 14,000,000 feet. In the Findlay field, oil was discovered first and after that gas. The substance of the matter is that in 14 of the North-western Counties of Ohio, under the black swamp, at a distance of 1,000 to 2,000 feet below the surface, the Trenton limestone has a different chemical composition from what generally characterizes that stratum. The limestone is of a dolomite character. In these rocks the lime is 50 to 60 per cent. In the usual and ordinary Trenton formation the lime is 80 and 90 per cent. In other words, in the latter case, the rocks are unfit for the storage of oil and it will not be found. The salt water, the remains of ancient seas which covered the earth, is universal. It will be found everywhere at varying depths. The gas and oil are above the salt water and in the arches of the Trenton rock. Where the strata of the covering rock is uniform, oil and gas will not be found. There must be a change in the porous rock to find it. Natural gas is a stored power and nature will not renew it as rapidly as it is now used. Some day it will be and must be exhausted and by that time we shall have an artificial substitute.

The Soils and Forests.

The soils of Ohio are divided into those affected by glacial action and non glacial. A map of the glacial and of the non glacial and of Ohio is shown on page 91, 1st Volume of Howe, before referred to. In this map Adams, Pike, Scioto, Jackson and the South eastern portion of Ross are non glacial. Like Neptune they rose out of the sea and were seaborne. The non glacial soils are especially adapted to forest growth, and in the primitive state, were covered with dense forests. The forests have been destroyed to an almost entire extent and it seems shameful and wasteful to find how the forests in Clermont, Brown, Adams, Scioto, Pike, Jackson, Lawrence and Gallia Counties have been destroyed. They do not exist and have disappeared in the past fifty years. These soils are fit for the growth of lumber, for rearing sheep and cattle, for fruits and vegetables. They are no longer, generally, fit for wheat and corn. The upland clay land favors the white oak tree. White oak land is good, but requires intelligent treatment. The hills of Southern Ohio should never have been denuded of their forests, and nature will take terrible revenge for this forest destruction. The generations now on earth will have to begin forest planting and keep it up. First class land in Ohio was covered by the sugar tree and walnut, second class, by white oak, and third class, the swamps, by elm and red maple. The last class when drained makes the best of land.

Geological Report of 1870.

In this work on page 163, chapter V, Scioto County is treated of specially, but the examination was only partial.

Madison Township contains iron ore and coal.

Harrison Township has three feet of fire clay and two layers of iron ore, one guinea fowl, 18 inches seam, and one one foot seam. It was from the lands of Harrison Furnace that the clay now used at Sciotoville for fire bricks was first used. There is a vein of coal one foot four inches in Harrison Township.

In Bloom Township there is a vein of coal eighteen inches, and three feet of sandstone containing iron ore, and three feet of fire clay on the Henning farm. It is of good quality and is used at South Webster. There is three feet of fire clay in Joseph Spitznagle's place.

On the Scioto Furnace lands there were ten inches of cannel coal, and one foot two inches of guinea fowl iron ore.

In Porter Township the principal geological deposit is fire clay used in the manufactories at Sciotoville. There is a six foot vein in the township. It is hard and of a light ash color. The bricks made are in high repute and command a ready sale. An analysis of No. 1 clay from this Township is as follows:

Silicic acid	61.90
Alumina with trace of iron	22.80
Lime05
Magnesia70
Water	12.90
Potash and soda90
Total,	99.25

The writer then compares these with the fire clays of Europe and Great Britain, and comes to the conclusion that the Scioto County fire clays will compare favorably with the best foreign clays. The ideal in a fire clay is pure silicate of alumina. It is almost infusible. The per cent of silica in the Sciotoville Fire Clay compares favorably with foreign clays. The per cent of impurities is small. The impurities, oxides of iron, magnesia and alkalies, which can be present without rendering the material useless for its finer applications, contain from 2 to 3½ per cent of these bases. Sciotoville Fire Clay rises from .90 to 2.90 per cent. of these. In foreign clays, the aggregates are larger.

Clay Township has two feet of sandy iron ore. It has a vein of clay one foot seven inches thick.

In Vernon township there is three feet of a coal vein, a second of the same and a third of one foot. There is one foot of red black ore and another ore vein of six inches.

At Clinton Furnace the coal vein is two feet two inches in thickness.

Empire Furnace has an eight inch vein of ore, one foot and ten inches of coal.

Green Township has a three foot vein of coal, another of one foot and another of one foot and three inches.

The foregoing are the only Townships of Scioto County treated in the Geological Report of 1870.

Formation of Hills and Valleys.

By Wilbur Stout.

As we look at the broad and beautiful valley of the Ohio, walled in by the rugged hills, we seldom stop to think of the powerful forces that nature has used in thus carving it out. This region at one time was the bed of the ocean. The internal forces caused it to rise slowly, and finally it became land. This upheaving with periods of rest and sinking continued for a great period of time but finally ceased and the land has remained nearly stationary since. From the time the land first appeared the powerful forces of weather and erosion have constantly eaten away at the land. These agencies have denuded the land from a level plain to its present irregular form. At first small channels and streams appeared which gradually deepened as the land rose. Weathering and erosion widened and deepened these channels into valleys and cut down and rounded their banks into hills. Our hills and valleys are the result of these forces. They were not formed from foldings of the earth's crust like the great mountain systems along the Atlantic and in the Western part of the United States. The strata of rock in this country are not distorted, but lie in approximately level planes. A stratum occurring in a hill on one side of a valley occurs in the hill on the opposite side and it will be in the same plane. Often the strata occurring low in the hills can be traced several miles. They do not at any place vary much from a plane, but slight bends or rolls are common to all strata. No where in this country are the strata bent to conform with the outline of the hills and valleys. Along the hills facing the river, a certain stratum may be easily traced for several miles. However there is a general uniform dip, south of east. This dip has not been accurately measured but it amounts to several feet to the mile. The eastern dip is greater than 20 feet to the mile while the southern dip is not more than 10 feet. Before the glacier period, the land was higher and the valleys deeper than at present. The valleys were filled up by the debris from the glacier. So the denudation here has been very great as our broad valleys and sculptured hills show. There is evidence that the tops of the highest hills do not represent the surface of the original plain. Strewn about on the top of a very high hill near Sciotoville may be found pieces of a conglomerate which are not in place but which are the remains of a stratum that when in place was above the hill top. The surface of this plain was above the highest hill tops. The valleys were cut from it and many of the hills have been worn far below its original surface. The amount of material carried away has been very great.

Evidence seems to point to the fact that the Ohio river at one time took a different route from its present one. It flowed across Dogwood Ridge, up what is now the Little Scioto, down what is now Beaver Creek in Pike County. The large nearly level tract of land on Dogwood Ridge, the appearance of the hills on either side, the presence of boulders of foreign materials, the kinds of clay, the size of the Little Scioto and Beaver Creek valleys, all point to this conclusion. At what period or for what length of time the river took this course is not known, but the valley seems to be very old. The lapse of time necessary to have produced such changes must have been very great. If we go to some high cliff and look at the large amount of sand and fragments fallen to its base, our ideas of time fade and become meaningless. We may be able to see where a few fragments have fallen off in the last year or where the rocks have been washed bare by the last heavy rains but no great change appears. Where the rocks are protected by soil or mold the changes are less rapid. Vegetation gives the rock a good protection from the elements. Only percolating water and roots affect it there. In a life time, the changes are so slight they furnish no means of comparison by which to arrive at the length of time required to form such valleys. The true glacier scarcely touched this county. The terminal morain lies north of it. Small portions of the glacier ice may have crossed into the county in the northern part, as we find deposits of gravel and boulders that would indicate the presence of ice. The most marked effect was on the water ways. The general courses were not changed to any extent but the beds were filled up from 100 to 200 feet which changed them from narrow to broad, fertile and beautifully terraced valleys. This is shown from the facts that trunks of trees, leaf beds, charcoal and coal are mixed with the deposits of pebbles and sand. The presence of these pebbles, being of foreign materials, can be accounted for in no other way. The formation of this deposit in this country was accomplished by two things, one, the ice dam across the Ohio above Cincinnati, the other, the washing down of material from the glacier ice sheet. The material was carried down by the water from the melting glacier. The Big Scioto, the only stream in this county extending past the terminal morain, was filled up by material direct from the glacier and consequently it is the only stream, excepting the Ohio, containing flint gravel in any quantities. The deposit in the Ohio was carried down by the Scioto and other large streams east of here which take their rise beyond the glacier morain. The water was about 400 or 500 feet deep in the Ohio valley. This gave the smaller streams a way to fill up. The material in them was deposited from the water backed up from the Ohio. The soil of the Little Scioto, Pine Creek, and Turkey Creek valleys is fine sand and clay which settled from the still water. The gravel scattered through this clay was dropped by floating ice. The terraces on these streams were formed by the water at different stages of height subsequent to the highest formation. This soil was eroded by the water of the streams during the last stages of the glacier period. The flora and fauna were confined to the tops of the hills as the water covered all the low lands. Only the plants and animals that could withstand the cold existed; the others either became extinct or retreated south to more favorable localities.

Clays.

The clay deposit extends over the eastern part of the county from the Scioto river to the eastern line. Near the Scioto river the clay lies high up on the hills and gradually dips south of east till in the eastern part of the county it lies low down near the base of the hills. Along its western outcrop it lies only on the highest hills and only in small quantities. But little workable clay lies east of Munn's and Long Run. Some good clay has been worked west of these runs, but the supply is nearly exhausted. The region from these runs to the Little Scioto has furnished the most good clay. This section was well covered with fine clay. The clay of this region is of a very fine quality. It is a hard flint clay, white or light colored, fine grained, and quite free from impurities. It compares favorably or even outclasses the finest clay from Fayette, Pa., Mount Savage, Maryland, or St. Louis, Missouri. It ranks high with the best German and English clays. The deposit is usually from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 11 feet thick with an average of about $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 4 feet. The thick deposits from 6 to 11 feet are confined to small areas. The brick works at Sciotoville and the Star yard get their supplies from this region. The first brick plant in the county was at Sciotoville. Adams' yard at Portsmouth got clay from this region for a number of years. The clay on the front hills is largely exhausted, but farther back there are large undeveloped deposits of fire clay which can be obtained at small cost. The clay directly east of the Little Scioto is usually of a blue color and contains much sand. Some deposits contain enough iron to make the clay worthless for fire brick. Here the strata is lower in the hills and consequently there is greater clay area. Some good clay has been taken from the hills near the Ohio river. The deposit extends over the whole eastern part of the county and outcrops near the base of the hills. This clay is usually high in sand and contains too much mica to be of any value for brick. It is of a dark blue color and rather soft, having lost its flinty nature. Still the best of it makes good fire brick. There are large brick plants at Webster and Scioto Furnace. The Webster plant makes building brick principally. The Scioto Furnace plant makes fire brick largely for blast furnace purposes. These yards get their clay from along the Baltimore & Ohio railway and down Frederick. The Webster Blast Furnace plant at Sciotoville gets clay from this region. They make blast furnace brick and some high grade fire brick. This clay region has been developed only along the Baltimore & Ohio track and down Frederick. The outcrop is low on the hills, making it easy to get by railroads as it is run from the bank and dumped into the cars. This makes the cost of hauling very low. Along the Ohio river, it outcrops near the base of the hills. It can be traced from Franklin Furnace to the Lawrence County line. The clay is very sandy and contains a large amount of mica. It is blue in color and quite soft in the outcrop. This region has never been developed. On Lick Run it outcrops but has never been opened to determine its quality. Outcroppings also occur at Ohio and Junior Furnaces. Occurring with the hard flint clay called No. 1 is a soft clay called No. 2. This clay is very soft and has a fine grain. It generally lies above but may be found under or between two strata of No. 1. The deposit is usually larger than that of the No. 1. It occurs from a trace to 30 or even more feet.

This is used as a bonding material in the manufacture of fire brick also in some paving and building brick. In the fire brick a certain part of No. 2 is mixed with the No. 1 to make it plastic enough to be moulded. In the paving brick made at Sciotoville and the building brick at South Webster, it is used as the bonding material. It alone will not make fire brick as it fuses easily and shrinks too much, but in paving brick it makes them more vitrified and durable. This clay is easily dug, consequently it is obtained at a small cost. Clay was formed in low, wet marshes. In fact it is the mud of these old swamps. Plants growing in these swamps removed from this mud most of the minerals which would have spoiled it for fire brick. Sodium and potassium were the principal elements removed. The clay stratum contains impressions of roots, stems and leaves of carboniferous plants. Above the clay is a small deposit of coal which in some places is several feet thick. This layer of coal proves conclusively that the clay was the bottom of a swampy region as coal is only deposited in low wet ground and at no great depth as the plants would not have grown. The clay used at the Oakes' tile works at Haverhill and the Bell works at Wheelersburg is of glacier origin. It was deposited when the river valley was flooded with the water from the glacier. The clay was largely derived of foreign material. It is the fine sand and clayey material brought down by the glacier and deposited here by the water. It is taken from the low bottom land near the Ohio. The supply is abundant. It has a mottled appearance, varying in color from nearly white to a dark brown. Its general appearance is a light blue, when ground and mixed. It is fine grained and free from coarse sand and contains enough iron to make the tile and brick a dark red color. The ware is solid, durable and does not weather. In the hills on the West side of the Scioto west of Lucasville is a deposit of clay. This clay is in large quantities and has a fine appearance, being light colored, fine grained and free from iron. It has never been fully tested and resembles potter's clay.

Iron Ores.

The iron ores are in the lower coal measure. The ore strata are mostly small and are of the guinea fowl or a block type. They have been worked from the eastern part of the county to the Scioto river. But little is mined now as they run too low in iron. The lime ore in the eastern part has been worked up till recently at Ohio Furnace. This ore went to Hanging Rock. It is a better ore and more readily converted into iron than the other types found here, as it contains lime which causes it to flux easily. During and for several years after the Civil War, there were many small charcoal furnaces in the county, but after the Lake Superior and Missouri fields were opened, these furnaces shut down. It cost too much to make the iron as wood became scarce and the ores ran only about half as much iron as the Superior and Missouri ores.

Oil and Gas.

The Ohio Black Shale which underlies this county furnishes a large part of the oil and gas obtained in Ohio. The shale is rich in carboniferous matter, approximately 13 per cent. The deposit here is about 500 feet thick. The conditions for gas or oil fields are a carboniferous shale capped by a dome or cup shaped layer of some solid material as a heavy clay or limestone which is impervious to oil or gas. The oil and gas are found in a stratum of sand, or coarse grained lime beneath this solid impervious layer. Then as the oil and gas are distilled by the internal heat from the shale it collects beneath these dome shaped layers as it tends to rise on account of its low density. After thousands of years, these cavities become filled and when pierced by an opening furnish the flow of gas and oil. In this county we have the shale, but in the western part it outcrops. This exposure allows the oil and gas to escape as fast as generated. This shale outcrops on Stony Run, Turkey Creek and the Scioto. So all the oil and gas deposits derived from this shale in this county must be very small and local. The flow may last for a long time or continually, but it will be very small. A large flow may be obtained for a short time from some local deposit. The wells put down to this shale give a small flow of gas and oil. The wells at Munn's Run, Sciotoville, Wheelersburg and near Lucasville show gas and oil. If any large deposits are struck here, it will be far down in the Silurian rock.

Places for Collectors and Observations.

Fossil ocean shells are on the George Arnold farm one and one half miles west of Rush town. They are found in an old quarry northeast of his house. This is one of the best places in the county for research as the fossils are readily obtained and moderately well preserved. Near Sciotoville on the rock bar in the Ohio, above the mouth of the Little Scioto is a good location. The fossil ocean shells occur in concretionary deposits and are well preserved, making good specimens for study. They consist chiefly of brachiopods (abundant), lamelli-branths, crinoid stems, gasteropods, cephalopods, corals (common) and trilobites (rare).

For plants, Reitz's quarry is a good place especially for fucoids. These rocks are also ripple marked. The coal measure plants are found in the clay and in the shale above the clay. Nearly any clay deposit shows them. They also occur in the conglomerate which lies from 5 to 15 feet under the clay, but they are not very perfect, being derived from drifted plants. In a shaly sand above the clay in some localities occur conostichus and asterophycus and also calamites. These plants may be found on the Munn Hill, one mile north of Sciotoville. These fossil plants are abundant in many localities in the United States. At Patton's Run, three miles east of Wheelersburg, on the Ironton pike, is an old shore deposit. It is the beach of the old Carboniferous sea. Limestone fossils are not abundant in this county. A few species may be obtained from a chert deposit one mile south of Harrison Furnace and also on Clinton Ridge near Clinton Furnace.

Ohio Black Shale.

The Ohio Black Shale is the lowest strata exposed in the county. It outcrops in the western part at Turkey Creek, Stony Run and along the Scioto. It is a black fine grained shale high in carbon. Some being nearly rich enough to burn. It underlies the whole county. This is one of the great oil and gas producing shales. It was deposited by a great sargasso sea during the later part of the Devonian age, but it may be said to mark the beginning of the great coal deposit which followed in the next age. In Kentucky during the early settlement of the country, kerosene was distilled from this shale, but now the products distilled by nature are obtained by boring and pumping the oil from the rock. It is then refined and utilized. The fossils are mostly marine, being shells and fish. Some fossil plants can be detected. The carbon was derived from floating plants from the shore and small marine plants.

Geological Observations in Scioto County, Ohio.

By Thomas W. Kinney, Esq.

The reader of this article is supposed to have before him Volume 2 of the Geological Surveys of Ohio, open to pages 80 and 81, which is an excellent illustration of the Geological formation of the State in the Carboniferous district.

There is a plain line of demarcation of the geological formations of Scioto County, at the Scioto river. The fire clay is the first direct evidence of the carboniferous system. It occupies the place and is closely lined to coal vein No. 1, which is Jackson shaft. All measures in this district dip to the southeast, fifty to sixty feet to the mile. This dip gives us in the southeast, part of the county coal veins as high as No. 6. They are numbered from bottom to top. The coal more particularly worked in Scioto County is No. 4, known as limestone. The next above that is No. 5. These coals are found in or near Bloom and Pioneer Furnaces and southeast from Webster. The deposit of lime lying between Nos. 4 and 5 veins of coal measures is known as Putnam Hill, and is the lime being worked by Moses Morgan, at Eifort Switch. A section showing these coals will be found on Page 80 and 81 of the Geological Surveys of Ohio, Volume 2. This section shows thirteen coals. The Pittsburg vein is coal No. 8, on that diagram, which crosses into Ohio in many points. This county is in the lower fertile coal measures and is shown in the diagram right below the lower barren coal measures.

The best of the fire clays of Scioto County are found in a position underlying coal No. 1 in the diagram. We have a very good fire clay underlying coal No. 5. This clay is worked at Oak Hill, Jackson County, Ohio. The fire clays in Scioto County are along the outcrop of coal No. 1. Where the fire clays are found of commercial value, there is barely evidence of the coal. This coal was all formed from plant or vegetable life, converted into coal as we find it. The fire clay was the dirt or earth in which the vegetables, which formed the coal, grew. It is noticeable that where there are large bodies of coal, the fire clays are found to be of a soft instead of a flinty nature. In the eastern part of the County, in the coal measures there are valuable ones, as at Scioto, Harrison and Bloom Furnaces.

No. 3 coal seam in Scioto County, in many places is four feet. No. 4 is three and three and one-half feet. When the coal seam is under eighteen inches in depth it is impracticable to work it for commercial purposes. This applies to bituminous coals. Cannel coal can be worked down to eighteen inches. It bears transportation better and is used abroad. The fire clay seams in Scioto County are three to ten feet. Only two of them are of any practical value, No. 1 and No. 5. The best specimens of No. 1 are in the water sheds of Little Scioto. The best specimens of No. 5 are in the neighborhood of Bloom Furnace. The seams in Kentucky are one and the same as those in Scioto County.

In regard to the Waverly sandstone lying west of the Scioto River, the greatest developments of it for commercial purposes are along the line of the Cincinnati, Portsmouth & Virginia Railroad. The thickness of the stratification is the greatest of any place shown in Ohio, and a greater number of workable seams or layers appears. At Otway, some of the seams are six feet thick.

CHAPTER II.

Organization of the County The Courts from 1803 to 1810 Journals of the County Commissioners - Court Houses and Jails County Officers.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTY.

On the 9th day of August, 1803, at the house of John Collins, at the town of Alexandria, was the time appointed by law for the first meeting of the Court of Common Pleas of Scioto County, Ohio. The Hon. Wylliss Silliman was Presiding Judge, and Joseph Lucas, John Collins and Thomas William Swinney took their seats as Associate Judges. A grand jury was impaneled. William Masters was indicted for assault and battery on Thomas Davis, in Nile Township on the information of John Asa. Stephen Carey was foreman of the jury. John Masters was indicted by the Smalls for selling whisky. Process was issued against these persons. Thomas Scott was appointed Prosecuting Attorney on behalf of the state for that term. The Court received the report of the Commissioners, David Selby and John Chenoweth appointed to fix the seat of Justice in the County, and fixed the proportion of jurors as follows:

Union Township, 20 grand jurors; 31 petit jurors.

Nile Township, 8 grand jurors; 14 petit jurors.

Seal Township, 6 grand jurors; 10 petit jurors.

Upper Township, 10 grand jurors; 17 petit jurors.

On the 10th of August, 1803, there was a special meeting of the Common Pleas Court. Asa Murphy was bound an apprentice to Elija Glover to learn the art of hating, so spelled, for three years from the 17th day of April next.

DECEMBER TERM, 1803. Wylliss Silliman was Presiding Judge and Joseph Lucas, John Collins and Thomas William Swinney were Associate Judges. On the 13th of December 1803, Judge Swinney was given a license to solemnize marriages. Robert Lucas was appointed Surveyor of the County. William Jackson was also authorized to solemnize marriages. William Russell was appointed Clerk of the Court. Joshua Parrish and Philip Moore were sureties on his bond.

JULY 31, 1804. John S. Wills was appointed Prosecuting Attorney of the County, and allowed $15.00 for the term.

AUGUST 17, 1804. The Associate Judges met to appoint a clerk pro tem, in place of William Russell, who resigned. They appointed Samuel G. Jones, Clerk pro tem.

NOVEMBER TERM, 1804. Levin Belt was Presiding Judge. Joseph Lucas, John Collins and Samuel Reed were Associate Judges.

Stephen Carey, was foreman of the grand jury. James Norris was indicted for assault and battery on Elijah Glover, on Sept. 20, 1804, on information of Stephen Carey. John S. Wills was allowed $10.00 as Prosecuting Attorney at the November term, 1804. At this term Solomon McCall presented a petition for specific performance of a contract with one Middleton Harmon, and the Court ordered the administrator of Middleton Harmon to make conveyance in accordance with the petition.

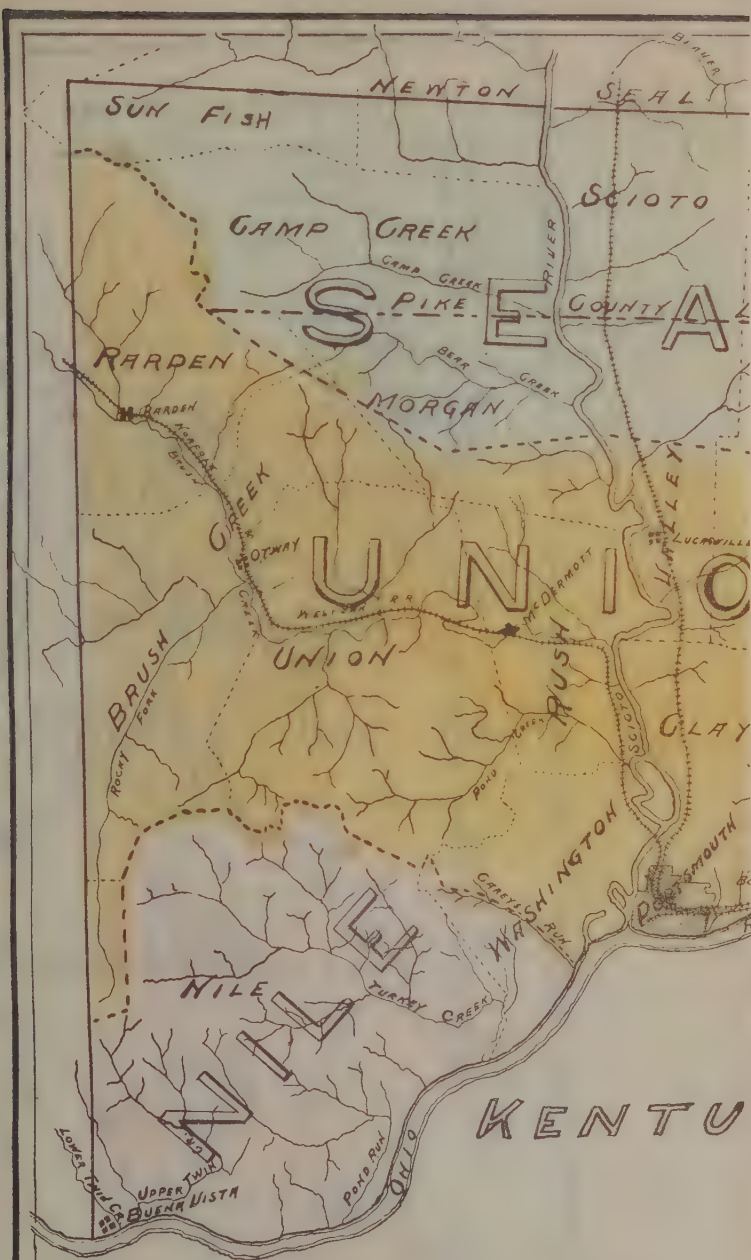

APRIL 6, 1805. Robert F. Slaughter was Presiding Judge. Joseph Lucas and John Collins were Associate Judges. Henry Brush was Prosecuting Attorney for that term, and was allowed $12.00 for his services. On the second day of this term, the Court appointed Alexander Curran as Clerk in place of Samuel Jones, resigned.

JUNE TERM, 1805. Robert F. Slaughter was Presiding Judge. Joseph Lucas, John Collins and Samuel Reed were Associate Judges. Jessup N. Couch was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the County of Scioto for this term. William Creighton and Henry Brush were attorneys, practicing in the County, though it does not appear that they lived there. In June 1805, Michael Baldwin was practicing law in Scioto County.

On the 10th of May, 1803, at the town of Alexandria, at the house of John Collins, there was a meeting of Associate Judges composed of Joseph Lucas, John Collins and Thomas William Swimney. They took their seats and appointed William Russel Clerk pro tem. Then they proceeded to lay off the County into townships, to-wit: Beginning on the Ohio at the County line; thence up the same to the mouth of Carey's Run; thence with the same to the dividing ridge; thence with the said ridge to the County line; thence with the same to the beginning, which boundaries shall compose Nile Township, and elections for the same shall be held at the house of John Thompson.

The next Township was Union. It began at the mouth of Carey's Run on the Ohio; thence up the same to the mouth of Little Scioto; thence up the same to include old Mr. Monroe's; thence westwardly to the twelve mile tree on the Big Scioto; thence westwardly until it strikes the dividing ridge between the waters of Brush and Bear Creeks with the same including all the waters of Brush Creek to the County line; thence with the same to the dividing ridge between the waters of the Ohio and Brush Creek; thence with the same to the head of Carey's Run, down the same to the beginning, which boundaries composed Union Township and elections for the same shall be held at the house of William Lucas, Jr.

Then came Upper Township described as follows: Beginning at the mouth of Little Scioto; thence up the Ohio to the County line; thence with said line to the Ross County line; thence with said line to opposite the main branch of Little Scioto; down the same to the beginning, which boundaries shall compose Upper Township, and the elections shall be held at the house of Peter Reeshaws.

Then came Seal Township, described as follows: beginning on the Ross County line opposite the head of the main branch of the Little Scioto, with said line to the west corner of Scioto County; thence south to the dividing ridge and Brush and Camp Creeks; thence with the same to include the waters of Camp Creek and Bear Creek to the twelve mile tree on the Scioto; thence eastwardly to the main fork of Little Scioto, half a mile south of old William Monroe's; thence up the same to the beginning, which boundaries compose Seal Township. Elections for the same shall be held at the house of old Mr. Downing. The number of magistrates for Nile Township was two; Union, three; Upper, two; Seal, two. James Edison was appointed County Treasurer. William Russell was appointed Recorder of Scioto County.

There was a Court held on August 9, 1803. Robert Bennett was granted a tavern license for $6.00. John Collins obtained a license to keep tavern in the town of Alexandria for one year at $8.00. William Russell qualified as Recorder of the County. Thomas Waller was appointed Treasurer to succeed James Edison, who was appointed but refused to serve. Philip Moore was appointed Inspector of the County.

On the 18th of December 1803, at the December term, Moses Monroe took a tavern license for the County of Scioto, for one year at $4.00. Two dollars was given for a full grown wolf or panther and one dollar for one under six months. John Thompson was given a tavern license in the town of Portsmouth, for one year at $4.00. Philip Moore took the oath of office as inspector with William Russell and David Gharky as sureties, and ordered that the Inspector furnish the branding iron with the letters, "S. C. S."

At the July term, John Scott obtained a license to keep tavern in the town of Alexandria, for one year at the rate of $9.00. On the 4th of July, 1804, Elijah Glover obtained a license to keep tavern in the town of Alexandria, for one year at the rate of $9.00. William Lawson was allowed $8.75 for his services as Commissioner to July 4, 1804. Samuel Lucas was allowed $10.50 for his services as Commissioner. James Edison was allowed $8.75 for his services as Commissioner to July 4, 1804.

At the November term, 1804, at the General Quarter Sessions, held at Portsmouth, Ohio, John Collins was granted a license to keep tavern in the town of Alexandria, for one year, at the rate of $10.00. This was the only business transacted at this meeting.

December, 1804. At a special meeting of the Associate Judges, John Collins and Joseph Lucas, it was ordered that $1.00 be given for a full grown wolf or panther scalp and 50 cents for one under six months. James Edison was allowed $8.75 for his services as Commissioner from April 4, 1804 to December 1804. Samuel Lucas was allowed $10.50 for the same period. William Russell was granted a license to keep tavern in the town of Alexandria, for one year at $9.00. William Lucas obtained a license to keep tavern in his dwelling for one year for $5.00. Uriah Barber obtained a license to keep a tavern in the town of Portsmouth for one year for $5.00.

At the April term, 1805, William Baker was granted a license to keep tavern for one year for $5.00. William Lawson was allowed $7.00 for services as Commissioner from the 4th of July 1804 to July 1805.

On October 30, 1805, the number of Justices of Union Township was increased by two.

On the 3rd day of April, 1805, Levin Belt was Presiding Judge, John Collins, Samuel Reed and William Kendall, his associates. Samuel Gunn was foreman of the grand jury. Henry Brush was practicing law in Portsmouth at that time and John G. Gervais had a suit.

On the 4th day of April, 1805, Levin Belt was Presiding Judge and John Collins, Samuel Reed and William Kendall were Associate Judges. Samuel L. Crawford seems to have been Prosecuting Attorney at that time.

On the 17th of June, 1809, there was a called meeting of the Court. James Thompson and Christian Bacus were charged with assuming authority of trustees of Green Township. John Collins, Samuel Reed and William Kendall were the Judges. The prisoners were led to the bar in the custody of the sheriff, and it being inquired of them whether they were guilty, whereupon divers witnesses were sworn and examined and the prisoners heard in the own defence. On consideration whereof and of the circumstances relating to the crime, it was considered by the court that the said James Thompson and Christian Bacus enter into recognizance in the sum of $30.00 each, with securities in the same amount, or, on failure that the said James Thompson and Christian Bacus be remanded to the jail of said County. They gave bail to appear at the next term.

On the 28th of June, 1809, John Collins, Samuel Reed and William Kendall were the Associate Judges.

On the 4th of September, 1809, Levin Belt was the Presiding Judge and John Collins, Samuel Reed and William Kendall were the Associate Judges. Samuel Lucas was foreman of the jury. At this term Emanuel Traxler was indicted for assault and battery on James Thompson. He was fined $5.00 and costs.

On the 5th of September 1809, Cynthia Belli, widow of John Belli, of Scioto County, Ohio, was granted administration on her husband's estate. William Kendall and Thomas Waller were sureties on her bond of $5,000.00. Cynthia Belli, administratrix of John Belli, filed her petition to carry out a real estate contract and the petition was granted.

On the 4th of December, 1809, the Court was held with Levin Belt, Presiding Judge, and John Collins and Samuel Reed as Associates. William Lawson was foreman of the grand jury. Jessup N. Couch was appointed Prosecuting Attorney, in place of Samuel F. Crawford, resigned, for that term. Elijah Glover was indicted for assault and battery and pleaded not guilty. He was tried by a jury on which Aaron Kinney, Samuel Van Hook, John Wright, Samuel Gunn, Benjamin Feurt, Henry Rickart, Henry Hughes, Uriah Barber, George Sallady, John Brouse, John Logan and Davis Murphy were jurymen. They found him guilty. The jury was polled and counsel for the defendant moved in arrest of judgment because of errors and defects in the indictment. The Court found the motion good and arrested the verdict and discharged the defendant. John Brown sued Elijah Glover in slander and by agreement of the parties, the defendant was given leave to give any evidence that would be in justification. It seems that Elijah Glover also had a slander suit against John Brown.

On Monday, April 16, 1810, John Thompson was the Presiding Judge with William Russell and Charles F. Mastin as Associates. Alexander Curran appeared and tendered his resignation as Clerk and Havillah Gunn was appointed Clerk pro tem. James Edison was foreman of the grand jury. Jessup N. Couch was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the term.

On the 25th day of May, 1810, there was a Court held with John Collins, William Russell and Charles Mastin present. The meeting was held for the special purpose of appointing a Clerk pro tem in place of Havillah Gunn, resigned. James Munn, the Coroner, also resigned. John R. Turner was appointed Clerk pro tem and took the oaths prescribed by law. He held this office until 1855. Alexander Curran handed in his resignation as Recorder of the County. It was accepted and John R. Turner was appointed Recorder in his place. Whereupon the Court dissolved, signed, "John Collins."

The Journals of the Board of County Commissioners of Scioto County.—Extracts from.

We should find them from May 10, 1803, but none are to be found in the Court House earlier than June 8, 1812. What has become of the Journal between May 3, 1802 and June 8, 1812, no one about the Court House could tell, and it was impossible to interest the Board of Commissioners in its recovery.

The lost Journal contains the organization of all the townships created in the first nine years of the existence of the County, and their boundaries, but that information is forever lost, and the facts which would appear in the lost Journal can only be obtained collaterally if at all.

It appears that on June 8, 1812, George Washington Clingman and Jacob Noel were two of the Commissioners, and as such had a session.

Clingman was referred to in all records as Washington Clingman. The Clingman family was a large one, and among the first settlers. This particular Clingman took up all the land between Cole's Hill, two miles from the Court House in Portsmouth and the foot of Houston's Hill and between the Scioto River and Martin Funk's tract. Houston's Hill was first called Clingman's Hill and should have retained the name.

This Jacob Noel, who is recorded in the first journal, was Colonel Jacob Noel. He was a son of Phillip Noel, who came from Virginia with a numerour progeny, and with them settled the Scioto Valley for five miles north of Portsmouth.

Militia Colonels were elected by their commands, and so this particular Noel must have been well thought of by his neighbors. He was a commissioner of the County for fourteen years, the longest period any commissioner of Scioto County ever held office, but he was born in Virginia, and that is all that is necessary to state in explanation of his long service in this office.

On August 24, 1812, the Commissioners met and appointed Collectors of taxes for the several Townships.

The following appointments were made:

Seal, Thomas Sappington; Upper, William Carpenter; Union, William James, Madison, Thomas Bennett; Nile, John Russell; Wayne, Samuel Burt; Franklin, Tapley White.

When we reflect that Picketon is now in the center of Seal Township and the city of Ironton is Upper, we can understand how much larger Scioto County was territorially in 1812, than it is now.

Franklin Township has disappeared from the map.

On August 12, 1812, Gen. William Kendall, who is in evidence everywhere in the early records of Scioto County, was allowed $1.75 per day for his services, and the Associate Judges were allowed $3.00 per day at that time, although soon after, their per diem was fixed at $2.00 per day, and so remained while they were in office.

On September 9, 1812, Doctor Thomas Waller is mentioned as a Commissioner. In his time no public business was transacted unless he was consulted and in it. He was not only consulted about the physical ills of the people, but advised about their business as well. He was worthy of every trust imposed upon him, and one of the best citizens any County could boast of.

Some of the acts of the Commissioners at this time consisted in allowing for wolf scalps, and they put the allowance of record on July 31, 1812 to Ignatius Burris and Anthony Worley, $1.50 for three scalps.

On September 9, 1812, John Russell is noted as a Commissioner.

There were two Russell families in Scioto County in the pioneer days. This particular John Russell belonged to that family which went to Illinois. There has been no representative of this particular Russell family in the County, for over 60 years.

William Russell, Congressman, the founder of the other Russell family, has numerous descendants now resident in Scioto County.

On October 8, 1812, the Commissioners took a slice off Jefferson Township and added it to Madison. This was a common practice in the early days, and it was done to gratify the fancy of any settler on the border of a township who imagined he would rather live in the adjoining Township, than the one he found himself in. Then if he wanted to be a Township officer, in the Township he resided in and could not be, he was attached to another township where he was better appreciated.

On June 13, 1813, the commissioners allowed Richard Douglas, Esq. $75.00 for being the Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County at August term 1812. This Richard Douglas was the grandfather of the Hon. Cliff Douglas, present Common Pleas Judge of Ross County and the Hon. Albert Douglas of the same County. Richard Douglas at that time practiced in Scioto County. It will be noticed that the services were rendered in August 1812, but were not allowed for till January 1813. This was the custom in the first days. Everybody was honest and everybody was easy in the collection of claims.

At the same time, Levin Belt, another Chillicothe lawyer, was allowed $25.00 for Prosecuting Attorney at December term, 1812. Belt was not the lawyer Douglas was. In the language of Dickens he was a "slow coach." He was born an Englishman, but learned the secret of obtaining official position of the native born Virginians and practiced it as well as they did. In the first twenty years of the history of Scioto County, Chillicothe furnished almost all its legal talent, and could do so at the present time, if called on. Levin Belt has a daughter buried in the oldest part of Greenlawn Cemetery. She was the first wife of Henry Buchanan, the Banker.

On June 8th, 1813, it appears that horses were assessed at 30 cents per head, cattle at 10 cents per head and other property at one-half of 1 per cent, ad valorem. There were halcyon days for the poor afflicted tax bearer.

The rate for taverns in Alexandria in 1813 was $9.00 and that of Portsmouth only $5.00. Think of the fact that in 1813, Alexandria was still a more important place than Portsmouth! There is not even a vestige of it in existence. The taverns on the Portsmouth and Chillicothe road, which were Phillip Noel's tavern at the Aaron Noel place, John Lucas tavern at Lucasville and Martin Funk's on the Micklethwait place, were taxed at $7.00, two dollars more than Portsmouth. This discloses the fact that the wagoners would not remain in Portsmouth over night, if they could help it and that the Country taverns had the most custom.

The wagoners were evidently afraid of Portsmouth malaria, though there was at that time plenty of good corn whiskey to neutralize its effects.

At this session ferry rates were fixed at $4.00 per year each, for the Scioto and the Ohio. At the Scioto river ferry the charges were to be 6¼ cents each for a single person, 12½ cents for a man and horse and 75 cents for a loaded wagon and team. Across the Ohio, one person paid 10 cents, horses and cattle 6¼ cents, loaded team $1.00. A four wheeled carriage or empty wagon was charged 75 cents, horse or head of cattle 10 cents, sheep or hog 3 cents. At the Little Scioto ferry, the rates were somewhat less.

The fact of Uriah Barber being coroner in 1812 is referred to.

He was coroner of the County most of that time, till his death in 1846.

In June, 1814, the rate for tavern license in Portsmouth was made $12.00 and Alexandria $6.00. Evidently the importance of Portsmouth has advanced. Taverns on the Gallipolis road were fixed at $9.00, and on the Chillicothe road at $8.00.

At the June session 1814, collectors of taxes for the several Townships were appointed. Franklin, Seal and Upper are still named, and Bloom first appears.

On December 6, 1814, N. K. Clough was allowed $33.33 as Prosecuting Attorney. This was his first appearance in the Commissioner's Journals, and the rate of allowance was $100.00 per year, which was the usual rate at that time in all the counties.

On June 4, 1816, William Kendall was allowed $54.23 for his service as Treasurer for the year past.

In that time he received and disbursed $1600.00. At the same time John R. Turner was allowed as clerk for the Commissioners for six months, November, 1815, to April 12, 1816, $12.50. Happy tax payers, happy people! But then John R. Turner lived out of and off of his garden at that time, and Gen. Kendall off his farm.

At the same session, Thomas Bennett was allowed $5.00 for listing Bloom Township. One of the present generation of Bennetts living there now, would be allowed about $80.00 for the like services.

On October 22, 1816, William Jones, Portsmouth's first school teacher, was allowed $8.00 for listing Union Township which then covered about ten times the territory of the present Union Township.

In 1817 Nathan Wheeler, Sheriff, was collector of the residents' land tax. The duplicate given him was $1012.00, and his commission was $60.72. He collected $892.50 and returned as delinquent $49.87. He was a prominent citizen in his time, but his last resting place is utterly unknown to the present generation, though he died in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1823. He was probably buried where the Burgess mill formerly stood, and his remains never removed in 1829, when that burial ground was vacated.

On January 31st, 1817, Gen. William Kendall was allowed $25.95 for money loaned the County, while John Young was building the Court House which stood on Market street.

On the same date Samuel Morrison was allowed $1.00 for a wolf scalp, prior to this the price had been 50 cents.

On March 9th, 1817, Reuben Chaffin was allowed for listing Green Township, $6.00.

On June 3rd, 1817, Gen. William Kendall was allowed $56.70 for one year's services as Treasurer, four percent. on $1417.50. At the same time Thomas Rardin was exempted from County tax for this year.

The June term of the Court of Common Pleas for 1817 was in session six days.

On December 27th, 1817, Nathan Wheeler, collector of residents' tax accounted for $1141.55. His commission was $68.46. The defalcations were $188.07 and he paid over $879.60½.

His bond as Sheriff given January 1st, 1817, was $4000.00.

December 17th, 1817, John Smith was coroner. He gave bond in $400.00.

On June 11th, 1819, Nathan Wheeler reported the County duplicate at $394.54, his commission $97.25. Amount collected $875.34, delinquent $119.20.

On June 17th, 1819, John Noel, a very important citizen of his time, was allowed $9.00 for listing in Wayne Township, which then extended two-thirds of the way to Lucasville and very near to Sciotoville.

October 5th, 1819, the commissioners sat for 9 days. They were then allowed $2.25 per day. In these times the commissioners met in March, December and June, three times each year, and scarcely ever at other times.

On January 9th, 1820, Nathan Wheeler, County Collector settled. He reported the duplicate $1085.52½, his commission $83.31 and he collected $962.58½.

Robert Reynolds was allowed for the care of the Court House for one year $50.00.

William Kendall was allowed $9.00 for surveying several lots of school land.

On May 4th, 1820, the allowance of the Commissioners from December 2nd to this date was entered, and it was as follows: David Jones, $13.50; Jacob Noel, $13.50; Samuel B. Burt, five days, $11.25.

"Happy people were they of those times, who had such light burdens, and when the public expense was so insignificant!"

On June 4th, 1821, Dr. Jacob Offner was appointed treasurer. His bond was only $4000.00.

On December 5th, 1821, the commissioners allowed Robert Reynolds $40.00 per year for taking care of the Court House. This was a reduction of $10.00 per year from the two preceding years.

At this time Samuel M. Tracy appears on the records as Prosecuting Attorney, which office he held continuously till January, 1850. He received his first allowance on June 21st of this year, at the rate of $100.00 per year. He began in May term 1821.

N. K. Clough received his last allowance December 28th, 1821.

On June 3rd, 1822, Simon DeLong began his long career as a public functionary. He was allowed $6.00 as lister for Wayne Township, and William Lamb was allowed $4.00 as lister for Green.

The allowance for wolf scalps was fixed at $1.00 for those under 6 months and $2.00 for those over that age.

Horses to be assessed at 25 cents on each $100 value, and cattle above three years at 10 cents. Houses in towns were to be assessed 50 cents on each $100.00 valuation.

On June 12th 1822, Jeremiah Patton was allowed $2.00 for one wolf scalp. John Noel, collector reported the duplicate as follows:

Land tax $1223.97; state tax, $910.92; road tax, $313.91; county levies, $1112.97.

On March 3rd 1823 Simon DeLong was allowed $30.00 for taking care of the Court House from Dec. 28th 1821 to March 4th 1823.

On March 5th 1823 the Commissioners had a fit of economy and ordered that hereafter only $20.00, payable quarterly, be allowed for cleaning the Court House for one year. Simon DeLong was given the job, and he was to be responsible for all damages occasioned by his neglect.

At the same session David Gharky was allowed $130.00 for his services as Auditor. These allowances to the Auditor were usually made at the March, June and December sessions of the Commissioners.

April 1st, 1823, John Noel as County Collector, reported the total County levies $1112.97, delinquent tax in Portsmouth $22.48, in the County $18.20, his compensation $107.22.

On June 2nd, 1823, Ph. Boldman, for listing Union Township, was allowed $6.30.

On August 4th 1823, the state and road tax was $1383.98, County levies $1399.97.

David Gharky ordered to procure a blank road record and have it made up.

David Gharky, Auditor, was allowed for 65½ days services as such, from June 7th to December 3rd, 1823, at $1.50 per day, $97.87½.

On Dec. 8th 1823, Charles Rand was allowed $1.75 for repairs to the jail and dungeon.

On February 28th, 1824, Paul Stewart was allowed $4.00 for making a coffin for Thomas Gibson, murdered in Brush Creek Township.

On March 3rd 1824 David Gharky, Auditor, was allowed from Dec. 4th 1823 to March 4th, 1829, for services as Auditor, 39 days, and $1.50 postage, $40.50.

William Carey and James Linn were paid $1.50 for transporting A. Compton, a horse thief, to Chillicothe.

Simon De Long seems to have been jailer at this time, as he was allowed at this session $22.75 for boarding this horse thief 89 days, and washing 50 cents. The board was 25 cents per day.

April 1st, 1824, Jesse Cockerill was allowed $2.00 for killing a wolf.

On May 29th, 1824, John Dawson was allowed $4.00 for killing four wolves.

On June 5th, 1824, John Noel, Sheriff, was allowed $5.00 for the horse thief, A. Compton, whose washing in 89 days had only been 50 cents.

He was also allowed $128.11, as County Collector, for collecting $1281.11.

Samuel Dole for one cord of wood for the Court House, was allowed $1.50.

David Gharky, Auditor was allowed $107.81½ for making up the road record ordered.

On June 10th 1824 John Peebles was appointed to keep the Standard Measures for the County.

Lawson Drury, late Associate Judge, was ordered to refund $3.75 improperly drawn by him for his services.

June 25th 1824 Simon De Long, for attending the Commissioners at their June session, was allowed $1.25. On the 16th of July 1823, he was allowed $6.00 for Court Constable at the July term 1824.

John Noel was allowed $1.62½ for washing out the Court House, and for 11 lbs. of candles 18½ cents.

August 10th, 1824, Samuel Atkinson and Samuel F. Vinton, for assisting the Prosecuting Attorney at July term 1824, were allowed $25.00.

The amount of state tax that year was $842.90 and road tax $349.76.

Here is one item for the printers to read. On September 7th 1824, John and James Carnahan were each allowed for advertising the county receipts and disbursements for 1823, $7.87.

John R. Turner, Clerk, for stationery at July term 1823, was allowed $1.00

On November 1st 1824, Uriah Barber was back in the Coroner's office.

On March 8th 1825, David Gharky, Auditor, was allowed from Dec. 6th 1824 to March 8th 1825, $118.04.

On April 23rd 1825, Old Peter Weaver, the colored man appears on the scene. A sketch of him and his wife appears under the Pioneers of Scioto County. His faculty was "Waiting on de Co't", and he was allowed for it at April term 1825, $3.00.

On May 23rd 1825, William Carey, as Sheriff, was allowed for six months services to May 6th 1825, $25.00.

On June 4th 1825, George Washington Clingman, Collector, reported:

Total County levies, $1374.61; delinquencies, $115.08; balance, $1264.52.

June 6th, 1825, John Squires, lister of Green Township, was allowed $6.00.

Thomas Patton, house appraiser, $1.50.

John Peebles, as house appraiser, was allowed $3.75.

William Kendall, for making a map of Scioto County, was allowed $17.50; 11 maps for each township, $33.00; plats of the towns of Portsmouth, Alexandria, Lucasville and Concord, each, $2.00—$8.00.

On June 7th, 1825, Morgan Township was established, and on July 4th, it first elected officers.

June 8th, 1825, Jacob Clingman, Treasurer, settled with the County Commissioners. The duplicate was $2824.84½, and his per centum was, $100.00. His bond was $4,000.00.

At this session in 1825, horses were taxed at 30 cents, cattle above three years at 10 cents; and other property at one-half of 1 per cent of value.

On June 9th, 1825, David Gharky, as Auditor, was allowed $64.86 for services from March to June session.

On June 9th, 1825, James W. Huston was employed to repair the Court House. The cupola and railings around it were repaired and painted white, the roof was painted Spanish brown. The door and frames were painted white, and the yellow lining were painted green. The bid was $78.87½ and $39.00 was advanced the contractor.

Ezra Osborn and Eben Corwine were sureties in the contract.

On August 1st, 1825, the tax duplicate was stated as follows:

State tax $70.00, road tax $63.27, total land tax, $1420.31; county levy, $1352.25.

A Samuel Delong was allowed for attending Court. He was employed about the Court House most of the time till about 1834 when it is said he died. At any rate, he disappeared from the public records about that time.

Peter Weaver was allowed $6.00 for attending the Supreme Court for six days. No one could wait on the Court like old Peter, and he had the job as long as he could attend to it, but the Commissioners had an extra helper in August, 1825, in Samuel G. Jones, who also attended the Court at that time.

October 15th, 1825, William Kendall finished assessing the County. He was engaged 57 days at $2.00 per day. His bill was $114.00 for himself and $2.00 paid a hand to assist him in comparing lists. 3 quires of paper at 75 cents and team 75 cents were used.

At the same time, David Gharky, Auditor, was allowed $84.10 for services from June to October, and $1.50 for paper and sundries.

James McBride, for killing a wolf, was allowed $2.00.

It seems that at this time Robin Hood was a guest of the Scioto County Jail, and had been from October 3rd to the 20th, for which Samuel G. Jones, who was jailer, was allowed $4.50 and $1.00 witness fee in the case of the State against Robert Hood.

On October 24th, 1825, Samuel G. Jones was allowed $1.87½ for keeping five criminals on bread and water for three days.

At the same session William Lodwick & Co. were allowed $4.50 for a room of writing paper furnished John Turner, Clerk, and $1.75 for 6 yards of linen at the jail.

On December 6th, 1825, James Lodwick took his seat as Commissioner. His associates were Daniel McKinney and Charles Crull.

Samuel M. Tracy was appointed Attorney for the Commissioners until further order. The further order never came until January 1850, and in all this period not one official act was performed by a County officer unless Samuel M. Tracy had advised it, and said it was legal. The County officers and the general public had the most complete confidence in the legal ability of Mr. Tracy. When he advised anything it was done, and if advised against anything that thing was dropped. Many of the wags of that day said a County officer would not turn around unless he had Samuel Tracy's permission before hand. There was more truth than romance in this remark.

On December 6th, 1825, there is a solemn entry in the journal that Simon Delong was appointed to take care of the Court House, to keep it clean, to attend the Commissioners at their regular and extra sessions, to furnish them with water, and to keep the doors and windows closed when Court was not in session. The appointment was for one year at $4.40 per quarter.

The generation of low priced janitors died with Delong. None of them have come down to this time.

Peter Noel furnished 9 chairs to the Commissioners for the court for $9.00.

Samuel G. Jones was jailer at this time. He had a gift for doing anything required, and was employed to put a lock on the dungeon door of the jail. William Lodwick was paid $6.75 for the lock.

On January 4th, 1826, Jeremiah Rice, for killing three grown wolves in 1816, was allowed $3.00.

Evidently the wolf killing industry needed stimulation, when the Commissioners had to hunt up a bill eleven years old, and pay it.

March 7th, 1826, David Gharky, as Auditor, was allowed from December 4th, 1825, to March 4th, 1826, $21.92 for his regular services, and $12.00 for extra services.

On May 22nd, 1826, Humphry. Wheaton was allowed, for killing seven wolves, $7.00.

On June 1st, 1826, George Washington Clingman, Collector, made settlement.

The whole duplicate was $1352.25; delinquent, $128.24; his compensation, $73.74.

On June 5th, 1826, the Commissioners, Auditor and Assessor met as a Board of Equalization and concluded the business in one day. This is to be read by the present County Board as a suggestion.

The part of Lawrence County attached to Scioto was placed in Bloom Township.

On June 7th, 1826, Clay Township was set off from Wayne.

The Auditor reported the expenditures for one year $1878.92.

The Treasurer reported the duplicate collected $1792.92. His commission $69.35.

Jacob Clingman was appointed County Treasurer and his bond fixed at $6000.00.

On June 8th, 1826, the Auditor, was ordered to contract for three tables, two for the Court and one for the Commissioners and to sell the old bar table.

John R. Turner was ordered to move the postoffice out of the Court House. Charles Crull, one of the Commissioners, dissented from this order.

On June 24th, 1826, John Cockerill, for killing three wolves, was allowed $3.00.

On the same day Gen. William S. Murphy, of Chillicothe, for defending Andrew Compton, was allowed by the Court $10.00. This was the first allowance for defending an indigent criminal made in Scioto County.

On June 27th, 1826, Thomas Harris, a colored man, for attending the Court 5 days, was allowed $2.50. Samuel Kellerson, for killing a wolf, was allowed $2.00.

On July 24th, 1826, Samuel G. Jones, for making 2 tables for the Court was allowed $6.75, and he credited the bill $1.00 for old bar table.

On August 6th, 1826, William Carey, collector, reported, state tax,, $1336.87.8; county tax, $2673.73.6; school tax, $333.98; total, $4344.61.5.

On October 11th, 1826, Moses Gregory was appointed Collector in place of William Carey, deceased. At this point Moses Gregory began that long period of office holding which only ended with his life. He gave bond with James Lodwick, John McDonald and Murtaugh Kehoe sureties. This was Col. John M. McDonald, author of McDonald's sketches, published in 1838, who at that time was a resident of Portsmouth.

On October 26th, 1826, Maria Lewis of Bloom Township, adjudged insane, was placed in the care of Isaac Hull to keep her for $50.00 per year, payable quarterly.

In October 1826, Peter Weaver was himself again. He was at the old job of "Waiting on de Co't", and received his stipend. Samuel G. Jones and Joseph B. Andrews were Court constables at the same time.

On November 15th, 1826, N. R. Clough, for defending state versus David Vaughn in 1824, was allowed $8.00. He waited a long time for his pay.

On Dec. 5th, 1826, David Gharky, for services as Auditor, June to December, was allowed $199.42¾.

On January 12th, 1827, Moses Gregory settled as Collector.

He accounted for $4344.61, and his fees were $177.12. At that time the Kentucky idea prevailed and the Sheriff was Collector of Taxes.

March 7th, 1827, the Commissioners ordered a petition to be circulated to raise funds to build a bridge at the mouth of the Little Scioto. Evidently they felt the county would not undertake it.

Col. John McDonald was appointed Assessor for 1827. He gave bond in $2000, with Samuel Gunn and Murtaugh Kehoe as sureties.

The Auditors bond at that time was $2000. From December 1826 to March 1827, David Gharky, Auditor, was allowed $40.60½ for his services.

On April 20th, 1827, the Commissioners were at the mouth of the Little Scioto to take subscriptions for the bridge. Col. John McDonald was there on the part of the County to receive them.

On May 29th, 1827, Abraham McDowell, for killing nine wolves, was allowed $9.00. He killed a whole litter.

William Carey, the Sheriff of the County, died in office, October 4th, 1826, and Uriah Barber, Coroner, acted as Sheriff from October 16th to November 15th, 1826.

On May 29th, 1827, Zachariah Kennedy, for killing eight wolves, was allowed $8.00. He found a litter.

June 30th, 1827, David Gharney, Auditor, allowed from March 3rd to June 3rd, 1827, $32.16½.

On June 30th, 1827, the Auditor reported the amount of expenditures for the preceding year $1706.57½.

On the same day Joseph Woodring was relieved from payment of any taxes. The Treasurer settled from June 26th and reported receipts, $2861.18; compensation, $114.44.

Here is an item for the publishers of the newspapers of the present time to read and then fall on their faces and thank God they did not live then.

On July 2nd, 1827, Julius A. Bingham, publisher of the Western Times, was allowed $6.00 for publishing the receipts and disbursements of the county.

On June 30th, 1827, Jacob Clingman, County Treasurer, reported state tax $286.39; county school tax $2887.81; total $3704.40; delinquencies $20.14½.

On August 15th, 1827, Samuel C. Jones made a writing desk for the Commissioners' office, and was allowed $8.00 for it.

Here is another item to make the editors of the county printing be thankful they did not live then.

Julius A. Bingham was allowed, for publishing the delinquent lands in the Western Times, 37 squares, $55.80.

On December 4th, 1827, Moses Gregory, Sheriff, was allowed his yearly salary, $30.54.

On December 5th, 1827, James Linn purchased two brass candlesticks for the Court, and one pair of snuffers for $21.81.

On December 17th, 1827, Jacob Clingman reported: state tax, $1891.94; county tax, $2177.25; school tax, $377.05; total, $4406.25.

On March 3rd, 1828, the Commissioners ordered a necessary built on the all lot for the convenience of the public, six feet square, 7 feet high, one sea board with three seats, weather boarded and covered with joint shingles with one door being and fastened. On the same day, the one pair of andirons ordered were paid for, $1.25 to William Lodwick, and the two pair to James Lodwick at $3.00.

On March 11th, 1828, Moses Gregory was paid for wood at the Court House, $1.62½.

On March 27th, 1828, the commissioners met at the jail to consider the situation of Allen Moore, adjudged as an insane person. The Board investigated his state of mind and were unanimous that a physician would be of no service, and that from the letter of the law he did not come under their notice. They charged up $2.00 each and went about their business.

On April 29th, 1828, Isaac White, for killing a full grown wolf was allowed $2.00.

On May 11th, 1829, Humphrey Wheaton was allowed $9.00 for nine wolf scalps.

On June 2nd, 1828, the Commissioners ordered that when the public well was repaired, a good and sufficient pump be placed in it, the pump stock well banded, and the spout banded and strapped with iron, the County would pay $10.00 towards the repairs.

On June 4th, 1828, John Cockerill was paid $2.00 for killing two young wolves.

On June 19th, 1829, Moses Gregory, Sheriff, was allowed $30.00 to cover cost in cases where the state failed. This allowance had been customary for several years.

On July 11th, 1828, James Waddle for the necessary, was allowed $10.00.

On August 2nd, 1828, the duplicate was turned over to Havillah Gunn, Treasurer. It was $4701.45.

On September 13, 1828, Simon De Long, for fetching water and making fires at the Court House for six days, was allowed $3.00. William Lucas, John H. Thompson and Hugh Cook were Court Constables at the September term of Court.

January 10th, 1829, in the duplicates of $4701.45 turned over to him, Havillah Gunn collected $4087.33.

On March 2nd 1829, David Gharky, qualified as Auditor for two years. His bond was $2000, with James Lodwick and Col. John McDonald as sureties.

On May 9th, 1829, Samuel Wall was allowed $9.00 for nine wolf scalps.

On May 16th, 1829, Humphrey Wheaton was allowed for four scalps.

On June 2nd, 1829, Havillah Gunn, Treasurer, settled and accounted for $3782.03.

On June 4th, 1829, Charles O. Tracy was appointed agent of the Commissioners to obtain grounds for the Public Building. This was the first move towards the new Court House which did not materialize till 1837, eight years later.

July 2nd, 1829, Julius A. Bingham was allowed $14.00 for publishing the receipts and expenditures of the Court.

On July 31st, 1829, Havillah Gunn, Treasurer, settled. The duplicate was $5449.61.

On June 16th, 1830, the Common Council of Portsmouth was granted a room in the Court House on condition they did not disturb the Court.

On February 7th, 1830, the Public well was fixed, and Bliss & Cutter paid $10.00.

On March 6th, 1830, David Gharky resigned as Auditor and Charles O. Tracy was appointed in his place.

On March 18th, 1830, Thomas Moore, for attending the Court at March term, with fire and water, was allowed $3.00.

Simon DeLong, Court Constable for six days, was allowed $4.50.

On June 8th, 1830, the Lawyers and Doctors were assessed for the first time, though the law passed in 1828. There were only five lawyers assessed, N. K. Clough, Samuel M. Tracy, Charles Tracy, Edward Hamilton, and William V. Peck. Clough and Samuel Tracy were assessed at $500.00 each and the tax on each was $4.00. The others were assessed at $300.00 each and paid $2.40 each tax. This tax was a good one, as a Registry tax, although it realized only $15.20 that year. It continued each year until 1851 when the last assessment was made. The tax was never complained of. If too high it was worth the tax as an advertisement. If too low, the lawyer got off easily.

The same was true of the Doctors. There were six taxed in the County in 1830. Three of them were in Portsmouth, N. W. Andrews, G. S. B. Hempstead and Allen Farquhar. Their incomes ranged from $300 to $600. The tax on them was $21.33.

On August 16th, 1830, Julius A. Bingham, for publishing the delinquent list, was allowed $18.00.

From July 21st to December 6th, 1830, Charles Cruik served as Commissioner to fill a vacancy caused by the removal of Samuel B. Burt.

On December 6th, 1830, Edward Cranston took his place. He was a man of the strongest will of any one who ever held the office. He ruled the Board and all in contact with him and did it well.

On December 25th, 1830, the Commissioners held a session. This fact ought to be explained, and the only explanation is that on that day they employed Simon De Long to keep Mahala Murphy, an insane person, at $5.00 per week, (an enormous sum then) until the Auditor could find some one to do it cheaper. However, she did not trouble the public long, for on December 30th, following, old Peter Weaver was paid $1.00 by the County for digging her grave.

On January 4th, 1831, Peter Noel, the Second, and Nathan Hall were each paid $2.00 for killing a grown wolf.

On March 7th, 1831, Moses Gregory became Auditor and held the office for 10 years. He exercised more influence in County affairs than any Auditor before or since, and demonstrated the fact that that office is the most important in the County.

Charles O. Tracy in retiring from the office was allowed $44.84 for his services, and an extra compensation of $2.00 per day for 17 days, $34.00, because the statute did not fix a fair compensation.

On March 9th, 1831, a bridge was ordered built over the Little Scioto at its mouth and Seymore Pixley directed to circulate a petition therefor.

The bridging of this stream at this point caused the Board more trouble, required more attention than any public business the Commissioners ever had on hand.

COURT HOUSES.The First Court House was built in 1816 in Portsmouth by John Young. The Commissioners' Journal of June 4, 1815 shows he was allowed $300.00 for work done in the inside of the Court House. On January 31, 1817, he was allowed $300.00 on building and $400 on painter's work. General Kendall was allowed $25.95 he had loaned toward the erection of the Court House. On June 3, 1817 the new Court House was received from John Young. This is all we find in the Commissioners' record as to its cost. It had a foundation of stone and its walls were brick. It was forty feet square. The foundation came two feet above the ground. It was two stories high and had a tin roof. It had a cupola 12 feet high with a figure of the Angel Gabriel cut in wood on the spire. The entrance was on the south side only. It had four windows below in front and five above. On the east and west, it had four windows below and four above on each side. It had two fire places on the north on each side of the judge's desk. This was three feet above the floor. The Clerk's desks were in front of the Judges', 18 inches above the floor. It had a prisoner's box 3 feet above the floor. It had two seats, one for the guard and one for the prisoner. The bar was eighteen feet square. On the east and west were three tiers of seats. The first was fifteen inches above the floor and each tier was 15 inches above the other. The fronts of the seats had panel work. There were rough seats between the door and bar enclosure. The prisoner's box was at the south side of the bar. The stairway was in the southwest corner. The lower room was nine feet high and the upper ten feet. The floor of the court room was paved with brick eight inches square. On the second floor, the Clerk's office was in the northwest corner and the Sheriff's office was south of it. The east part had petit and grand jury rooms. This building stood until 1837, when it was torn down. Before its erection, the courts were held in Gharky's cabinet shop near the Point. Afterwards in the Hamilton Hotel, on the site where B. Augustine now resides, and then in the McDowell building, corner of Market and Front Streets. It is said this first Court House cost, all told, $3,205. The bids for it were received as early as June 7, 1814, but it was not built until 1816. In 1823 John R. Turner had charge of the Court House. Sunday or day schools were forbidden to be held in it. Religious societies were allowed to use it by leaving it as clean as they found it. This Court House was sold October 15, 1836 for $325.00 on 90 days time, the buyer to furnish free a place to hold court, November, 1836, and the first Court in 1837. In 1821 the corporation election was held in the Court House, as we presume it was before and after. On December 3, 1827, an inventory of furniture in the first Court House was taken and placed in charge of Simon Delong. Here are the items: 1 writing desk, 2 square tables, 1 set windsor chairs, 1 set split bottom chairs, 5 split bottomed chairs painted red, 4 brass candle sticks, 1 pair snuffers, 1 tin bucket, 1 glass tumbler. DeLong was ordered to procure two sets of small and irons and one large and take charge of them for the use of the Court House and no where else.

The Commissioners heated this Court House with wood till December 6, 1831, when they changed to coal but spelled it "cole." They bought fifty cents worth of Ruluff Whitney. Simon DeLong took care of it in 1831 for $16 per year payable quarterly.

The Second Court House.

In 1829, a move was made for a new Court House. Charles O. Tracy was appointed by the Commissioners to receive propositions for a location. He published an invitation for offers in the Western Times.

On June 26, 1833, Henry Brush a lawyer of Chillicothe, Ohio, donated to the County, in lot 380 on which the Court House was afterward built.

On January 21, 1835, the Commissioners resolved to apply to the Legislature to borrow money to build a new Court House.

On June 10, 1835, C. A. M. Damarin was authorized to borrow $10,000 to complete the Court House.

On June 23, 1835, C. A. M. Damarin reported he had borrowed of the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company, $10,000 at 7 per cent, to be repaid in 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 years, interest to be paid semi-annually. This was under the Act of March 7, 1835 to authorize the Commissioners to borrow money to build a Court House.

On September 10, 1835, plans of the Court House were adopted and bids ordered. The building was to be finished July 4, 1837.

On September 17, 1835 bids were opened and General William Kendall's bid of $12,650 was the lowest. The highest was $14,300.

On September 18, 1835, the Court House was ordered built on lot 380, 16 feet from the south line and 16 feet from the west line. S. M. Tracy drew the contract. William Kendall was ordered to dig a well in lot 369.

On October 16, 1835, General Kendall's bond as contractor was approved and the contract signed. The plans were the same as the Court House at Ravenna, Ohio. $45.00 were paid for the plans and specifications.

On January 10, 1837, Gen. Kendall was allowed $1,000 and on March 7, 1837, he was given $1,000. On May 22, 1837, the County borrowed $7,119 out of the Surplus Fund to build the Court House, at 6 per cent and $3,000 was loaned General Kendall on his giving a note signed by J. and W. G. Whitney, Stephen Kendall, Wilson Gates and Samuel Dole.

On August 21, 1837, the County borrowed $1,860.10 more of the Surplus Fund for the Court House and $700 was paid General Kendall on the work.

On September 11, 1837 General Kendall notified the Commissioners that the Court House would be ready September 18. They ordered him to grade and macadamize about the Court House.

On October 14, 1837 the Court House was received of General Kendall, except the roof which was to be subject to tests of rains.

November 13, 1837, the Commissioners paid Joshua Barbee for chairs and settees for the Court House $121. On same date the Commissioners sent a petition to the Court of Common Pleas to make regulations for the Bar in the use of the Court House.

On December 6, 1837, Moses Gregory was allowed $150 for Superintending the Court House and Oliver Lindsey, Sheriff, ordered to take care of it at $25.00 per year and allow no elections or public meetings in it.

March 6, 1838, Eben Dole was paid $22.75 for paving the Court House yard.

June 6, 1838 James Grimes was allowed $200 for furnishing stoves and grates to the Court House.

June 8, 1838, the spire, vane and ball was put on the Court House.

November 18, 1837 the new Court House was occupied. The Tribune said that it was the most complete and elegant in the broad west. It faced West on Court street 68 feet and south on 6th street 45 feet. It had on the south a pediment front supported by six Ionic columns of polished stone, the frieze and cornice being of the same material. The cupola was an octagon, pointed, in the same color with base pedestal. The first story had four rooms for the principal County officers, a large entrance hall and two flights of stairs, one of which was to the main entrance and front of the last room and the other to a private passage back of the Court room from which the Judges ascended to their seats by a few steps. The clerk's desk was one step above the bar floor and the Judges' seat was four steps.

The Grand Jury in their report expressed their satisfaction with the work. This same Court House is standing to-day.

On May 15, 1882, an addition was ordered. On June 14, 1882, the bid for the addition $4,407.25 was accepted and August 14, 1882, $4,000 was borrowed to pay for it. This addition is the whole part north of the present Treasurer's office above and below, and embraces the hall above and below and the Auditor's north office, the Probate Judges' office on the first floor and the Clerk's office and the jury rooms above.

In September 1894 the Court House was provided with steam heating. The steamhouse, pipes and radiators cost $2,228 of which $658 was for the boiler house and $1,370 for the steam heating.

The First Jail of Scioto County.

The first jail was built in 1805. It stood on Market street on the West side between Front and Second streets, where the Elk restaurant now stands. It was 18 feet square. The floor and foundation was of hewed logs. It was eight feet high and had a log ceiling. The door was made of puncheons three to four inches thick and 12 inches wide. The door was fastened by a padlock and chain. A man and his wife were confined there charged with stealing clothing from William Huston. They were tried, convicted and sentenced to whipping. The man received 39 lashes and the woman 18. Joshua Parrish, the Sheriff, did the whipping and it was on their bare backs. Owing to the loss of the County records up to June 8, 1812, the cost of the jail cannot be given.

The Second Jail.

was built of stone by Elijah Glover, Senior. It stood where Brunner's store now stands on the Northeast corner of Second and Market streets. In 1808, William Peterson confined in this jail, was found guilty of larceny and sentenced to 17 lashes. He was stripped to the waist, his arms recrossed around a beach tree in front of the Market streets. In 1808, William Peterson confined in this jail, was lashed at that place. The whippings brought the blood and welts were raised on his back $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch. The second jail had one dungeon and one upstairs room. Thomas Hatch kept the jail as it adjoined his residence.

The Third Jail.

was ordered built on June 7th, 1833. It was to stand on lot 369 and was built on the southeast corner of the present Court House lot, across the alley from J. B. Nichols present residence. The Commissioners tried to obtain the lot 385 on the northwest corner of Sixth and Court streets but failed. On December 12th, 1833, the Commissioners examined plans for the jail and offered to let the contract but there were no bidders. They had advertised for bids in the Portsmouth Courier. On December 27th, 1833, the jail was let to Isaac Noel, for \$3,500.00, to be completed December 7th, 1843. On March 5th, 1834, Isaac Noel gave bond as contractor for the new jail, with Hugh Cook and John Noel as sureties. September 1, 1834, the Commissioners had a row with David Gharky, Treasurer, as to money to be paid Isaac Noel on the new jail. He threatened to pay out the jail fund on County current orders. The Commissioners notified him that $1\frac{1}{2}$ mills of the funds he had was for the County jail, and that he must hold it. The Commissioners sold John Orm a note of \$141.00 on John Rouse and David Jones to raise funds to build the jail. On December 11th, 1834, the Commissioners borrowed \$300 from David Gharky, Treasurer, to pay Isaac Noel on the new jail. On December 9th, 1835, the Commissioners examined the jail and found it unclean and unwholesome and ordered it cleaned. On June 20th, 1836, the Commissioners met to settle with Isaac Noel for building the jail. On June 25th, 1836, William H. Peck, appointed by the Commissioners, examined Isaac Noel's accounts and allowed him \$408.08½ for extra work. This jail was a stone structure fronting on Sixth Street, on the corner of Pine alley. It was never a satisfactory affair, but there was no reflection on Isaac Noel for it. He seemed to stand very high in public esteem, at the time he was building this structure and was a favorite with the County officers. This jail had to have an outside guard at times to keep outsiders from breaking in and letting the prisoners out. Levi Barker was one of the guards.

The Fourth Jail.

is the present one. On December 9th, 1858, the Legislature was petitioned for authority to build a new jail. The law desired was passed March 4th, 1859. $20,000 was allowed but not more than $10,000 was to be raised in one year. Ohio Laws Vol. 241, 266. On March 9th, 1859, the Commissioners ordered a vote on the erection of the new jail, at the April election. No record of the vote is found on the Commissioners' Journals, but it must have been favorable. On March 8th, 1860, the Commissioners bought lots 370 and 379 of a Mrs. Custer on which to build the jail. On April 20th, 1860, the old stone jail was ordered vacated so that the material could be used for the new. The prisoners were sent to the Pike County jail.

Sheriffs.

The Constitution of 1802, Article VI., Section 1, provided that there should be elected in each County one Sheriff and one Coroner at the election when representatives were elected; that they should be elected for two years and only be eligible four years out of six. No other County officers were named in the Constitution of 1802.

The Constitution of 1851 provided that County officers should be elected for terms not longer than three years and provided that the Sheriff should not hold office more than four years out of six. Hence the Legislature cannot tinker with this office or County Treasurer as it has with all others. The Legislature tried to extend the term of Sheriffs by the act of April 12, 1898, Ohio Laws, Vol. 93, page 352, but the Supreme Court, in State ex rel. Heffner 59 O. S. 308 held the Act void.

The office is of the greatest dignity and importance. Under the Constitution of 1802, the Sheriff was usually appointed Collector of Taxes and was often the Assessor of the County. He is the Chief Conservator of the Peace in the County.

The following is the list of persons who have occupied the office of Sheriff of the County:

1803-1807—William Parrish.
1807-1810—John Clark.
1810-1814—Elijah Clark.
1814-1817—Philip Moore.
1817-1821—Nathan Wheeler.
1821-1825—John Noel.

1825-1826—William Carey. Died October 4, 1826. Succeeded by Uriah Barber, Coroner, who served from October 15, till November 15, 1826.

1826-1830—Moses Gregory.

1830-1834—Conrad Overturf.

1834-1836—Mark Bradburn.

1836-1839—Oliver Lindsey. Died in office. Succeeded by John H. Thornton, Coroner.

1840-1842—John H. Thornton.

1844-1846—Isaac H. Wheeler.

1846-1850—Charles Chandler.

1854-1857—George W. Coffrin.

1857-1859—John Cook.

1859-1863—John L. Ward.

1863-1865—Leroy S. Brown or Brunn.

1865-1867—Van B. Hibbs.

1867-1871—John C. Malone.

1871-1875—John W. Lewis.

1875-1879—Fred Reiniger.

1879-1883—Thomas J. Pursell.

1883-1887—Andrew J. Finney.

1887-1891—Thomas T. Yeager.

1891-1895—Dustin W. Gustin.

1895-1899—James S. Rickey.

1899-1903—William G. Williamson.

County Auditors.

The duties of this office were first discharged by a Clerk of the Commissioners. The Commissioners' records of Scioto County prior to June 8, 1812, are missing but it appears that John R. Turner was the Commissioners' Clerk in 1812, and he so continued by appointment from year to year until 1820. The Legislature on the 18th of February, 1820, (Chase Vol. 2, 1102) provided for the appointment of a County Auditor to supervise the transfers of the County. The appointment was by the General Assembly by joint resolution and the appointee in each County was to have $2.00 per day for making the tax lists and $1.75 a day for recording. Under this act, General William Kendall was appointed Auditor of Scioto County and served until September 22, 1821, when he resigned. The act of February 2, 1821, provided for the election of Auditors annually, who took their office, March first each year. (Chase Vol. 2, 1188). Under this act Mr. David Gharky was elected. In February 1824, (Chase Vol. 2, 1176) the term was made for two years from March first. Under the former act and this act, Mr. David Gharky continued Auditor of Scioto County until March 1, 1830, when he resigned and Charles O. Tracy was appointed and served until the following March. In October 1830, Moses Gregory was elected Auditor and took the office March 7th, 1831. He was re-elected 1832, 1834, 1836 and 1838. On March 28, 1877, (O. S. Vol. 74, 381) the term was made three years instead of two, and the Auditor was to take his office on the second Monday after his election. On May 18, 1886, by an amendment to Section 1013 of the Revised Statutes, the Auditor was to take his office on the second Monday of September after his election. On May 2, 1894, the Auditor was to take office on the third Monday in October, and stands so at the present time. The compensation of the office was first by allowance made by the Commissioners, then by fees and allowance both. In 1877, the law provided a salary for the office according to the population of the County. The roster of the Auditors of Scioto County from the beginning is as follows:

1820—General William Kendall.
 1821—David Gharky.
 1829—Charles O. Tracy.
 1831—Moses Gregory.
 1841—Elijah Glover.
 1847—Stephen Kendall.
 1849—George A. Waller.
 1855—George H. Gharky.
 1857—Jesse J. Appler.
 1859—George W. Flanders.
 1863—Andrew J. Enslow.
 1865—Philip W. Noel.
 1869—James Skelton.
 1873—Frank C. Gibbs.
 1877—William H. H. Cadot.
 1880—George L. Dodge.
 1893—Joseph T. Tracy.
 1899—Milton H. Shumway.

County Treasurers.

This office was created August 1, 1792, under the Northwest Territory. He was appointed by the Governor. A new Act was put in force December 19, 1799, but the re-appointment remained with the Governor. Each County Treasurer gave bond in $3,000.

By Act of April 16, 1803, the County Treasurer was appointed by Associate Judges and received 3 per centum of moneys received and accounted for.

On January 24, 1827, Chase Vol. 3, p. 1542, the office was made elective under the Constitution of 1802, and there was no bar to a County Treasurer being re-appointed, or re-elected as often as he could obtain the office.

The following is a list of the persons who have held the office as far back as can be ascertained:

1814-1815—James Edison.
 1815-1818—General William Kendall.
 1818-1819—John Brown.
 1819-1823—Jacob Offnere.
 1823-1828—Jacob Clingman.
 1828-1830—Havillah Gunn.
 1830-1834—William Waller.
 1834-1836—David Gharky.
 1836-1839—Conrad Overturf. Resigned August 14, 1839.
 1839-1840—John Walker.
 1840-1850—William McColm. Died in office September 14, 1850.
 1850-1851—Charles P. Chandler.
 1851-1856—John Cook.
 1856-1860—Samuel P. Cummins.
 1860-1864—Philip W. Noel.
 1864-1868—John L. Ward.

1868-1872—Aaron Noel.
 1872-1873—Charles Slavens. Resigned October 20, 1873.
 1873-1876—John N. Royse.
 1876-1880—Benjamin R. Miles.
 1880-1884—Alfred Boyer.
 1884-1888—Charles Kinney.
 1888-1892—Mark B. Wells.
 1892-1896—William C. Draper.
 1896-1900—John B. Tracy.
 1900—Lucius Tatman.

County Recorders.

On June 18th, 1795, the Governors and Judges of the Northwest Territory enacted a law taking effect August 1st, 1795, and establishing a Recorder's office in each county. (Chase Vol. 1, 167). All deeds and conveyances were to be recorded. Mortgages were to be satisfied of record. A Recorder was to be appointed in each County, and give bond. The appointment was to be by the Governor.

April 16th, 1803, (Chase Vol. 1, 376), the Associate Judges were to appoint the Recorder for seven years. This law took effect October 1st, 1803.

(Chase Vol. 1, 664). This law was re-enacted February 8, 1810 and the Recorder was appointed by Associate Judges for seven years.

February 25th, 1831, (Chase Vol. 3, 1842), the office was made elective for three years. This law remained in force until 1864 when it was amended by fixing the first Monday in January when they should take their offices. This law on this subject was codified in 1880, and is found in Sections 1137 and 1162. In 1894 the law was changed so as to make his term begin the first Monday of September, after his election.

Recorders under the Territory were appointed by the Governor at his pleasure. In September 1797 John Belli was appointed Recorder of Adams County and served as such until October 1803. Scioto County was part of Adams County from July 10, 1797 until May 1803, or rather until August 9, 1803, when Scioto County was organized. The Recorders were appointed by the Common Pleas Court from 1803 until 1829 when the office became elective. Samuel G. Jones is said to have been Recorder of the County from its organization to June 26th, 1805.

Alexander Curran served from June 26th, 1805, until April 5th, 1811.

John R. Turner served from April 5th, 1811 until August 20th, 1833.

1803—Samuel G. Jones.
 1805—Alexander Curran.

 1895—James J. Spencer.
 1901—George W. Sheppard.

Prosecuting Attorneys.

The first law on this subject was that of April 13th, 1803, which gave the appointment of these officers to the Supreme Court. The Act of February 21st, 1805 restored it to the Common Pleas. The Act of April 16th, 1803, fixing salaries, allowed the Court of Common Pleas to fix his salary. The law of January 23rd, 1833 made the office elective for two years. This continued until the Act of April 20th, 1881, Vol. 78, page 260, when the term was made three years. The incumbents of the office prior to 1833 are ascertained from the Court Journals.

From 1803 to 1814 a period of eleven years, the Prosecuting Attorneys were lawyers, non-residents of the County and residents of Ross County, which joined Scioto County on the north.

The first Prosecuting Attorneys were allowed about $100 per year. The office at present pays about $1600.

The following is a list of those who have occupied the office from 1803 to the present time.

1803-1804—Thomas Scott, appointed by the Court.
 1804-1805—John S. Wills.
 1805-1808—Jessup N. Couch.
 1808-1809—Samuel T. Crawford.
 1809-1814—Nathan K. Clough.

 1885-1891—Theo K. Funk.
 1891-1897—John C. Milner.
 1897-1903—Harry T. Bannon.

Probate Judges.

The Probate Court was created by the Constitution of Ohio of 1851, and it was one of the mistakes of the Constitution makers of 1851. Its jurisdiction previous to that time was exercised by the Court of Common Pleas. Aside from its Probate Jurisdiction, it is a Court of odds and ends. It has all kinds of miscellaneous duties thrust upon it by the Legislature. The office is usually held by young lawyers.

The list of those who have occupied the office since February 9th, 1852, is as follows:

1852-1853—Benjamin Ramsey. Resigned November 2, 1853.
 1853-1854—Jesse J. Appler.
 1854-1858—John W. Collings.
 1858-1861—William S. Huston.

 1870-1873—Albert C. Thompson.
 1873-1879—Robert A. Calvert.
 1879-1885—Henry Clay Turley.
 1885-1891—James M. Dawson.
 1891-1897—George M. Osborn.
 1897— —Harry Ball.

Coroners.

This office was imported originally from England. It never had any proper place on this side of the Atlantic, but was simply a heritage from England. The Northwest Territorial law making power created the office under the Acts of December 21st, 1788, and July 16th, 1795, which provided for the office and defined its duties. Section 1, Art. VI, of the Constitution of 1802, created the office and made it elective for two years, and one was elected every two years from 1803 to 1851. No one ever took any interest in the office except Uriah Barber and he has been among the immortals since 1846. At the present time the office is given to a young Doctor, as he is regarded as a suitable one to hold post mortems.

We give a list of the Coroners of the County so far as we are able to obtain them, but we are utterly unable to guarantee its correctness prior to 1853.

1803— —James Munn.

- 1875—John B. Gregory.
- 1880—Charles A. Barton.
- 1883—R. B. Shumway.
- 1885—Joseph Smith.
- 1891—Lafayette Fout.
- 1897—Lafayette Jones.

County Commissioners.

There is no Commissioners' Journal to be found in the Court House prior to June 12th, 1812. No doubt one was kept and borrowed out and carried off. From the best that can now be obtained it will appear that in 1803, William Lawson was appointed Commissioner for one year, James Edison for two years, and Samuel Lucas for three years. In 1804 William Lawson was re-elected, also in 1807. James Edison was re-elected in 1805, and Samuel Lucas in 1806.

The roster is as follows:

- 1804—William Lawson.

Clerks of the Courts.

The Clerks of the Courts under the Constitution of 1802, were appointed by the Courts for a term of seven years, but before his appointment, except pro tempore, the applicant was required to produce a certificate from a majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court that he was well qualified to execute the duties of the office. If a vacancy occurred at any time, the appointment was made pro tempore until the proper certificate could be procured and filed.

Under the Constitution of 1851, the office was elective for three years, and the term began the second Monday in February triennially. On March 2nd, 1893, the term was made to begin the first Monday in August succeeding the election, Vol. 90, Ohio Laws. Frank L. Sikes filled the time from February to August, 1899.

County Collectors.

By the Act of December 19th, 1799, (Chase Vol. 277) County Collectors were appointed by the County Commissioners. The Commissioners of each County were to appoint County Collectors yearly, and he might have deputies. He was to take an oath of office. He was to settle annually with the Commissioners. This law was repealed February 19th, 1805. (Chase Vol. 1, 472) and the Lister of each Township was made Collector.

(Chase Vol. 2, 771). Act of February 11th, 1812. The Commissioners at their meeting on the first Monday in June each year were to appoint a Collector of County levies, or they could appoint one for each Township. They were to give such bond as the Commissioners would fix and were to collect the taxes before January 1st, following. They were to sell delinquent lands, etc.

(Chase Vol. 2, 1104). The Act of February 8th, 1820 provided the County Commissioners should appoint a County Collector annually. He was to collect duplicate personally, at first, and after to be at the County Seat. He was to have 6 per cent for collecting.

The office of County Collector was abolished January 24, 1827. The County Treasurer preformed his duties. Township Collectors were provided in each Township by Act of June 19th, 1795, appointed by the Commissioners and Assessors.

County Assessors.

Township Assessors were provided for in the Northwest Territory by Act of August 1st, 1792. They were first appointed by the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas (Chase, Vol. 1, 119) for one year. A refusal to serve incurred a fine of $20.00, but no one was compelled to serve more than one year in every three. October 19th, 1795 (Chase Vol. 1, 169), changed this and made Assessors elected annually on the third Tuesday of November. (Chase Vol. 2, 1477). The Court of Common Pleas of each County was to appoint an Assessor till March 1st, 1827. He could not appoint one or more deputies. March 12th, 1831 an Act for the election of County Assessors was passed, (Chase Vol. 2, 1800). They were to be elected biennially in each County, on the second Tuesday of October, for two years. They were to give bond in the sum of $20,000.00, and to take an oath of office. Vacancies were to be filled by the County Commissioners. The Assessors could appoint one or more deputies. The Assessor was allowed $1.50 for days sworn to. This Act superseded one passed January 16th, 1827, and one of February 10th, 1829 (Swan's Statutes 1841, page 1016). By the Act of March 20th, 1841, this office was abolished and the duties devolved on the Township Assessors provided for by that Act.

The list who held the office in Scioto County, is as follows:

1827—John McDonald.

1827—James Linn. Elected for 1828 and 1829.

1829—John Noel. In place of James Linn who had been absent fifteen months.

CHAPTER III.

Common Pleas Circuits under the Constitution of 1802 Common Pleas Districts under the Constitution of 1851 Table of all the Common Pleas Judges under the Two Constitutions—Biographies of the Judges.

The first law of the State for Judicial Circuits is found in the 1st Volume of Chase, page 356, passed April 15th, 1803. The Circuits were as follows: 1st. Hamilton, Butler, Montgomery, Green, Warren and Clermont. 2nd. Adams, Scioto, Ross, Franklin, Fairfield and Gallia. 3rd. Washington, Belmont, Jefferson, Columbiana and Trumbull. The Judges appointed for these Circuits were: 1st, Calvin Pease; 2nd, Wylliss Silliman; 3rd, Francis Dunlary.

Wylliss Silliman resigned some time in 1804, and the Governor appointed Levin Belt of Chillicothe, in his place. Legislature would not, however, elect Levin Belt, and elected Robert F. Slaughter in his place. This was done February 7th, 1805. On January 9th, 1807, Robert F. Slaughter was removed, after a successful impeachment trial, an account of which will be found in his sketch herein, and Levin Belt was elected and commissioned February 7th, 1807. About the 20th of February, 1810, four circuits were created, but Scioto County remained in the Second Circuit.

January 10th, 1811, Chase 2, 757, there were four circuits created, and Scioto County was placed in the Second Circuit with Ross, Pickaway, Madison, Fayette, Highland, Clermont, Adams and Gallia; and it was made unlawful for a Court of Common Pleas to set more than twelve judicial days.

On February 27th, 1816, Chase 691, Volume 2, six circuits were made. The Second Circuit was Highland, Adams, Scioto, Gallia, Pike and Ross. This act was amended January 24th, 1817, Chase 1011, Vol. 2, and Lawrence was attached to the Second Circuit. The Act of January 26th, 1818, Chase 1033, Vol. 2, made seven circuits of Common Pleas. The second circuit was now composed of Highland, Adams, Pike, Scioto, Lawrence, Jackson and Ross.

February 8th, 1819, Chase, Vol. 2, 1063, nine circuits were made. The Second Circuit was composed of Hocking, Pickaway, Fayette, Highland, Adams and Ross. The Eighth Circuit was Pike, Jackson, Athens, Gallia, Meigs, Washington, Lawrence and Scioto.

The Law of February 2nd, 1821, Chase, Vol. 2, 1191, provided for nine circuits, and made the Eighth Circuit composed of Pike, Jackson, Athens, Morgan, Washington, Meigs, Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto. January 27th, 1823, Chase, Vol. 2, 1252, the Eighth Circuit was composed of Scioto, Pike, Jackson, Athens, Morgan, Washington, Meigs, Gallia and Lawrence.

By the Law of January 28th, 1825, Chase, Vol. 2, 1455, the Eighth Circuit remained unchanged as above. January 18th, 1826, Chase, Vol. 3, 1514, left the Eighth Circuit the same as above, as did the Law of January 30th, 1827, Chase Vol. 2, 1549, also the Law of February 9th, 1828, Chase, Vol. 3, 1595, and the law of January 13th, 1829, Chase, Vol. 2, 1616.

On February 9th, 1830, Chase, Vol. 3, 1643, the Eighth Circuit was left intact as before, and the same circuit was left February 9th, 1831, Chase, Vol. 3, 1982, and January 31st, 1833, Chase, Vol. 3, 1933.

By the Law of January 24th, 1834, Swan's Statutes, 1841, page 202, the Eighth Circuit was composed of Scioto, Lawrence, Gallia, Meigs, Athens, Morgan and Washington.

February 16th, 1839, Swan's Statutes, 1841, page 202, there were thirteen circuits made, but Scioto remained in the same circuit. In 1835, the number was reduced to twelve circuits. The Eighth circuit was composed of: Scioto, Lawrence, Gallia, Meigs, Athens, Morgan and Washington. These circuits remained the same from 1835 to 1848, when Jackson, Pike, Gallia, Scioto, and Lawrence were constituted the Seventeenth Circuit, the ten remaining as before. This arrangement remained until 1851, when the new constitution took effect. Under the new constitution, Jackson, Vinton, Pike, Scioto and Lawrence constituted the 2nd sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District. These sub-divisions remained the same so far as Scioto County was concerned until April 21st, 1896, when by an Act of that date, Vol. 92, page 214, Adams County was transferred to the 2nd sub-division of the Seventh District. The First Sub-Division of the Seventh District was Fairfield, Pickaway and Hocking. The Second has already been given, Gallia, Meigs, Athens and Washington constitute the Third Sub-division.

When the new constitution took effect, September 1st, 1851, there was one Judge selected for each Sub-division.

On May 9th, 1894, by an Act of that date, Vinton County was taken from the Second Sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District, and transferred to the Third Sub-division of the same, so that at present the Second Sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District is composed of Adams, Scioto, Lawrence, Pike and Jackson Counties, five counties with three judges. A table of the Common Pleas Judges of Scioto County, Ohio, from the foundation of the State to the present time is given below. Following it are sketches of the Judges, so far as they could be obtained, in the order in which they served, giving first the President Common Pleas Judges, then the Associate Judges of the County and then the Common Pleas Judges under the Constitution of 1851. The President Judges under the old Constitution received a salary from the formation of the State until 1824 of $750 per annum. From that date until 1852, their salary was $1,000 per annum, paid quarterly. The Associate Judges were allowed $2.00 per day for each day the Court sat, payable out of the County Treasury. May 1st, 1852, the Common Pleas Judges were allowed a salary of $1,500, Swan's Statutes, 1854, page 827. By an Act of January 24th, 1867, Swan's Statutes, 605, the salaries of the Common Pleas Judges were increased to $2500 per annum, and remained such until the present time, except when increased in the Separate Counties by special legislation. Judge Martin Crain in Scioto County first received the salary of $2500 prior to which Judge Johnson and Judge Peck had been serving for $1500.

 William H. Middleton, from February 9, 1899, to February 9, 1904.

SECOND ADDITIONAL JUDGES.

By the act of April 21st, 1896, Volume 92, Ohio Laws, Adams county was taken from the First Sub-Division of the Fifth Common Pleas District and placed in the Second Sub-Division of the Seventh District. An additional Judge was provided for, and Judge Henry Collings was elected in November, 1896, and took his seat on February 9, 1897.

Henry Collings, from February 9, 1897, to February 9, 1897.

Wylliss Silliman

was the first presiding Common Pleas Judge to sit in Scioto County after the State was organized. He occupied the bench from April 15th, 1803, to June, 1804. He was born in Stratford, Connecticut, October 8th, 1777, and died in Zanesville, Ohio, November 13th, 1842. His wife was Dora Webster Cass, daughter of Major Cass, and sister of General William Lewis Cass. He was married to her July 14th, 1802. When a young man he removed to western Virginia, and in 1800 edited a paper there. He was a strong Federalist in the contest between Jefferson and Adams.

The struggle was too much for him, and he removed to Washington County, Ohio. He was a member of the first Legislature of Ohio from Washington County. In that body he was elected presiding judge of the second circuit, composed of Adams, Scioto, Ross, Franklin, Fairfield and Gallia. It was too humdrum a place for him, and he resigned in 1804 and located at Zanesville, and was the first lawyer there, and in the next year, Silliman, Cass, and Herrick were the only resident lawyers. In 1805, he was appointed register of the Zanesville land office, and held that until 1811. In 1811, he was on the commission to select the State Capitol.

In 1824, he was a candidate for United States Senator, and received 44 votes, to 58 for General W. H. Harrison, who was elected. In 1825 he was in the State Senate from Muskingum County and served one term. In 1826 he was again a candidate for United States Senator and received 45 votes, to 54 for Benjamin Ruggles, who was elected. He was a member of the House from Muskingum County in 1828 and 1829. From 1832 to 1834 he was solicitor of the Treasury, appointed by President Jackson.

He was a great natural orator, but his early education was defective. His legal attainments were not of a high order. He was a great reader and read everything which came in his way. He was of no use in a case until it came to be argued. He did not examine witnesses or prepare pleadings, but advocacy was his forte. He was indifferent to his personal appearance, and looked as though his clothes had been pitched on him. He was as sportive and playful as a boy. In all criminal cases, in breach of promise or seduction cases, he was uniformly retained, but it was in the great criminal cases where his power as an advocate was demonstrated. He was stout and well formed, above medium height. He had two sons who came to the bar, and he had a son-in-law, C. C. Gilbert, a lawyer in Zanesville. He was one of the distinguished figures of his time.

was a practicing lawyer in Chillicothe, under the Territorial Government. He was born in England, but the date of his birth has not been preserved. He was admitted to practice law, and took oath of office at Washington, Adams County, March 2nd, 1802. He was the first prosecuting attorney of Ross County, and was allowed from $15 to $50 per term for his services. In June 1804, he was elected presiding judge of the second circuit, in place of Wyllis Silliman, resigned. He served until February, 1805, when Robert F. Slaughter was elected to succeed him. On January 9th, 1807, Robert F. Slaughter was removed by impeachment, and Levin Belt was elected and succeeded him February 7th, 1807. He served until February 10th, 1810, when he was succeeded by John Thompson. He was prosecuting attorney of Scioto County at December term 1812 and received $25.00 for his services. It is said that he was a reasonably good and satisfactory judge of the common pleas, but that he failed as a practitioner at the bar. From the bench he descended to the mayoralty of Chillicothe, and in that office and in that of Justice of the Peace, he served many years. While he was a Justice of the Peace, there was a statute in force forbidding licensed attorneys to appear before Justices of the Peace. Soon after this, Mr. Richard Douglas, an attorney of Chillicothe, appeared before him to argue a motion to dismiss a case. Squire Belt said, "Dick, Dick, don't you know the law? You must not appear before me. Get behind me and make your speech." Douglas complied with his order, and got behind the Justice and made his speech.

Mr. Belt was tall, broad-shouldered, muscular, without surplus flesh, dark brown hair only sprinkled with gray, and somewhat ruddy of complexion. His presence as a justice of the peace in the exercise of his office was awe-inspiring. He removed from Chillicothe to Washington City in 1828, and died there in 1845. The first case submitted to him in Muskingum County in 1804 was Samuel Conner, plaintiff, against James Sprague, defendant in slander. Damages claimed $500. Verdict for the plaintiff, $300. His daughter Elizabeth was the second wife of Henry Buchanan, banker of Portsmouth, married to him March 22nd, 1837. She died March 16th, 1838, and is buried in Greenlawn Cemetery at Portsmouth, Ohio. She left a daughter, the wife of Mr. Lyman Perrin of Ridgeway Avenue, Avondale, Cincinnati. He had a son who was a clerk in the bank of Henry Buchanan at Portsmouth for several years, William Spriggs Belt. One daughter, Mrs. Levina Reynolds, survived him. His wife was a widow, a Mrs. Robinson, with two children. Her maiden name was Vinton, said to be a sister of Hon. Samuel F. Vinton.

Robert F. Slaughter.

Robert F. Slaughter was the third presiding judge of Scioto County. He was born in Culpepper County, Virginia, in 1770. Of his childhood nothing is known, but at the age of seventeen, he came to Kentucky and volunteered as an Indian fighter. He went to Chillicothe as early as 1796, at the founding of the city, and studied law. He was admitted to the bar in Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1799, and began practice there. He seemed to have traded and trafficked about considerable in lands, as everyone did at that time, but was a poor manager. In 1800 he purchased a farm about one and one-half miles south of Lancaster, and made his home there until his death. He was a merchant at first, but gave up that business and opened a law office in Chillicothe.

In 1802 he was a candidate from his county for the state constitutional convention, but was third in the race.

He was careless about his obligations, and in 1803 and 1804 he was sued for debts many times. He was elected presiding judge in 1805. He was elected to the State Senate 1803-1805 from Fairfield County, February 7th, in place of Wylliss Silliman, resigned. His circuit was very large, and his salary very small. He had the second circuit and had to ride horseback to his appointments. The salary was only $750, and the creeks were without bridges. There were no ferries, and the swimming was risky. The judge would miss his courts, and the Legislature determined to make an object lesson of him. Legislatures are fond of displaying their power, and the one of 1807 was no exception to the rule. January 8th, 1807, charges were filed against him in impeachment, as follows:

1. He failed to attend the March term, 1805, in Adams County.
2. Failing to attend the same term in Scioto County.
3. Failing to attend the spring term, 1805, in Gallia County.
4. Failing to attend the July term, same year in Franklin
5. Failing to attend the fall term, 1805, in Scioto County.
6. Failing to attend the fall term, 1805, Athens County.
7. Failing to attend the spring term, 1806, in Highland County.
8. Failing to punctually attend the spring term, 1806, in Adams
9. Failing to attend the spring term, 1806, in Scioto County.
10. Failing to attend the spring term, 1806, in Gallia County.
11. Failing to attend summer term, 1806, in Adams County.
12. Failing to attend summer term, 1806, in Athens County.
13. Failing to attend summer term, in Gallia County.
14. Failing to punctually attend the fall term in Fairfield County in 1806.
15. Failing to attend the fall term, 1806, in Franklin County.

Abraham Shepherd, as Speaker of the House, signed the articles. On January 9th, 1807, Hough and McArthur were appointed a committee to prepare rules to govern the trial. Slaughter appeared in person and asked two or three days to prepare for the trial. He was granted to the following Monday to answer. In answer he alleged he was not charged with any misdemeanor and could not, by law, be bound to answer. To the first three charges he pleaded ill health. He denied the fourth, and said he did punctually attend. To the fifth, he said that after attending court in Adams County, he went to Paris, Kentucky, to attend to some business, and expected to reach Scioto in time to attend court, but on returning to the Ohio River at Brook's Ferry, could not cross. That he went two miles below to be ferried, and, being impatient, rode into the corn field after the ferryman, and this unexpected delay, against his will, prevented him from attending the court until the second day, and there being little business to be done, court was adjourned. In answer to the sixth, he said he was well acquainted with the docket, and there was no civil case ready for trial, and not more than one or two being imprisoned in the County for misdemeanors, and the court would be obliged to pardon those rather than expose the weakness of the laws since their sentence could not be enforced. That he had applied for a tract of land, for which he had the deposit money, and was compelled by law to pay the fourth installment within forty days or forfeit his application, and was compelled to attend to it. To the seventh, he stated that he started from Lancaster, his home, but that his horse became foundered at Pickaway Plains, and his funds and his salary were not sufficient to buy another. He finally borrowed a horse to ride to Adams County. He answered the ninth charge that he had only borrowed the horse to ride to Adams County, and could not procure another to go to Scioto County. That he was afflicted with ill health in the spring, and had the pleurisy, and did not attend the spring term in Gallia for that reason. That the rivers were high, and he would be compelled to swim some creeks and ford others, and his health would not permit it. To the eleventh, he answered that while in Highland County, his horse broke out of the pasture, and he could not be found, and he was obliged to return to Chillicothe, supposing his horse had gone that way, but he did not, and he procured a horse of Joseph Kerr, to ride to Scioto County, on conditional purchase, but the horse was not able to carry him on to Gallia County, if it were to save him from ruin, and was compelled to trade horses, on which he made the balance of the circuit. He denied the twelfth charge. His answer to the thirteenth was that his farm was advertised to sell, and not having the money to save it, was obliged to raise it, which he did in time to save it. He denied the fourteenth charge. To the fifteenth, he answered that he attended the Franklin term two days, and then obtained the Associates' consent to be absent the remainder of the term. He was compelled to return to New Lancaster before going to Ross County in order to take money to complete the payment for his land before the court in Ross County would convene. He asked for a continuance to the first Monday in December next to secure Joseph Kerr, Doctor Spencer and George Shoemaker, witnesses. Four only voted in favor of this. Mr. Brush was admitted as counsel for respondent. Henry Brush, Jessup N. Couch, Wm. Creighton, Joseph Foss, James Kilbourn, Wm. Irwin and Lewis Cass, witnesses for the prosecution. Respondent read the deposition of Samuel Wilson. Mr. Beecher was counsel to the State. The trial began January 26th, 1807, and lasted until the twenty-eighth. On the question of his being guilty of neglect of official duty, the yeas were: Claypool, Corre, Hempstead, Hough, Jewett, McFarland, McArthur, Sargeant, Smith, Wood and the Speaker, Thomas Kirker. Mr. Schofield alone voted he was not guilty. On January 29th, the respondent was called, but made no answer, though three times solemnly called. The speaker delivered the judgment of the court, that he had been found guilty of neglect of duty and should be removed from office. His removal did not seem to affect his health or spirits, or his standing among the people of Fairfield County, where he resided. He served four years as prosecuting attorney. He was elected to the Senate in 1810, from Fairfield, Knox, and Licking.

He was elected to the House from Fairfield County in 1817, 1819, and 1821. In 1828 he was elected to the Senate, and re-elected in 1830. While in the Legislature he voted for the School System and the Canal System.

He was eccentric and absent-minded, and the story is told of him that once when plowing, it became time for him to go to the Legislature. Leaving the plow in the middle of the field, mounting his horse, with one of his own shoes on and the other off, he rode away. He was of medium height, dressed plainly, and always wore his hair in a queue. He was a Democrat of the old school, a man of great strength of character, a bold speaker, and a natural orator, and in speaking was capable of making deep impressions on his audience. His public record was clear, notwithstanding the Legislature undertook to blacken it. He once said, "The best rule in politics is to wait until the other party declares itself, then take the opposite side."

He married a Miss Bond, who was devotedly attached to the Methodist church, but he was not a member of any church. Their children were William, Tercenia, Ann, Fields, and Frances, all deceased, and two surviving, Mrs. Mariah Dennison, of Los Angeles, California, and Thomas S. Slaughter, of Olanthe, Missouri. The judge survived until October 24th, 1846, when he died at the age of 76 years. He is interred in the country cemetery near his home.

In view of the record of the Ohio Legislature in the matter of impeachments under the first Constitution of the State, we do not consider it any reflection on Judge Slaughter that his impeachment was successful, and had he lived in our day, his answer to the impeachment articles would have been held good, and any Legislature presenting articles of impeachment against him, such as are given above, would be deemed in the wrong.

John Thompson

was the Presiding Common Pleas Judge of Scioto County, from April 9th, 1810, to March 29th, 1824. He was a resident of Chillicothe, Ross County, Ohio. He located there in 1806 from Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. He was elected Presiding Judge in 1810, re-elected in 1817, and served until 1824. His circuit was composed of Franklin, Madison, Fayette, Highland, Adams, Scioto, Gallia and Ross. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and an elder in it. He was also a total abstainer from alcoholic drinks. He was an acute lawyer, but narrow-minded, firm to stubbornness, of considerable reading and of much readiness in the application of learning, much influenced by his likes and dislikes.

In 1812, he was impeached by the House and tried by the Senate. The following were the charges exhibited against him:

First: Because he allowed the attorneys but ten minutes to a side in a larceny case in Highland County, and when they objected, said that if they did not take it, he would allow them but five minutes to a side.

Second: Because he refused to allow an attorney to testify for his client in a case of usurpation in office, the attorney having offered to testify.

Third: Because he ordered certain court constables to knock down certain by-standers with their staves and gave no reason therefor.

Fourth: Because he allowed a bill of exceptions contrary to the facts.

Fifth: Because he declared in an assault and battery case that the attorneys had no right to argue the facts to a jury except with the permission of the Court, and then when overruled by his associates, impatiently told the jury to go on.

Sixth: Because in a larceny case when the jury came back into court and wanted to re-examine the witnesses he refused them and sent them back telling them the case was too trifling to take up the time of the Court.

Seventh: Because he ordered a jury to be sworn in a robbery case, after they had all stood up and said they had made up their minds, and they found the defendant guilty without leaving the box.

Eighth: Because he said publicly the people were their own worst enemies; that they were cursed brutes, and worse than brutes.

Ninth: Because at Hillsboro, he had refused to sign a bill of exceptions and had refused to let an appeal be docketed.

Tenth: Because at a trial at Gallipolis, he had unjustly and arbitrarily allowed an attorney but twenty-five minutes for an argument to the jury, and then when the limit of time was reached, ordered him to sit down saying the jury would do justice in the case.

Eleventh: Because at Gallipolis, he ordered the prosecuting attorney not to let any testimony go before the grand jury until he knew what it was.

Twelfth: Because he said to the grand jury at Circleville that our government was the most corrupt and perfidious in the world and the people were their own enemies. That they were devils in men's clothing.

The trial on these charges took nine days and witnesses were brought from each County where the transactions occurred. Henry Baldwin and Wylliss Silliman were attorneys for the State and Lewis Cass, John McLean and Samuel Herrick, for the defense. He was acquitted on all of the charges by a large majority and was re-elected by the Legislature in 1817. In 1821 and 1823, bilious fever prevailed at Chillicothe and many cases were fatal. Many thought the disease was yellow fever. Judge Thompson had a large family and became quite fearful of the disease attacking them. He took up the theory that ammonia destroyed the germs of this fever. Therefore, he seriously proposed moving his whole family to and living in a tavern stable, among the horses, during the sickly season. Vigorous protests from Mrs. Thompson resulted in a compromise, by which the family remained in the mansion, but were required to spend an hour each morning on the manure pile, to inhale the fumes which arose from it.

Soon after removing from the bench, Judge Thompson removed to Louisiana, where he purchased a plantation and some negroes. There he died in 1833, near Fort Adams, just over the line in Mississippi.

Thomas Irvin

was born in Ablemarle County, Virginia, in 1794. His father was William Irvin, a Presbyterian minister, and his mother's maiden name was Holt. She was from Kentucky, and Attorney-General Holt was her cousin. The family originally came from the town of Irvine, in Scotland. They were descendants of Irvine of Bonshaw, in the time of Robert Bruce, who conferred titles and lands on William De Irvine, an ancestor of our subject. Our subject's father was an extensive slave-holder. Judge Irvin's father regarded slavery one of the greatest temporal curses, and so wrote to his eldest son, W. W. Irvin, in 1805. He, however, treated his slaves with the greatest kindness. Our subject imbibed anti-slavery ideas as a boy, and they remained with him all his life.

He was a student of Washington College, at Lexington, Virginia. He afterwards read law and was admitted to the bar at Stanton, Va. After this he located at Lancaster, Ohio, where his brother, Hon. William W. Irvin, resided. On February 9th, 1826, he was appointed President Judge of the Eighth Circuit, and served two terms, or until February 19th, 1840.

In 1836 he removed to Pomeroy, Ohio, where he resided for twenty years. In December, 1837, he was married to Miss Mary Russell Pomeroy, daughter of Samuel Willis Pomeroy, for whom the town was named. In 1845 and 1846 he represented Athens and Meigs counties in the Legislature. Hon. Rodney M. Stimson, of Marietta, Ohio, who knew him well, said of him:

HONORABLE THOMAS IRVIN,
PRESIDENT COMMON PLEAS JUDGE, 1826-1840.
BORN 1794—DIED 1881.

"He was tall, (six feet high) of straight figure; a most perfect gentleman; a good lawyer; a general reader; of great common sense; prudent and careful."

He was the best of the President Common Pleas Judges who ever sat in Portsmouth, except Peck. He at one time owned the Calvert farm in Scioto County, and was a Director of a Portsmouth Bank. Once, during his Judgeship, he resided almost a year in Portsmouth.

In Politics he was a Whig so long as the Whig party lasted, and after that was a Republican. In 1855 his health gave way and he determined on a rural life. He bought sixteen acres of land back of Newport, Ky., and moved there in 1856. He resided there until his death, January 7th, 1869. During his residence in Kentucky he recovered his health, and devoted himself to horticulture, of which he was passionately fond. He called his Kentucky home Mt. Vernon. He was reared a Presbyterian, but on May 20th, 1867, was confirmed in the Episcopal Church, at Christ Church, in Cincinnati, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop McIlvaine. His wife survived him seven years. They had an only child, Ellen, who married Jonathan Chapman of Boston, Mass. He died October 18th, 1881, and left his wife and an only son, Thomas Irvin Chapman. Mrs. Chapman resides at Tokyo, Japan.

Judge Irvin was always anti-slavery in his views and during the war was a staunch adherent to the cause of the Union. He was noted for his integrity. He was a great advocate of the temperance cause, and opposed to licensing the liquor traffic. He was of a generous nature, and a most agreeable companion.

John E. Hanna

was born December 5th, 1805, in Westmoreland County, in Pennsylvania. His father was a saddler, but afterwards became a farmer. The family removed to Ohio in 1815, and settled at Cadiz in Harrison County, where our subject attended school at the Academy. He commenced the study of law, in 1823, with Chauncey Dewey of Cadiz, and was admitted to the bar in September, 1825, at New Philadelphia. He began the practice of the law, in 1826, at McConnellsville, in Morgan County. In 1829, he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney and served till 1831, when the office became elective. He held it by election until 1838. He was postmaster at McConnellsville from 1831 to 1833. In 1834, he was elected a Brigadier General in the Ohio Militia, and served as such until 1840, when he resigned to go on the Common Pleas Bench.

He was elected President Common Pleas Judge on February 18th, 1840, for the Eighth Circuit, and served one full term of seven years.

He was always a Democrat but was in favor of the civil war. He was married June 7th, 1826, to Susannah Robertson and had six children. After her death, he remarried. He represented Morgan County in the Legislature in 1838, 1839, 1840. On September 10th, 1854, he was appointed by the Governor as a Common Pleas Judge to fill a vacancy. He held Court in Muskingum County three days and attended a term of the District Court. In the militia, he served on the staff of General Alexander McConnell. Governor Charles Foster appointed him a Trustee of Athens Insane Asylum. He had a woman physician appointed for the female wards, the first in the State. In 1886, he was appointed by President Cleveland as Postmaster at McConnellsville and held the office four years. His second wife, Sarah Swasey died August 30th, 1894. His first wife died April 15th, 1865.

He was honest, generous, religious, patriotic and a model citizen, but not remarkable as a Judge.

William Virgil Peck

was born in Cayuga, New York, April 16th, 1804. His parents were Virgil and Mary (Wallace) Peck and he was the youngest of their three children. Both of his parents were from Litchfield, Connecticut. They settled in Cayuga, New York, in 1804, and his father, a merchant, died there in September, 1804. A month after his death, his widow removed with the three children to Litchfield, Connecticut, where our subject was reared. In 1808, his mother married Doctor Abel Catlin of Litchfield, Connecticut. She resided there until 1856, when Doctor Catlin died. Then she removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, where she made her home with her son, till her death in 1860. Our subject obtained a common school education, then studied the classics at the Pierce Academy, and afterwards at the South Farms Academy in Litchfield. In 1816, he went to Watertown, New York, and was a clerk in a store for three years. In 1819, he returned to Connecticut and clerked at Winsted until 1824, when he entered Judge Gould's world famous Law School at Litchfield. He attended this school till 1826, when he graduated and went to Cincinnati, Ohio. He entered the office of Bellamy Storer as a clerk. He located in Portsmouth in 1827. His income as a lawyer was estimated by the Assessor as follows: 1830, $300; 1832, $200; 1833, $300; 1834, $400; 1836, $600; 1842, $1,000; 1844, $1,250; 1847, $1,600. His success was the best. On July 8th, 1830, he married Mary Ann Cook, daughter of Hugh Cook and had a large family, only two of whom are now living in Portsmouth. Mrs. Mary C. Damarin and Mrs. Lou Corson, wife of Ed. J. Corson. Our subject was very scholarly and his neighbors appreciated it. At public functions he was put forward to make addresses. August 30th, 1828, he published the law card in Portsmouth for the first time. On July 4th, 1831, the most famous celebration of the day in Portsmouth, he was one of the committee on toasts. In October, 1832, he delivered the address in the ceremonies of the opening of the Ohio Canal at Portsmouth. In December of the same year, he was advertising lots for sale. In 1831, when Moses Gregory, Auditor, thought he had a sure case against David Gharky, former Auditor, for overcharging in making out the Tax Duplicates from 1827 to 1829, he and the Commissioners employed Sam Tracy as the County Attorney and thought the case was won. Up to that time Sam Tracy had been thought to be invincible. The suit was for $1,000, in trespass in the case. The shrewd old Dutchman employed Peck. The case was tried at the March term, 1832, and resulted in a verdict for $278.47 for Plaintiff. Peck took the case to the Supreme Court on the Circuit and it was tried there at the April term, 1834, to a jury, and the verdict was for the defendant. Peck won the case on the charge to the jury, to the effect that Gharky had settled with the Commissioners and they could not go behind their settlement. The amount of overcharges was $232.00. This suit made Peck's reputation. Any lawyer who could defeat Sam Tracy, before a jury in Scioto County was first-class. In 1839, 1841, 1842, 1845 and 1846, our subject was an Examiner and visitor of the Portsmouth Public Schools. In 1830, he was elected to a seat in the Council to fill a vacancy, but declined it. On the 14th of November, 1843, on the occasion of the visit of Ex-President John Quincy Adams to Portsmouth, Ohio, Mr. Peck delivered the welcoming address, on behalf of the town, in the Methodist Church on Second street, where now stands the Hibbs hardware store. On February 16th, 1849, he was on the Committee to meet President-elect Zachary Taylor on his way to Washington, to be inaugurated. On February 22nd, 1847, he took his seat as President Judge of the Common Pleas Court in the Circuit of which Scioto County was a part. He served under this appointment until February 9th, 1852, when he took his seat as the only Common Pleas Judge, under the new Constitution. He was no doubt glad to get rid of the three Associates in each County. Once they overruled him in Scioto County and he was very much disgusted. Under his appointment by the Legislature, he served at a salary of $1,000, per annum, paid quarterly. He rode horseback to Gallipolis, Jackson and other points to hold his courts. In 1856, he was re-elected Common Pleas Judge without any opposing candidate. In 1858, he was elected Supreme Judge by the following vote: Peck, 182, 942 votes, Thomas W. Bartley, 160,610, majority 20,322. In his own County the vote stood; Peck, 1912; Bartley, 1470. He served one term and declined a reelection. When he returned to Portsmouth in February, 1864, he gave up the profession of law. In 1873, he sold his fine home to Thomas P. Brown and moved to a commodious residence near the river. There his wife died December 11th, 1877, and there he died

JUDGE WILLIAM VIRGIL PECK.

December 30th, 1877. He practiced law in Portsmouth, from 1828 until 1847, a period of nineteen years, but he was undoubtedly the best Common Pleas Judge who ever sat on the bench in Portsmouth. When he decided a case, in delivering his decision, he convinced the losing party that he was wrong, and the Court was right. His perceptions were clear and discriminating. When he construed a statute, it looked as though that was the only construction. It is said that while he was on the Common Pleas Bench, the Supreme Court sitting in his District, had no causes for consideration. His scholarship was high and he was well trained as a lawyer. As a lawyer, when he prepared a case, tried it on his own theory, and the facts came out as he anticipated, he was invincible, but if thrown out of his course, he was weak. If in Court, he found that his client had deceived him as to the facts, he was utterly broken up and disgusted. He was then without resources. When the facts were shown as he expected, he could not be beaten. But as a Judge, he was as happy in his decisions as Lord Mansfield. His opinions as a Judge commanded universal respect, and were generally acquiesced in. On the Supreme Bench, his decisions were regarded as the highest authority. The Judge had a great deal of humor about him and many anecdotes are current about him. In June, 1839, Edward Hamilton was Mayor and Azel Glover was Marshal. Hamilton had examined a party charged with an offense and fixed his bail. The culprit was red headed and Glover would not give him any time to obtain bail, but dragged him off to jail. Mr. Hamilton was highly incensed and filed charges of impeachment against Glover, who was notified that he would be tried by Council in a summary way. He employed Peck, who asked and obtained twenty-four hours respite. At the end of that time, Peck offered on behalf of his client to apologize and pay the costs, if the charges were dismissed. The offer was accepted. A party could not obtain a decree of divorce from Judge Peck, while a Common Pleas Judge unless he made a case beyond all doubts of any kind, reasonable or otherwise. In a cause where there was any question of the right to divorce, Judge Peck would take the papers and after several days would return them to the Clerk and announce that he believed the parties could live together and therefore a divorce would be refused. It is said that the Judge liked to cook his own dinners and especially his beef-steaks. When away from home, he would often ask the privilege to cook his own meals. A story is told that once he and Judge Welch were holding the Supreme Court in Clermont County, and that a countryman came in to see the Judges. He found Judge Peck in the kitchen, asking to cook his own dinner and Judge Welch in the parlor playing the fiddle. When asked what he thought of the Supreme Judges, he said he did not think much. He found one in the kitchen asking to cook his his own meals and the other he found playing a d—d old fiddle. After the Judges retirement, he was very fond of reading yellow back literature and amused himself that way. After he came off the Supreme Bench, he would not go near the Court House and disliked to be called there. In politics, he was first a Whig. He cast his first presidential vote for John Quincy Adams in 1828. After the passing of the Whig party, he became a Republican. Of his co-temporaries at the bar, none of them ever spoke of him as a lawyer and a judge, except in terms of highest commendation. As a Common Pleas Judge, he was considered the superior of all who came before; and since his time there has not been his equal.

John Collins

was born at Morgantown, Va., October, 1754. His parents, John and Elizabeth Collins, lived and died there. He obtained such education as he could at Morgantown. He married twice, first to Elizabeth Doherty, daughter of Dr. Doherty, in Morgantown, W. Va. He was 42 years of age when he landed in Scioto County. He was at once a man of considerable prominence. In 1803, he was appointed one of the first three Associate Judges, and served by re-appointment until 1832. The first Court held in the County, August 9th and 10th, 1803, was held at his house in Alexandria.

He had a handsome daughter, whom everybody admired. Her name was Cynthia and she married Captain Moses Fuqua, of Virginia. She was born of his first wife as were his sons, Thomas and John. His daughter Polly, married William Roby; Nancy married William Young; and Amelia married Philip Moore. There was a son Enos. All these were of his first marriage.

The second wife was Jane Lampson. Her children were Elizabeth, married Nehemiah Beardsley; Joseph, William, David and Susan, married to William Nottingham. All of these are deceased, but David, who lives at Blue Creek, Ohio. John Collins was an old fashioned Democrat, without variableness or shadow of turning. There was nothing piebald about his politics. He always went to every election and voted his party ticket and he always took an active part in every political canvas. He lived to vote for Andrew Jackson in 1832 and died that same year. While a strict partisan in politics he had his friends in the other party. He took a great fancy to young Sam Tracy when he came to Portsmouth. Collins was the moving spirit in having him appointed Prosecuting Attorney by the Court and declared that, so long as he sat on the bench, Sam should have the office. He kept his word. Collins was a large fine looking man and of a positive and peremptory turn, but he soon learned that an Associate Judge had no duty but to concur with the Presiding Judge, and he followed that out. Once in the early part of his career on the bench, the presiding Judge was absent, and on that occasion Collins was the ruling spirit. A party was tried and convicted of hog stealing. Collins pronounced the judgment of the Court and the criminal was ordered to be bound hand and foot, placed in a canoe and set adrift in the Ohio River. The sentence was carried out. Judge Collins was a strict Methodist for forty years and then left that Church and went to the New Lights, in which faith he died. He was buried in the Carey's Run cemetery and his grave is unmarked. His character and course of life was remarkably fitted to the time in which he lived.

Samuel Reed.

His father came to America from Ireland about the year 1763, and settled in New Jersey. He was married to Rebecca Minor about the year 1772. They had one only child named Samuel, our subject. Samuel, the father, died a short time after the birth of his son, and the widow married Robert Taylor. Taylor and his wife raised a large family. Our subject was born April 2nd, 1773. At the age of twenty-three he married Elizabeth Burr, of Baltimore, January 26th, 1797. They had one child, Anna. His wife, Elizabeth Burr-Reed, died soon after the birth of her child. Samuel Reed moved to Virginia, where he met and married Rebecca Lucas, on November 5th, 1799, at Shepherdstown. They came to Ohio in 1803, and settled first in Scioto County, but afterwards moved to Pike county. He was a carpenter by trade, but in Ohio never followed it. He was a farmer. He had ten children by his second wife—of these, five lived to maturity and married; one of the sons was William Reed, the father of Samuel Reed, the Banker, of Portsmouth, Ohio. Our subject stood very high in his neighborhood as a citizen and business man. He was in 1804 appointed Associate Judge of Scioto County, vice Thomas Sweeny, resigned. He was elected the same fall and served till 1810. He was Associate Judge of Pike County from January 28th, 1817, to August 27th, 1835, and again from June 28th, 1842, until February 28th, 1849. Rebecca Lucas-Reed died, and he married Mary Hicks, November 11th, 1821. He was seventy-eight years old when he married Susanna Jones, March 30th, 1851. Judge Reed was a very strong temperance man. It was the custom, when he went to Piketon to furnish whiskey to the men helping to harvest the grain. Judge Reed said he would not give whiskey to the men. His neighbors said he could get no men to work for him if he did not. He said he would let the grain rot in the field before he would give them whiskey. So all his neighbors who were temperance men came to his rescue and harvested his grain for him, and thus the custom of furnishing whiskey was broken up in that vicinity. He was a strong Presbyterian. He built the Presbyterian Church in Piketon. He died in 1852 and is buried in the old cemetery at Piketon.

Charles T. Mastin was born in Virginia, in 1772. He came to Scioto County as early as 1806 and located the John Thomas farm, now in Valley Township. He was a Justice of the Peace in Wayne Township in 1809. He was made an Associate Judge, in 1810, and served seven years. He was a good citizen, and was respected by his neighbors. In 1813, he was a Trustee of Wayne Township. He died on the 30th of November, 1842, leaving a large family, all of whom have left Scioto County and none of whom could be communicated with in regard to him. Mr. Mastin was an extensive dealer in real estate and towns lots, as the early records disclose.

Samuel Crull

was born July 23rd, 1781, near Morgantown, Virginia. His father, David Crull, came from Heidelberg, Germany, at the age of ten years, in 1763. He married Nancy Bennett in Virginia, about 1787. The whole Crull family came to Ohio in 1805. They came on a raft and landed at the mouth of the Little Scioto. The children of David Crull were: William, Samuel, our subject, Jemima, David, Charles, Henry, Susan and John. All came to Scioto County with their father David. Afterwards Charles, Jemima, Henry and Susan married and went West. The others remained in Scioto County. The original form of the name in Germany was Kroll. Our subject was married October 14th, 1802, to Jane Howell in Virginia. When they came to Ohio, they had but one child, William, afterwards Doctor William Crull. Eight children were born to them, but four sons and three daughters reached maturity. Their names were John, Julia, Samuel, Harriet, David, Martha and Jane. David was the father of Mrs. Emma J. Slattery. Charles Crull, brother of our subject, had visited Scioto County and spied out the land before the others came. Our subject purchased a large quantity of land in the vicinity of Harrisonville. He helped to locate the village and gave a lot and $50 for the Methodist Church there. When Judge Crull located near Harisonville, his nearest neighbor was his brother Charles at Harrisonville and his next nearest Isaac Bonser, at Dixon's Mills. He enlisted in the war of 1812 and got as far as Sandusky, when peace was declared. Judge Crull was a devoted and enthusiastic Methodist. He always entertained the visiting ministers and could not do too much for the church. In politics, he was a Whig. He was an active, industrious man. He built a saw mill on Long Run about three-fourths of a mile above Harrisonville. He also had burrs for grinding corn. It was run by water power and was the first mill in that part of the country. In 1827, Isaac Bonser, Democrat, and Samuel Crull, Whig, were candidates for the Legislature. Bonser received the certificate, but Crull contested and was awarded the seat. He was an Associate Judge of the County 1813 to 1827, 1830 to 1837, 1848 to 1851, twenty-four years. He bought and gave each of his sons a farm. At his own home on his farm, he delighted in entertaining his friends and among those entertained there, were those great Whig apostles, Moses Gregory, John R. Turner and Colonel Oscar F.

Moore. He died October 3rd, 1854, aged 74 years, 2 months and ten days.

William Givens.

Judge William Givens was born in Mason County, Kentucky, September 18th, 1782. His father, who was a farmer, was killed by the Indians before William Givens was born. He was living in Mason County, Kentucky, and had been married but a short time, and had gone to housekeeping. One morning on leaving his cabin he was shot by an Indian. This was about the time that seventy-five Wyandot Indians crossed the Kentucky river at Boonesboro and marched North. Then ensued a fierce and sanguinary struggle for possession of the hunting grounds, in which many settlers lost their lives, and many others emigrated to Ohio. His mother, who was a sister of Judge David Mitchell, afterwards married John McBride, and there were three children of her second marriage. William Givens subsequently moved to Scioto County, afterwards to Jackson County, and later, in 1826, returned to Nile Township, Scioto County, Ohio, where he purchased 301 acres out of the Graham, O'Bannon & Massie survey of 1550 acres, dated, June 20th, and July 3rd, 1795. This survey had a frontage of three and one-third miles on the Ohio river, the Givens tract of 301 acres lay near the upper part of the survey. By some fault or defect he was compelled to pay for this land the second time. The land purchased by him was covered with a dense forest and he and his elder sons, William, David and John, cut off the timber to clear the land and sold the wood used in making payments on the farm. At that time, 1827, the "Eliza" was a steamboat with "walking beams," that being the only class of boats on the Ohio at that time plying between Portsmouth and other points. Game of every description was plenty, bear, deer, wild turkey, squirrels, etc., while the wolves kept things lively in their well known manner. While in Jackson County, he was engaged largely in the manufacture of salt for several years, that point being the great center for the supply of this product to the settlers for many miles around.

William Givens served in the war of 1812, holding the position of First Sergeant in Captain Jared Strong's Company, Ohio Militia of the First Odd Battalion, Second Brigade, Second Division, late in the service of the United States, commanded by Major Ben Daniels from the 29th of July, 1813, to the 19th of August, 1813, inclusive. Service performed was marching into the Indian country for the relief of Fort Meigs, then besieged. William Givens was elected by the Ohio Legislature as Associate Judge of the Courts of Common Pleas for Jackson County, on February 25th, 1816, and again on January 22, 1823, for the same county, and afterwards for Scioto County in 1832. The Counties of Pike and Jackson constituted a Legislative District until the census of 1820 was taken. In 1818 Judge William Givens was elected a member of the House of Representatives from this district and served one year. On February 7th, 1814, an Act was passed by the Ohio Legislature in order to promote the discovery of salt and to encourage the manufacture of it at the Scioto Salt Works and to foster that industry. Salt was then worth from $4.00 to $6.00 per bushel of eighty pounds, and the larger part of it was brought across the Alleghany Mountains on the backs of pack horses. William Givens and six others had petitioned for assistance to dig, each, a well, they to bear the incidental expenses, and in return to have exclusive use for five years. Under this Act, John Nelson, who married Judge Givens' half sister, Miss Polly McBride, sank a well to the depth of 240 feet, John Wilson to the depth of 260 feet, and Henry Harman to the depth of 260 feet, but no stronger brine was discovered. An Act to make further experiments was passed February 15th, 1815, directing William Givens to sink a well 350 feet deep, and to be two and one-fourth inches in diameter at the bottom, for which he was to be paid $700.00, the water to be strong enough to make 50 pounds of salt for 250 gallons of brine, a stronger water than was obtained in Kanawha, in 1810. He found many difficulties, and on February 24th, 1816, an Act was passed extending his time to April 1st, 1816, to finish and tube his well. Mr. Givens executed his work faithfully and then added another one hundred feet to the depth at his own expense. At this depth of 450 feet the boring ceased, a stronger water was obtained, but it was small in quantity and did not rise to the top of the well. Force pumps for raising water were not then in use as they are now. No less than fifteen Acts were passed on the subject of the Ohio Salt Works. Givens' experiment demonstrated that a brine strong enough to compete with that of other salines could not be secured at Jackson, and the Ohio Legislature passed a resolution on January 3rd, 1818, favoring the sale of the Ohio Salt Reserve. The Givens salt well is still open. It is a few hundred feet above the Baler building in Jackson and the water stands the year round in the well pipe. His furnace stood on the knoll near by to the South, and its remains may be seen whenever the ground is plowed. The small creek emptying into Salt Creek a few hundred feet below bears the name of Givens' Run, and thus his name survives in this historic spot. Salt at that time was measured and not weighed. The manufacture was stopped on account of the scarcity of wood and the failure of the salt wells. Mr. Givens prospered at the Salt Works. He erected a two story log mansion. The house was built of logs but was better than the ordinary log house of the early days, in that it had two stories. The lower floor consisted of two rooms, while the upper story consisted of one large room, unceiled. This house was for years the finest residence in all Jackson County. It stood near the site of Fulton Furnace, and was the first seat of Justice. Under an Act of the Ohio Legislature, passed January 12th, 1816, to erect the County of Jackson, Sec. 5 reads as follows: "That the Courts of said County of Jackson shall be holden at the house of William Givens, within the reserved Township, at the Scioto Salt Works, until the permanent seat of Justice for said county shall be established. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of March, 1816." The first meeting of the County Commissioners was held at his house, as ordered by the Legislature, the record of which meeting is now lost. The first Court of Common Pleas was held at his house. The Court opened Monday, August 12th, 1816. The weather was very warm the first day, an adjournment was had to the shade of a large white oak tree near by. When the grand jury was organized the court officers led it away some distance from the tree, where it held its meetings, the crowd being kept out of hearing by the constables.

The Presiding Judge was the Hon. John Thompson, of Ross County. Judge Thompson was the guest of Hon. William Givens, whose residence was the seat of Justice. His associates were Hugh Poor, David Payne and William Givens. The house of William Givens, where the Common Pleas Court was held during the year 1816, was situated just north of the Court House in the City of Jackson. William Givens, whose activity, energy and influence had been largely instrumental in securing the organization of Jackson County, was elected by the Ohio Legislature on February 24th, 1816, as one of the first three Associate Judges of Jackson County. Judge Givens was head and judge in his own house, like the Patriarchs of old. At this first court the entire male population of the County was said to have been present, viz., salt boilers, planters, hunters, trappers, hermits and squatters, silent men with coon-skin caps and clothes of deer skin. Judge William Givens was married July 13th, 1809, to Susanna Anderson, who only lived a short time, leaving no children. He was married the second time on October 24th, 1810, to Rachel Stockham, who was the sister of Mary Stockham, who married Judge David Mitchell, and Anna Stockham, who married John Bennett of Jackson, and Ruth Stockham, the wife of William Crull, and had brothers: Aaron, Joseph, John, Payne and William Stockham. These were all children of William Stockham, who was a native of Wales and emigrated to the United States in 1777, and settled near or in Trenton, New Jersey, where he married Susannah Payne, and in 1798 came to Ohio with his family of ten children, and in 1803 he settled in Madison Township, Scioto County. He died at an advanced age in 1815, his wife dying in 1835. Rachel Stockham was born in Trenton, New Jersey, May 3rd, 1794, and married William Givens as above stated. Eleven children were born to them, viz., William, (see sketch); David, married Cynthia McCall; he died and his widow married David W. Murphy (see sketch); John married Eliza Collier; Samuel and George died unmarried; Allen F. (see sketch); James Harvey, married twice, first to Margaret Burriss, who died February 20th, 1871, and afterwards to Mrs. Elizabeth (Royse) Teeters; Cynthia A. married John McDermott; Jane and Mary died young; and Thomas J. married Elizabeth Leighton, who died leaving two children. He afterwards married Emily Bennett, of Jackson, a daughter of John Bennett, and had one daughter. Judge Givens was always a Whig in politics until the dissolution of that party, and was always a Republican afterwards. He was a Methodist. He had a fine collection of books for his day. It was composed of the best standard works of reference in encyclopedias and commentaries on Law and the Bible, the Bridgewater Treatises, historical and biographical works, etc., all of which bore the marks of having been well read, as well as well cared for. He was a great reader of current events, and took the same untiring interest in the welfare of matters of state, nation and country, township and neighboring welfare, that he had previously shown in Jackson County. He died June 26th, 1863, at the home of his son, Allen F., in Nile township, from the infirmities of old age, aged 80 years, 9 months and 8 days. Rachel (Stockham) Givens, his wife, died February 18th, 1865, while visiting at the home of her son, William, of an acute attack of heart disease, aged 70 years, 9 months and 15 days. The descendants of Judge Givens are now scattered over many states. His name was so intimately associated with the Salt Works and early history of Jackson County and the organization of that County, that a sketch of one would be incomplete without the other. At this writing, March 1st, 1902, only one of his children is yet alive, viz., Allen F., (see his sketch). The writer of the foregoing (in his young manhood) knew the Judge and his good wife personally, knew their rare accomplishments, had the honor of their society, love and friendship, and was many times made welcome to their hearth and home.

Joseph Moore

was born February 13th, 1790, in Hampshire County, Va. In the same year his parents came down the Ohio River in a flat-boat and landed at Limestone, Ky. They located first in Mason County, Ky. Joseph Moore, the father of our subject was a local Methodist Minister. He took his family and located on Ohio Brush Creek in Adams County in 1797. In 1797, he organized a Methodist society there and in 1800, built Moore's Chapel. It was begun in the winter and finished in the spring. The first services there were in August, 1801. It is said to have been the first Methodist meeting house in Ohio. Today there stands on the site a frame church, successor to the original edifice. Joseph Moore, the father of our subject, was also a revolutionary soldier from the State of New Jersey. His mother was Rebecca Foster, also from New Jersey. His father died in 1833. Joseph Moore saw and experienced all the pioneer hardships. He was fond of relating how, when a boy in Kentucky, he rode forty miles through the wilderness to mill. He rode the horses which pulled the logs to erect the first Moore's Chapel. At the age of 15, he was placed as an apprentice with Job Denning, at Killenstown, Ohio, to learn the stone mason's trade, and he learned it well. He aided in the erection of Judge Denning's stone house at Killenstown, and helped to build a stone store house on the present site of the Hood Corner in West Union, Ohio. In 1814, he went to the vicinity of Rockville in Adams County and purchased the present Loughry Lands, of General Nathaniel Massie's heirs. There he built the stone house which is still standing midway between Rockville and Beuna Vista. He also built the stone house which formerly stood below Rockville on the lands of the Shale Company. He built the stone house near Upper Twin Creek, and one for Levi Moore, which stands near Hygean Run in Washington Township, Scioto County. He built the stack for the Brush Creek Furnace on Brush Creek in Adams County. In 1812, he was working for William Lawson in Scioto County, and married his daughter, Mary. He was out in the general call in the war of 1812, in Captain Wikoff's Company and received a pension on account of the same under the law of 1878. He was the pioneer in the stone business. He engaged in it at Rockville from 1814 to 1830, and got out much stone. He shipped it to Cincinnati on rafts made of logs from deadened timber. He made considerable money in the business and in 1830, invested it in a good farm above Upper Twin Creek in Scioto County, where he continued to live until his death. His father had twelve children and he had eleven of his first marriage. His first wife died July 24th, 1838, and on August 6th, 1839, he married Isabella Elliott. She died May 30th, 1848, and on February 15th, 1849, he married Sarah Chenowith. She died February 2nd, 1878.

He joined the Methodist Church in 1812, and was a faithful member during his entire life. He was also a true and loyal Democrat, and never wavered. His first Presidential vote was cast in 1814, for President Madison. He voted for Monroe both times he was elected, and for General Jackson in 1824, 1828 and 1832. He never voted any ticket but the Democrat, and he never used liquors or tobacco. He never belonged to any secret society. He served the Democratic party with great enthusiasm. He was always ready to lead the forlorn hope for it, at any time. While he never sought office, if his name was needed to fill out the ticket, it was at the service of his party. He was as zealous a Methodist as ever lived. He was a class leader in the Methodist Church for over forty years. He held every office in the local church. He aided in building McKendree Chapel on Upper Twin Creek, and laid the stone foundation. He was elected an Associate Judge of Scioto County, February 11th, 1834, and served one term, seven years. He remembered the territorial legislature of 1799, and the admission of the State in 1802. He remembered well when the first lots were sold in Portsmouth. He called on Dr. Thomas Waller, first in 1800. He was a noble example of a firm and upright life. He died Oct. 28th, 1884, in his 95th year.

Richard H. Tomlin.

The derivation of the name signifies judgment or power; but in this case, it happened to be a misnomer. He was born in 1803, and the locality of his birth was in New York. He came to Portsmouth in 1831. He married Eliza Butler, daughter of Samuel Butler, a tavern keeper, but there was no issue of the marriage. His first residence in Portsmouth, after his marriage, was the house where Mrs. George Wilhelm now resides on the southeast corner of Front and Chillicothe streets. He afterwards bought the whole square bounded by Seventh and Eighth, and Washington and Court streets, and resided there at the time of his death.

In 1838, he advertised in the newspaper as being engaged in the business of selling whiskey and pork in Portsmouth, and for a considerable part of his time was a clerk in the commission house of G. J. Leet. He at one time kept a hotel on Pig Iron Corner. In his political faith, he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and seemed to be fond of political office. He was appointed as an Associate Judge of Scioto County by a Democratic majority in the legislature for seven years from February 16th, 1837. He succeeded Samuel Crull, and was succeeded by William Salter. He first occupied the bench in Portsmouth at the May term, 1837, and he last sat at the December term, 1843.

Tomlin was the first mayor of the city of Portsmouth. He commenced the duties of his office in March, 1837. In 1836, he was elected a member of the town council for three years. On May 4th, 1838, he was appointed a member of the committee on claims of council, and thus obtained his title to be one of the aristocrats at Portsmouth, they being persons who served on the committee of claims, or their descendants. On March 27th, 1837, was the first election of the town officers by the people, other than councilmen. At this election Mr. Tomlin was elected mayor of the town. On March 15th, 1844, he was re-elected mayor of the town over Oscar F. Moore, the Whig candidate. Rumor says that false defamatory circulars distributed just before the election to influence the voters against Mr. Moore resulted in the election of Tomlin. The town made a sorry choice, for on April 28th, 1845, council passed a resolution that, owing to ill-health and deafness, the mayor was inefficient and that a mayor pro tem should be appointed. Owing to legal difficulties, that action was not consummated until February 20th, 1846, when George Johnson was appointed mayor pro tem on the ground that Tomlin was sick and incapacitated. At the next election March 10th, 1846, George Johnson had 266 votes for mayor; Isaac Kirby, 88; and Richard Tomlin, 1.

On June 16th, 1846, Tomlin died; and council attended the funeral officially. He is buried near the Elijah Glover lot at Greenlawn cemetery, Portsmouth, O., and his grave is marked. If he was noted for anything, it was for mediocrity in office. His widow married again and left Portsmouth.

was born January 8th, 1787, in Wyoming, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania. He moved to Tioga County, New York, where he was married April 1st, 1817, to Sarah Taylor, who was born February 7th, 1798, in Canajoharie, Montgomery County, New York. Their son, Franklin, was born April 12th, 1818, and on October 13th, 1818, they with two other families started to Ohio. They came by way of the Ohio river and landed at the mouth of the Little Scioto River, December 3rd, 1818. Soon after his arrival, Abijah Batterson bought the farm on the Little Scioto, on which his grandson, Addison Batterson now resides, and moved on the same place February 3rd, 1819. There his son, Addison Batterson, was born February 27th, 1820. Judge Batterson had no other children, but the two sons. From 1839 to 1846 he was one of the Associate Judges of Scioto County. He was a 1st Lieutenant in the T. H. Rifle Company, First Regiment of Riflemen, Fourth Brigade, Second Division, Ohio Militia, appointed September 14th, 1844. He was a respectable citizen, and was a strong Democrat, time tried and fire tested, and never fell from grace with his party. His son, Franklin, had the following children: John, Addison, Aaron, William, George, Charles, Abijah and a daughter, Sarah, who never married. The Judge's son, Addison, had a son, Oliver, whose children are Arthur R., Edith M., Earl T. and Beatrice P.

Edward Cranston,

One of the most forceful characters who ever occupied the stage of public affairs in Scioto County was Edward Cranston. He was born February 2nd, 1790, in Rhode Island. He came to Portsmouth sometime prior to 1820. In that year he was the Captain of an Artillery Company in Portsmouth, which held its meetings at the Court House, so that he was a leader among the young men of his time. It seems he worked for John Thornton in his blacksmith shop connected with his carding mill, where now stands the Elk restaurant.

One Aaron Jones had built a carding mill in 1816, which ran with a sweep. In 1820, he decamped in the night with what effects he could carry away with him in an open boat. William Lodwick a creditor seized and sold his mill and it was bought in by David Gharky and Edward Cranston, who became partners and conducted a carding mill in Portsmouth for some time thereafter. These partners were par excellence the two most self-willed persons in the County, at that time, or at any other time, but so far as posterity knows, they got along pleasantly. Cranston knew more about the business and he tore out the sweep and put in a large inclined wheel to operate the mill. This was before the day of steam engines. February 21st, 1821, Cranston was married to a Miss Nancy Cole by Phillip Moore, Justice of the Peace. He reared a large family.

He moved to Wheelersburg in about 1828 and continued to reside there the remainder of his life. There he conducted a carding business and a woolen mill, in which he associated his sons and which has been conducted to the present time by members of his family.

On June 21st, 1830, he became Commissioner of Scioto County, succeeding to the unexpired term of Samuel B. Burt, who had left the County. He was re-elected in 1832, receiving 687 votes, and without opposition. He was re-elected in 1835, and served until 1838, when he was succeeded by William Salter. During the time he was Commissioner, the present Court House was built by Gen. Wm. Kendall. The Little Scioto Bridge was let out June 17th, 1831, to Henry Jeffords, but was not completed until May the 20th, 1834. The Court House was let September 17th, 1835, at $12,650, to Gen. William Kendall. A new Jail was also built while he was Commissioner. October 14th, 1837, the Court House was completed. From 1846, to 1851, he was an Associate Judge of Scioto County. He was in the period of his activity one of the principal Whig politicians in Scioto County.

Jacob P. Noel.

The historian of Scioto County will find abundant labor and trouble when he begins to investigate the Noel family. There are so many of them and the earlier ones among them obeyed the eleventh commandment so assiduously that they puzzle the historian.

If any one will take the pains to read all about the Noels in this book, they will find that the subject of their devotion to religion or piety is elided. While good citizens they were not as a tribe characterized by religious fervor. Jacob P. Noel has long since gone to his reward and left no descendants, and if we should attempt to find fault with his life or character, we could not do it on account of this. He was the best of the Noels, beyond any question, and was noted for his piety. It was 18 carats fine every day in the week. To speak the truth of Jacob P. Noel, no one could speak except in commendation. He was the fourth child and son of Philip Noel, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1765. His wife Susannah Putnam was born in Virginia in 1767. After his marriage, Phillip Noel located in Hampshire County, Virginia, and there on December 20th, 1791, our subject was born. In 1798, he located in what was then Adams County, and engaged in farming and also kept a hotel for thirty-four years. He died April 12th, 1849. He had thirteen children, ten sons and three daughters.

Phillip Noel located about three miles north of Portsmouth and cleared the first land in the Scioto bottoms. In 1806, Jacob P. Noel at the age of 15 years, was in Portsmouth and worked in Henry Sheeley's brickyard, at off-bearing brick. In 1809, he was apprenticed to Elijah Glover to learn the latter's trade. Apprenticeship in those days meant the apprentice to live in the family of the Master. Elijah Glover had a daughter Ann, and the usual result followed. On September 1st, 1815, our subject married Ann Glover. He served his apprenticeship with Elijah Glover and concluded it by enlisting in the Company of Captain David Roup to go into the war of 1812. There were only seven Noels in the Company, Daniel Noel, Fourth Corporal; John Noel, fifer; John Noel, sr., Peter Noel, Nicholas Noel, Phillip Noel and our subject. Four of these, Peter, John, Phillip and Jacob P. were brothers. The latter was mustered in this company May 7th, 1812 and was in Hull's surrender. They were out five months. When Jacob P. Noel returned from the war, he set up a hat shop of his own, and conducted it a number of years.

In 1819, he was a member of the Town Council and in the same year was on the Committee on Streets with William Kendall. In April, 1821, he was elected an Overseer of the Poor of Wayne Township. In June of the same year he was elected a Justice of the Peace of the same Township. He seemed to have a fondness for that office for in 1843 and 1846, he again held it. In 1824, he was Supervisor of the westward, and again in 1827. In 1827 he carried on a grocery at Jefferson and Front streets, and for a number of years afterward. He and his nephew, John Glover, for some time conducted a dry goods store at Franklin Furnace. In 1830, he and Dr. John Glover, his brother-in-law, with three others built the upper rolling mill, better known as the Gaylord Mill.

He built the Sam Tracy home on Front street and sold it to Mr. Tracy. Afterwards he built the house where Counselor Frank Finney now resides on Sixth Street. Then he bought three acres of land where the Portsmouth Range Works now stands and resided there for some time. In 1834, he was a Trustee of the Methodist church and he and his wife were, all their lives, devoted and faithful members. When Methodism was first organized in Portsmouth in 1813, Ann Glover was one of the first seven to enroll their names. Were we to make a roll of the Methodists of old time in Portsmouth, Father McDowell would come first and Jacob P. Noel second.

In 1846, when the first Poor House Directors were chosen, Jacob P. Noel was one and served three years. In 1848, he was a School Director of Portsmouth. He was a Whig, while the Whig party lasted, and after that was a Republican.

In 1850, he was elected an Associate Judge and served till the Court expired in September, 1851.

In 1867, he was elected a Trustee of Wayne Township, and in 1868, he was appointed by the Council as one of the three City In-firmly Directors. From 1850, he lived in the Country for several years, but tiring of rural life came back to Portsmouth and engaged in the grocery business. He was a man of excellent judgment both in public and private affairs. Everyone had confidence in his honesty, integrity and christianity. His old age was filled with a conscious, ever present sense of duty well done, and his memory leaves a sweet incense. He died March 27th, 1872, of a cancer of the face leaving his widow surviving him.

John James Harper was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, July 6th, 1834. His father was Alexander Harper, a native of Berkeley County, West Virginia. His mother was Jane (Cunningham) Harper, a native of Fairfield County, Ohio. His father was a farmer and for some time a Justice of the Peace. When his family were grown he moved to Peoria County, Illinois, where he died in 1858 and his wife died in 1881. Our subject received a common school education and qualified himself for a teacher, which vocation he followed in Fairfield and Pickaway Counties. In 1853, he purchased an interest in a photograph outfit with one Horace Ellis, and together they came to Portsmouth, where Mr. Harper continued to reside until 1886. Ellis left the business to his partner who continued alone a few years. In 1856 Mr. Harper married Miss Emily Jones, of Portsmouth. Their four sons were John Ellis, who is a lawyer in Denver, Colorado; William A., a resident of Portsmouth; Samuel G., who is a Civil Engineer and the youngest Joseph H., who is a lawyer in Washington C. H. Our subject began the study of law in Portsmouth, in 1858, under Hutchins and Gaffy and was admitted to the bar April 25th, 1860. The office of Prosecuting Attorney in Ohio was created for the benefit of ambitious young lawyers and Mr. Harper was of that class. He began his political career as a Republican, and in 1861 was the nominee for Prosecuting Attorney on the Republican ticket. His opponent was George O. Newman, who had just returned from three months military service and he defeated Mr. Harper by a majority of 183. The vote stood George O. Newman, Democrat, 1640, Harper, Republican, 1457. In 1863, Mr. Harper was again a candidate for his party and Mr. Newman was on the Democratic ticket at that time. Judge Harper was on the War ticket and Mr. Newman's ticket was supporting Vallandigham for Governor. The vote stood Harper, 2208; Newman, 1795; majority 413. May 2nd, 1864, our subject enlisted in Company G, 141st O. V. I. and served until September 3, of the same year. In 1865, he was again the candidate of his party for Prosecuting Attorney. This time against Andrew J. McFann. The vote stood Harper, 2116; McFann, 1901; majority for Harper, 215. On January 3rd, 1867, he formed a law partnership with the late Colonel Henry E. Jones, under the name of Harper and Jones, which continued until February 9th, 1870. In January, 1868, he retired form the office of Prosecuting Attorney, and in the fall of that year was elected Presidential elector for his party. On February 9th, 1870, he formed a law partnership with F. C. Searl, which continued until December 27th, 1871. In the summer of 1871, he was nominated for Common Pleas Judge, and was elected over John Plyley, who was on the Democratic ticket. He received the phenomenal majority of 1606 in his county and 2168 in his district, composed of Scioto, Pike, Lawrence, Jackson and Vinton Counties. He was re-nominated and re-elected in 1876, and served until February, 1882. In that year, he formed a partnership with Hon. John K. Richards, now Solicitor General of the United States, which continued about one year. In November, 1884, he formed a partnership with John C. Milner and F. C. Searl as Harper, Searl and Milner, which continued until 1891. In 1874, his wife died. On June 22nd, 1875, he was married to Miss Anna Eliza Robinson of Washington, C. H. In 1886, he removed to Washington, C. H., where he now resides. Soon after moving there, he formed a partnership with Thomas W. Marchant, which continued until 1889. In 1892, his son Joseph, was admitted to the bar and was at once associated with his father in business, under the name of Harper and Harper. Judge Harper was always a believer in bimetalism. In 1896, he supported Bryan and Sewell, and in 1900, he also supported Bryan, for the Presidency, and has since been a supporter of the Democratic platform of 1896. As a lawyer, Judge Harper has been very successful. He examines his cases thoroughly, obtains and analyzes all the facts and informs himself of all the law bearing upon it and when he presents a case to a court or jury, he presents it with all the force of his intense nature. He is noted for his superior qualities as an advocate. He is a great believer in the ethics of the profession. When once he accepts a case, his client can rest assured of his best effort and service and that no labor or pains will be spared to present his case in the very best manner. During his residence in Portsmouth, he was frequently employed in important cases for the county and city, and once he was employed by the city to revise its ordinances. His standing is among the ablest lawyers of the state.

In personal appearance he is tall, erect, above the average height of fine manly and gentlemanly appearance. He always wears a silk hat and is most fastidious in his dress and personal appearance. His linen is always immaculate and his clothing of the best and most fashionable. He was always the best dressed lawyer at the Portsmouth Bar. While he was in politics he always had the support of his county for Congress, and might have been in Congress, had he had the ability to make political deals. That he scorned and hence he missed the honor of representing his District in the National Legislature. He enjoys the respect of the members of his profession throughout the state for his legal attainments.

HON. JAMES W. BANNON.

James William Bannon

was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, September 22nd, 1841. His father was Edward Bannon, who came to Portsmouth April 7th, 1837, a native of County, West Meath, Ireland. His mother was Bridget Dervin, a native of Dublin, Ireland. His parents were married in Ireland. He went to school in Portsmouth, until he was fifteen years of age. Among his teachers were Miss Rankin, Prof. Dodge, James H. Poe, John Bolton, Jennie Wheelock, and Prof. E. E. White. At the age of fourteen, he went into the employment of Emanuel Miller, and was a boy about the store. He remained with him until he was twenty-one years of age. While in Mr. Miller's employ he began the study of law under the direction of Judge Peck, then on the Supreme Bench. He read under Judge Peck for thirteen months. He went into Judge Towne's office January 1st, 1863, and was admitted to the bar, March 15th, 1864, on a certificate signed by Judge Wm. V. Peck and H. A. Towne. He enlisted in Company "E", 140th, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, May 2nd, 1864, for one-hundred days, and was mustered out September 3rd, 1864. He was the First Sergeant of the Company. After he came back from the war, he went into partnership with Judge H. A. Towne, for three years, until February 9th, 1869, and soon after formed a partnership with T. C. Anderson, under the name of Bannon and Anderson, which continued until 1878.

He was Common Pleas Judge of his subdivision from October, 1884, till February, 1887, and administered the office with great credit, but declined a re-election. He practiced alone until 1891, when he formed a partnership with his son, Henry T. Bannon; and during that same year his son Arthur H., was admitted to the bar, and became a member of the firm. He is in partnership with his two sons under the firm name of Bannon & Bannon. He was a member of the City School Board from 1874 to 1877. He has been President of the First National Bank since 1893. He has been Counsel in Ohio for the Norfolk & Western Railroad since it purchased the Scioto Valley, and held the same position for the Scioto Valley several years before. He is a Director of the Portsmouth & Kentucky Fire Brick Company, and in the Drew, Selby Company. He operates a farm of 1000 acres, and is engaged in the general practice of law with his sons as before stated. He was married April 24th, 1866, to Mary E. Smith, daughter of Josephine M. G. Smith. His sons are: Henry Towne and Arthur Hurd, who are his law partners; a daughter, Charlotte a teacher in the Portsmouth High School; and James W., an employe in the Drew, Selby Shoe Factory.

Judge Bannon has been remarkably successful in his career. He stands at the head of his profession as a lawyer, and has been equally successful in business enterprises. Any organization in which he has interested himself has prospered. He is generous and liberal to every worthy cause. He has always taken a great interest in polities, but has never been ambitious for himself. Socially, he is a most charming companion and his delineations of Irish character and humor are true to life. He is always at the command of his friends and the community in general desires to be in that class.

Noah J. Dever

was born August 15th, 1850, in Madison Township, Scioto County, Ohio. His father is William Dever and his mother's maiden name was Louisa McDowell. He is the only son of his parents, and the first born, but has eight sisters. His maternal great grand-father Bennett was a soldier in the war of 1812. His father was and is a farmer, and he was reared on his father's farm, until the age of 15 years, when he attended the Jackson High School. In 1867, he began teaching in the Common Schools, and taught and attended school at Lebanon alternately until 1871. In that year he took a Commercial Course in the Iron City Commercial College at Pittsburg, Pa. In October, 1871, he began the study of the law in the office of Messrs. Harper and Searl, in Portsmouth, and read law under their instructions until October, 1872, when he attended the Cincinnati Law School that fall and winter. In April, 1873, he was admitted to the bar by the District Court of Hamilton County, and immediately began the practice of law in Portsmouth. In May, 1873, he was appointed one of the School Examiners of Scioto County, Ohio, and held the office for twelve years. He was prouder of this appointment than any with which he was ever honored, because it was his first, and during the whole time he held the office, he was associated with the Reverend and Venerable Dr. Burr, as one of his colleagues on the same Board. It was a great honor for anyone to be associated, officially, or otherwise with Dr. Burr, and so Judge Dever regarded it. In April, 1873, he formed a law partnership with Judge F. C. Searl, as Searl & Dever, which continued until January 1st, 1879.

He then formed a law partnership with the Hon. Dan J. Ryan, as Dever & Ryan, which continued until February, 1881. In the fall of 1879, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County, Ohio, for the period of two years.

At his first election his majority was 144. During his first term as Prosecuting Attorney, the term was made three years, by the law of April 20th, 1881, Volume 780, O. L. 260. In October, 1881, he was re-elected by a majority of 1250 for three years. He discharged the duties of the office with ability and fidelity. In the fall of 1886, he was elected a Common Pleas Judge of the Second sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District. This election, in the fall of 1886, was the first state election held in Ohio, in November.

On April 21st, 1896, the County of Adams was taken from the first sub-division of the Fifth Common Pleas Judicial District and placed in the second sub-division of the Seventh Common Pleas Judicial District. This law took effect September 1st, 1896.

HON. WILLIAM W. JOHNSON.

On Feb. 8th, 1897, Judge Dever retired from the bench at the close of his second term and was succeeded by Hon. John C. Milner. Judge Dever's record on the Common Pleas bench compares favorably with a number of his able and distinguished predecessors. He possessed great executive ability and as a Judge, kept all his business well in hand. He never allowed his dockets to get behind. Since his retirement from the bench he has engaged in the practice of the law, with great success.

On July 27th, 1876, he was married to Miss Lydia Austin of Ironton, Ohio. She lived but a short time and on July 4th, 1878, he married Miss Mattie Gilliland of Jackson County. Of this marriage, three daughters have been born. Louisa, the eldest attended the Ohio State University from 1897 to 1899. She entered Mt. Holyoke (Mass.) Seminary in September of the latter year and was graduated therefrom in 1901. She is at present employed as a teacher in the Portsmouth High School. Martha, the second daughter is a student in the Portsmouth High School, and Alice, the third daughter, is in the Grammar School.

William W. Johnson

was born August 17th, 1826, in Muskingum County, Ohio, the son of Solomon Johnson and Elizabeth Wartenbe Johnson, his wife. His father was a native of Litchfield, Conn., and his mother of Ohio County, Virginia. His father and ancestors had been farmers, and so our subject was raised on a farm in Muskingum County. As a boy he was a diligent student and a tireless seeker after knowledge. He attended the Muskingum College at New Concord, one term. At the age of seventeen he began teaching, and continued this vocation at intervals until he was twenty-three years of age. He then began the study of law in the office of Charles C. Convene at Zanesville; and was admitted to the bar in 1852. He immediately located in the city of Ironton and began the practice of law. He took an active part in the formation and organization of the Republican party. In the fall of 1858, he was elected to the office of Common Pleas Judge, the first additional Judge in the Second sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District. He served until October 24th, 1867, when, owing to his resignation on account of the salary being only $1500, he was defeated by Martin Crain, in the Democratic landslide that year. He was re-appointed May 8th, 1870, and re-elected that fall for a term to expire February 9th, 1874. His election was unanimous, as the Democratic party declined to put any candidate against him; but he resigned the office on March 28th, 1872, on account of ill health. In 1874, he was nominated for Supreme Judge by his party, but was defeated. In 1876, he was appointed on the Supreme Court Commission for three years. In 1879, he was re-nominated for Supreme Judge and elected. He was re-elected in 1884, and resigned on account of failing health November 9th, 1886. On October 24th, 1854, he was married to Miss Ella Blockson, a daughter of Judge Blockson of Zanesville. They had two sons: William, born March 3rd, 1865, and died October 6th, 1865; Henry Blandy born March 4th, 1867, and died June 21st, 1883. He died March 2nd, 1887, at Ironton, Ohio.

The editor of this work had the good fortune to begin practicing law in Scioto County under Judge Johnson; and entertained for him the greatest admiration and respect for his judicial abilities. Judge Johnson was a natural born Judge. He had all those qualities which go to make up a learned and impartial interpreter of the law. On one occasion when he was about to enter into the trial of an important case, and was opposed on the other side by counsel of not long experience, his client suggested that he have the aid of older counsel. The writer said to this client that a case would try itself before Judge Johnson, and the event so proved, and even handed justice was administered in the decision of the case, though the plaintiff was represented by a beginner at the bar, and the defendant by counsel of thirty years experience. In the choice of principles which govern the decision of a case, Judge Johnson had the happy faculty of applying those which would meet the judgment of the ablest of his profession. Without any exceptions, he was as able a judge as ever occupied the Common Pleas Bench in Scioto County. The following additional character estimate has been furnished by the Hon. W. T. Spear, one of the present Supreme Judges of Ohio, with whom Judge Johnson was associated in his lifetime.

It was my good fortune to serve for a time with Judge Johnson in the Supreme Court, and thus I came to know him socially, and as a jurist. He impressed me as a widely informed man, and as one possessing accurate knowledge on many subjects. His knowledge of law was excellent. The underlying principles were with him as household words, and he was inclined to determine disputed questions more by applying to them the test of principle than the opinions of text writers or the decisions of Courts.

Governor Hoadley, than whom no man is better qualified to judge, once spoke of Judge Johnson in my hearing as a "wise Judge." The remark was eminently just. It well describes Judge Johnson's judicial character. He was learned in the law, and possessed in a high degree the discernment necessary to make proper use of that learning. He was not only learned but he was sagacious. Added to these qualities was a strong sense of justice and an independence of judgment which inclined him to stand by his own convictions, deliberately formed, whether in accord with the views of others or not. Hence he was a useful force in all relations of life.

Judge S. N. Owen, who served many years with Judge Johnson, and had abundant opportunity to form a correct opinion, once remarked that "his strength as a lawyer was more apparent in the consultation room in the discussion and determination of difficult legal questions than in his written opinions; that while they are sound, logical and able, many of them found in the State Reports, fail to do him justice; fail to adequately reflect his real learning and ability; that the Judge's devotion to substance and indifference to form sometimes resulted in a want of order and finish, and a lack of detail, which he was abundantly able to give, but at times inclined, from a pressure of work to omit." Judge Johnson's opinions are replete with sterling legal substance and indicate a clear comprehension of the law of the case. Judge Johnson was a power on the bench and served his State and his time faithfully and well.

Henry Abner Towne was born January 5th, 1826, in Litchfield, Herkimer County, N. Y. He was the only child of the Rev. Abner Towne and Sarah Eliza Vinton, his wife. His father had graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and in divinity at Andover, Mass. He was made the pastor of the Presbyterian church of Litchfield, N. Y., July 18th, 1825, and died there June 10th, 1826, in the very beginning of his usefulness, and when our subject was only five months old. His mother was a sister of the Hon. Samuel F. Vinton, so long a member of Congress from the Portsmouth District. After his father's lamentable death his mother returned to Amherst, Mass. Three years afterward she came to Gallipolis, Ohio, where she taught school. On May 28th, 1831, she was married to Dr. Robert Safford of Putnam, Ohio, now a part of Zanesville. Our subject entered Marietta college at the age of fifteen and graduated in 1845. In 1846, he engaged in teaching at Coshocton, Ohio, and while there studied law under David Spangler. He was admitted to the bar in Cincinnati, in 1849, and went to Marietta, Ohio. Till 1854, he was a partner in the law business with William A. Whittlesey. From 1854, till December 1st, 1855, he was in partnership with Davis Green. December 1st, 1855, he located in Portsmouth, Ohio. On December 18th, 1856, he married Miss Harriet Nye, daughter of Judge Arius Nye. She was a great-grand-daughter of Gen. Benjamin Tupper. They had one son, Robert Safford Towne, who has had a distinguished career, and who has a separate sketch herein. Our subject practiced alone in Portsmouth till September 28th, 1864, when he formed a partnership with James W. Bannon, as Towne & Bannon. In 1859, he was the Republican candidate for prosecuting attorney and was defeated by a vote as follows: Towne, Republican, 1423; Crain, Democrat, 1611; majority, 188.

In 1864 to 1867, he was one of the three school trustees of Portsmouth. His partnership with Hon. J. W. Bannon continued until February 9th, 1869, when he went on the bench as Common Pleas Judge. On March 8th, 1870, he resigned as Judge and on November 6th, 1870, formed a partnership with H. W. Farnham, which continued until April 30th, 1879, when the firm became Towne, Farnham and Purdum. On July 28th, 1871, he was elected President of the Home Mutual Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, and served one year.

In 1873, he was elected County Recorder of Scioto County on the Democratic ticket though he was always a Republican. Lewis E. Currie had been the Recorder and died in office. Mrs. Hannah E. Currie, his mother, had lost one son, Samuel, in the service of his Country and there was great sympathy for her. Most Republicans of the City thought some one ought to be placed on the ticket to hold the office for her. The Republican County Convention made a nomination and Judge Towne indicated that he would run independent for Mrs. Currie's benefit. He did so and was elected. He at once turned the office over to her and she attended to all the duties and collected all the fees for three years. Judge Towne was given to kind acts like this, but never made any parade about it. He was an original member of the Portsmouth Library Board and served as such until his death. He was President of the Board most of the time. A life size portrait of him hangs in the Library. In 1879, he was elected Mayor of the City of Portsmouth and served one term. In 1880, he was Supervisor of the Federal Census for his Congressional District. In January, 1882, he went to Washington, D. C., and served as Clerk of the Committee for the District of Columbia during the Forty-seventh Congress. In his political views he was first a Whig. After the Republican party was organized he became a Republican, and was such during his life. He was a stockholder and Director in the Scioto Star Fire Brick Works and a stockholder in the Globe Iron Company at Jackson, Ohio. He was a first-class business man and a business lawyer. In the latter capacity he had the confidence of the entire community. He was a communicant and vestryman in All Saints Church. Judge Towne was a large and corpulent man. He had a head and features like the pictures of Cicero. He was entirely bald on the top of his head but had a fringe of beautiful brown hair below his crown. Until he retired from business he was always shaven smooth and had fine regular features. The portrait herein was taken after he began to wear a beard. The duties of the advocate and cross-examiner were distasteful to him, but as a counselor he was unexcelled.

He had a complete academical and legal education. As a companion he was most agreeable and entertaining. His entire social discourse was brimful and running over with the most subtle and pleasing humor.

After the adjournment of the Forty-seventh Congress, he was unable to transact any further business. He went to Santa Barbara, California, where he died February 13th, 1888. His remains were brought to Portsmouth and a public funeral was held in All Saints Church. His body was taken to Marietta, Ohio, for interment. He deserved no enemies and probably had none. He was a Humanitarian in the fullest sense of the word, was always ready to do a kind and gracious act for the benefit of any human being, however lowly, and always favored and aided every project for the elevation or assistance of mankind. In Portsmouth his memory is sacredly cherished by all who knew him.

William K. Hastings was born on the sixteenth day of October 1823, in Columbiana County, Ohio. He was the second of eight children, whose parents were Isaac Hastings and Jane Woodside. His father, a native of Fayette County, Pennsylvania, went to Columbiana County in 1814, and followed, in the main through life, mechanical and agricultural pursuits, dying in March, 1874, on his farm in Columbiana County, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. The mother of our subject was a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hastings was early taught to labor. His early education was obtained at the advanced schools of those days. At the age of twenty-one he began life as a school teacher, and followed this profession about six years. It was during his leisure hours at this calling that he read law. In the spring of 1852, he was admitted to the bar. In 1853, he went to Jackson and taught school for one term. In the spring of 1854, he entered on the practice of law in Jackson. He was mayor of Jackson for two terms. He was Prosecuting Attorney of Jackson County from 1864 to 1868, serving two terms. He was appointed Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the Seventh District, Second Sub-division, March 28th, 1872, and served until February 9th, 1874. He was at first a Democrat and afterwards a Republican when that party was organized. He was married on the 14th of May, 1857, to Mary Ann Nelson, a native of this county, and a daughter of John Nelson, merchant of Jackson, and there were six children of this marriage. He died in 1876, at Philadelphia, Pa.

Porter Du Hadway, of Jackson, was born on the 7th day of April, 1828, in Jackson County. He was the sixth of eight children, whose parents were Daniel Du Hadway and Elizabeth Porter. His father was a native of Paris, France, and came, at the age of two years, with his parents to the state of Delaware, where they lived until their death, near Dover, in that State, his mother living to the advanced age of one hundred and four years. His father was in the war of 1812, and at its conclusion went to Chillicothe. He remained there one year, and then located in Jackson County. His father was a shoemaker and a farmer. The mother of the subject of this sketch was a native of New York, and at the time of her marriage, was living in Athens County, then a portion of Jackson County. She came with her husband to Jackson County at an early date of its existence, and died in 1835, her husband dying in 1875, at the age of ninety-three years. Our subject lived with his parents until the death of his mother. After this event his father returned to France, where he remained for several years, returning in 1844. At the age of seventeen, Mr. Du Hadway began the shoe-maker trade. This occupation confined his attention for the greater part of his time until 1857. In 1847, he came to Jackson to work at his trade and also attended school under the Hon. J. W. Longbon for a period of two years. In 1855, he began the reading of law under the direction of Hon. Levi Dungan. In 1857, he was elected Clerk of the Courts, which office he held until 1860. In this year he was admitted to the bar. He began the practice of law in Jackson, and followed this profession exclusively up to 1873. In the fall of this year he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas on the Democratic ticket by a majority of seven hundred, in the Second Sub-division of the Seventh Ohio Judicial District, composed of Jackson, Vinton, Pike, Scioto, and Lawrence Counties and served one term.

He was married on the tenth day of September, 1850, to Mary Morse, a daughter of Eli Morse, and a native of Jackson County. She died in October, 1853, leaving two children. He was married a second time to Mary A. Bennett, on the twenty-fifth day of December, 1857, by whom he was the father of four children. He was Mayor of Jackson for three terms and City Solicitor for two terms. He never solicited any office except the clerkship of court, which he held in 1857. Politically, he was a Democrat of the Jackson school. His religious views, if he had any, are unknown to the writer. He died November 9th, 1889.

was born at Canonsburg, Washington County, Pennsylvania, October 17th, 1824, the son of William Tripp and Sarah Hast, his wife, both of whom were natives of Eastern Pennsylvania. They emigrated to Western Pennsylvania in 1800, and were married there in 1817. Our subject was their fourth child. In 1832, his parents removed to Carroll County, Ohio. He attended school near Carrollton for ten years of winters, and spent two terms at Carrollton Academy. He read law with his brother, John H. Tripp, of Carrollton, in 1848 and 1849. He was married June 7th, 1849, to Christina Smeltz, of Carroll County, Ohio. They removed at once to Jackson County where he read law in the summer and taught school in the winter. In 1855, he was elected a Justice of the Peace of his Township, but resigned his office at the end of two years. In 1857, he was admitted to the bar and moved to the town of Jackson, where he has since resided. In 1858, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Jackson County and re-elected in 1860. In 1863, he was elected to the Legislature and re-elected in 1865. On October 17th, 1864, he went into the military service of the United States in the Second Independent Battery of Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery as Senior First Lieutenant and served until December 19th, 1864. The Company guarded rebel officers at Johnson's Island until December 1st, 1865, and after that was in Cleveland the remaining twenty-five days of its service. In 1872, he was elected from Jackson County to the Third Constitutional Convention of Ohio. In 1878, he was elected Common Pleas Judge in the 2d Sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District composed of the Counties of Scioto, Pike, Jackson, Lawrence and Vinton. He was re-elected in 1883 and served from February 9th, 1879, to February 9th, 1889. Judge Tripp has had nine children: William L., who resides at Jackson; Kate, married to C. H. Worth, a banker, of Muscogee, Indian Territory; Vinitia F. married Frank Crumit, a banker, of Jackson, and is now deceased; James M., deceased, has a separate sketch herein; Mary L. Married to Thomas Moore of Jackson; Minnie Bell married to James C. Poor, a merchant of Jackson. She is now deceased. Gertrude married Frank R. Stewart, now in the employ of the Government and residing in Arizona; Elizabeth Jane, died in infancy; Stella, single and resides with her father. Judge Tripp's wife died in 1882 and he never remarried. He gave up the practice of the law in the fall of 1894 and is living a quiet and retired life, enjoying the season of old age. He has all his faculties, physical and mental and takes life easy. Judge Tripp, in the days of his activity, was one of the most forceful lawyers in the County. He has been a member of the Methodist church, since 1859, and lives up to it. His integrity was always a tower of strength. When he said anything he meant it, and believed in it, and so did all the County. When he practiced, he stood at the head of the local bar. As a lawyer and a judge, he never violated his own conscience. He never performed a duty in a half hearted, or slipshod way in all his life. Whatever he undertook he put all the force of life and character in it and made it go. He had the confidence of all the people in Jackson County, and has it yet. He was always careful and painstaking and got out of every case everything in it. As a judge, he investigated every case with fairness and impartiality. His knowledge of the law was thorough and his decisions were correct. It is said he was never reversed by the Supreme Court. He had great executive and administrative ability and as the result business never lagged in his court. His course in controlling the court and in pushing business saved large sums of money to the county. He dignified and honored every office he ever held, and was faithful to every trust he undertook. He was always a safe and true counselor. In his well earned and honorable retirement, he enjoys the respect and confidence of all his fellow citizens.

James Madison Tripp was born in Jackson County, Ohio, January 13th, 1857, the son of the Hon. James Tripp, who has a separate sketch herein. He attended the public schools of Jackson until June, 1873. In the fall of that year, he entered Ohio University and graduated in the Classical Course in June, 1876. After graduation he began the study of law with his father and was admitted to the bar by the District Court of Vinton County, at McArthur, at the fall term, 1878. Directly after, he began the practice of law in Jackson. In 1880, he delivered the Master's oration at his Alma Mater. It was pronounced most able. He was one of the founders of the Jackson Journal in 1882. In 1888, he was nominated for Common Pleas Judge of the Second Sub-division of the Fifth Judicial District and succeeded his father in that office, February 9th, 1889. He served the term of five years with credit and distinction, but declined a re-nomination and election. In 1894, Governor McKinley appointed him a Trustee of his Alma Mater, Ohio University. In 1889, he formed a partnership with Hon. David Davis, lately a Common Pleas Judge in Hamilton County and together they practiced law in Hamilton and Jackson Counties. On January 23rd, 1878, he was married to Miss Emma A., daughter of Orlando C. Miller, deceased. They had two children: Homer Floyd, born November 9th, 1878, was educated in the Jackson Public Schools, Ohio University at Athens, and the Columbian University at Washington, D. C. He is now a draughtsman in the United States Geological Survey Office at Washington, D. C. His second son, James Orlando, born December 6th, 1882, was graduated from the Jackson High School, and is now a student of the Columbian University Law School at Washington, D. C. Our subject was a faithful and diligent student of law, and industrious and painstaking in all his business. As a judge, he was impartial and able.

William Dow James

was born near Piketon, December 1st, 1853. His father was David James and his mother, Charlotte Beauchamp. His first ancestor in this country came over from Germany in 1750, and located in Bedford County, Virginia. His grandfather, grand-son of the immigrant, was born in 1785, and came to the Northwest Territory, shortly after 1794, with his parents and located in Gallia County. He resided with his parents in Gallia till 1805, when he moved to Pike County in the Beaver Valley, ten miles from Piketon. He married Miss Allison, and nine sons and daughters were born to them. Among them was David, the father of our subject. He became a prominent and successful farmer. Our subject remained at home attending school and receiving instructions privately until he was about twenty years of age, when he began the study of law under John T. Moore. This was continued until Mr. Moore located in Jackson in 1875. He then prosecuted his law studies with George D. Cole, teaching school in winter and reading the tex-books in summer. This course he followed until 1877, when he was admitted to the bar and opened a law office in Piketon. Here he remained four years. In 1879, he was elected Mayor of Piketon and held the office until he removed to Waverly. He continued to practice in Pike and the adjoining Counties until 1893, when he was elected Judge of the Second Sub-division of the Seventh Judicial District. He made quite a reputation as a trial lawyer and advocate while at the bar, and his reputation as a man and as a citizen is the highest. In 1882, he was married to Miss Terrena F. Vulgamore. At the close of his first term on the bench, he could have been renominated and re-elected without opposition, and it was much regretted by the lawyers of his district that he did not so determine, but he felt that he had made all the reputation he desired as a judge, and he peremptorily declined a renomination. Immediately on his retirement, and he peremptorily declined a renomination. Immediately on his retirement, he removed to Cincinnati, and opened a law office in the Blymyer Building, No. 514 Main Street, where he is acquiring a large clientage. His wife died May 13th, 1898, and he has since remarried to Miss Louise Adams, of Chicago, Illinois.

Judge James is affable in his manners, both on and off the bench. He has a clear and logical mind. His mind after a survey of the facts, grasps the points in a case, and his correct legal training enables him quickly to make the application of the law to the facts. He is painstaking in the preparation and trial of his case. On the bench, he was never hurried in making his decisions, but when announced they showed careful and though consideration of the questions involved. He had the judicial quality to withhold judgment till he had fully considered the case and until he was satisfied as to the principles governing it. Once satisfied, his decision was made and was usually sustained in the higher Court. As a lawyer he was always careful and thorough and his client could be sure that the best course would be adopted and the best results obtained.

A friend speaking of Judge James says: "He is able to perform and does perform exacting labors. He is a patient reader and succeeds in ascertaining the results of what he needs. He is affable as a man, a citizen, a lawyer and a judge. As a lawyer he was connected with all the important cases of his County. As a judge, he gave great consideration to his cases, and was without prejudice or partiality."

Another friend speaking of him says: "He is a man of affable, courteous and at the same time, dignified manners, and is very popular among his associates by reason of his genial and social manner. As a lawyer he is a fluent speaker, with a clear, clean, logical mind, quick to grasp the points of a case and to use them to his advantage, and his power before a jury is widely recognized. As a judge, he was noted for his fairness and keen love of justice, and with his thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the law, administered the complex and onerous duties of that position with the highest credit to himself and to his profession."

William H. Middleton was born at Locust Grove, O., on the 19th of July, 1864, son of Rev. Wilder H. Middleton, of the Ohio M. E. Conference, and Cynthia

Barley Middleton, daughter of Cornelius Bailey, one of the pioneer residents of the Scioto Valley. His early life was a roving one, his father calling taking him to various towns in Southern Ohio, in the public schools of which he received his early education. Later he attended the private school of Professor Poe, of Chillicothe, and the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio.

He began life for himself at fifteen years of age as a teacher and followed that work for several years, teaching in the public schools at Pileton, Waverly and other towns. His inclinations drew him to the law and in 1888 he entered the law office of Judge W. D. James, at Waverly. In 1889, he was appointed Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue by M. Boggess, which office he held until his admission to the bar in 1891. After his admission to the bar, he continued with his preceptor until the latter was elected to the bench.

In 1896, he was nominated and after one of the hardest political battles ever fought in the county, was elected Prosecuting Attorney, receiving 192 votes above the head of the ticket. He continued in this office until his election to the bench in 1898.

On the 24th day of June, 1897, he was married to Miss Minnie Howard, and one child has blessed the union—Wilder Howard, aged one year.

He is a member of the Orient Lodge, No. 321, F. & A. M., Waverly, Ohio; Chillicothe Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M. and Niobe Lodge, No. 370, K. of P.

Judge Middleton comes of a long line of ministers; hence, in his moral and mental fibre, he is possessed of that conscious sensibility so essential to an upright and just judge. It matters not how young and inexperienced a judge may be, or how old and learned he may be, if he is not possessed of a natural, moral and innate honesty, he cannot make a just judge. Honesty of purpose supplants all. Without it, he floats a buoyant pestilence upon the great ocean of truth. A friend says of him—"Having an intimate acquaintance with Hon. William H. Middleton from his youth up, as a country school-teacher, as a student of law and as a practitioner, I bear witness that the bright jewel of his crown is honesty and integrity of purpose, a man of native modesty, but possessed of a courage in the exercise of his moral and intellectual convictions. Ever dignified, always genial, and at all times agreeable. We bespeak that his integrity and honesty and never failing common sense and cautious sagacity, his powers of analysis, his quickness of intuition to grasp the principles of law as well as the right and morality of a controversy, shall win for him the approval of the bench, the bar and the people.

Henry Collings, the son of Hon. George Collings and Harriett Comer, his wife, was born on his father's farm in Monroe Township, March 15th, 1853.

He attended school in Manchester and at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, in 1869, 1870 and 1871, when he gave up his course. He took up the study of law in the fall of 1872, with Colonel Oscar F. Moore, of Portsmouth, and was admitted in April, 1874. He began the practice of law in Manchester, where he has since continued to reside. He was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Adams County, and served one term. In the fall of 1891, he was a candidate for Common Pleas Judge in the First Sub-division of the Fifth Common Pleas district, composed of Adams, Brown and Clermont Counties, when there was a nominal Democratic majority of about 1500. He had 800 majority in Adams County and was elected. His county was taken from the First Sub-division of the Fifth District by the Legislature, and placed in the Second Sub-division of the Seventh District, and in the latter he was nominated and elected Common Pleas Judge in 1896, and was re-elected in 1901 without opposition. Judge Collings has always been a Republican in his political faith and practice, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

He was married September 20th, 1882, to Alice Gibson, daughter of Rev. T. R. Gibson. There are two children of this marriage, Henry Davis and Mary King. Judge Collings had a reputation as an able lawyer before he went on the bench, and has more than sustained it. He is well trained as a lawyer, has a clear judicial mind, and in his investigations groups all the essential points of a case and, when he has determined it, the opposing party is satisfied that he has determined it impartially and according to his conception of the law. In addition to his excellent qualities as a judge he has a fine sense of humor, which is continually asserting itself and makes Judge Collings' intercourse with the lawyers and his best friends have a spice which is most entertaining and delightful. But as he inherited this most entertaining quality from his distinguished father, we do not propose to hold him responsible for it. Judges, like poets, are born, not made. Our subject was born to be a judge, has found the vocation for which he is best suited, and is filling his destiny to the satisfaction of all who have business in his Court. It is a happy fate for the Judge and happy for his constituents that he struck the job for which he was best intended.

General Joseph Darlington was born July 19th, 1765, within four miles of Winchester, Virginia, on a plantation owned by his father, Meredith Darlington. It was a pleasant home with delightful surroundings, as the writer can testify.

He was the fourth of seven children, six sons and a daughter. He grew up on his father's farm, getting such education as the times afforded. He was too young to have been a soldier in the Revolution, but old enough to imbibe the spirit of the times. When he was twelve years of age, six hundred of the prisoners, British and Hessians, taken at the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, were kept on his father's plantation, from that time until the close of the war. A part of them were lodged in his father's barn and he spent much of his time listening to their wonderful stories of travel and adventure. These stories filled him with a desire to see the world and when he was twenty-one, he begged his father to give him money that he might travel. He went to Philadelphia, and from thence took a sea voyage to New Orleans, and returned by way of the Ohio river. He lived very extravagantly and spent his money freely, while seeing the world. On his return trip from New Orleans, he met Miss Sarah Wilson, at Romney, W. Va., and promptly fell in love with her. She was an heiress and owned slaves and a great deal of land. She had many suitors, but Darlington was the best looking and won the lady. They were married at Romney, March 18th, 1790. At the ceremony he was dressed in a ruffled shirt, coat, waistcoat, knee breeches, silk stockings, great shoe buckles and had a wonderful suit of hair, pomaded and powdered, and done up in a queue as long as a man's arm. They resided in Romney until about the close of 1790 and then went to Fayette County, Pennsylvania, where his wife owned a farm. There they united with the Presbyterian Church, and there two of their sons were born. While in Fayette County, General Darlington was a County Commissioner, and began his long career of office holding. In October, 1794, he and his wife and their two children came to Limestone, Kentucky, where they lived until 1797. He went from there to the mouth of Cabin Creek, where he kept a ferry. In the spring of 1797, believing that the county seat would be at Washington, below the mouth of Brush Creek, he moved there. When the county was organized on July 10th, 1797, he was appointed its Judge of Probate, by Governor St. Clair. In 1803, he removed to West Union and built a double hewed log house in the hill opposite Cole's spring. He was a member of the Legislature from Adams County from November 24th, 1799, until January 29th, 1801. He also represented the same county from November 23rd, 1801, until January 23rd, 1802. He was one of the three members from Adams County in the first Constitutional Convention which sat from November 1st, 1802, until the 29th of the same month. At that time he was a Republican and opposed to Governor St. Clair, and, on November 3rd, he voted against listening to a speech from Governor St. Clair. On November 6th, he was appointed on the committee to prepare the second article of the constitution, and on the 8th of November, he presided over the committee of the whole. He was on the committee to prepare the third article on the judiciary, and on the committee to print the journal of the convention. He was present at every session in the first Legislature of the state. He was in the Senate and served from March 1st, 1803, until April 16th, following, at which session Scioto County was organized by an act of the Legislature. On the 16th of April, 1803, he was elected one of the first three Associate Judges of Adams County, but resigned February 16th, 1804, as the work was too slow for him. On September 10th, 1804, he was commissioned by the Governor, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 1st Regiment, 1st Brigade, 2nd Division, Ohio Militia, and thus became Lieutenant-Colonel Darlington. This Brigade was commanded by General William Lucas of Scioto County, who departed this life, September 10th, 1805. He had been appointed on the 22nd of October, 1804. He is buried in the Lucas burying ground in Rush Township. March 17th, 1806, Colonel Darlington was made a Brigadier General to take the place of Gen. Lucas. He was appointed a Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of Adams County, August 3rd, 1802, and held this office by successive appointments until August, 1847. He was appointed Clerk of the Supreme Court from this county about the same time, and held that office until his death on the 2nd of August, 1851. He served as Recorder of Adams County from 1803 to 1810, and again from September 1813 until 1834. Any one examining the old records in the Recorder's office and Clerk's office of Adams County will find whole volumes written out in his old-fashioned copper plate style. He always used a quill pen and a soft piece of buckskin for a penwiper. In 1885, he became an elder in the Presbyterian Church at West Union and held that office the remainder of his life. His personal appearance would attract notice anywhere. He was above average height, somewhat corpulent, had fine regular features, dark brown eyes with heavy brows, and a large head and forehead. He had a manly bearing which impressed all who knew him. The business of his office was admirably systematized and all his habits of daily life were regular and methodical. It is said of him that he did the same thing every day and at the same hour and moment for fifty years. His neighbors set their clocks by him, as he went and returned from his office with such exactness as to time. He had a habit of winding his watch at a certain hour every day, and while writing in the Clerk's office, he would lay it down beside him, and when the hands pointed to that hour, he would take it up and wind it. He was a man of excellent judgment and many matters of his neighbors were submitted to him, and when he decided, his disposition was acquiesced in as satisfactory to all sides. When the Whig party was formed, he became a Whig. While not anti-slavery in his views, he was opposed to the war with Mexico. He was an entertaining talker and always had something useful and instructive to say. He had much dignity, his life was on a plane above the ordinary and the people who knew him well felt that they were looking up to him. His whole soul, conscience, principles, opinions, worldly interests and everything in his life was made subservient to his religion. His life made all who knew him feel that there was truth and reality in the Christian religion, and he lived it every day. In his opinion his crowning earthly honor was that he had served fifty years in the Presbyterian Church. Four years before his death, he had retired from all public business. All his life he had had a dread of the Asiatic cholera. When that pestilence visited West Union in the summer of 1851, the first victim died June 26th. By some irony of fate, he was the last and died of the dread disease on the last day it prevailed, August 2nd. There were but four persons present at his interment. Had he died of any ordinary disease, the whole county would have attended. General Darlington was a fair example of the good and true men, who built well the foundation of the great state of Ohio.

Governor Thomas Kirker was born in Ireland in 1760, and lived in that country until he reached the age of nineteen. His father then emigrated to Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. His father died soon after their removal to America. He remained in Lancaster County until 1790. Nothing is found of his life in that period, but in that year he married Sarah Smith a young woman of excellent family and great worth. She was several years his junior. Soon after his marriage, they removed to Kentucky, running the gauntlet of Indian hostilities as they floated down the Ohio river. In 1794, they crossed the Ohio and settled in Manchester, Adams County, Ohio. In 1796 he removed to Liberty Township, Adams County. At that time he had a wife and several children. They were the first settlers to locate in the county outside of Manchester. He was a member of the first Court of Quarter Sessions held in the County under the Territorial Government at Manchester, in September, 1797. He was also a County Commissioner under the territorial government. He was the leading man in that settlement and was usually the foremost in public matters of all kinds. By common consent he settled quarrels among his neighbors who looked to him for counsel. He had a reputation for good judgment. When delegates were elected to the first Constitutional Convention in 1802, he was sent as one of them. He was a member of the lower house of the Legislature from Adams County from March 1st, 1803, until April 16th, 1803. He entered the Ohio Senate at the second legislative session, closing February, and served in that body continuously until the thirteenth legislative session, closing February 16th, 1815. In that time he was Speaker in the Senate in the fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, tenth, eleventh and thirteenth sessions. From November 4th, 1807, to December 12th, 1808, he was acting Governor of the State by reason of a vacancy in the office of Governor and his then being Speaker of the Senate. At the fifteenth legislative session December 15th, 1816, until January 28, 1817, he was a member of the House and its Speaker. At the twentieth legislative session, beginning December 3rd, 1821, he was again in the Senate form Adams and served in it continuously until February 8th, 1825. On January 17th, 1821, he was appointed an Associate Judge from Adams County, and served until October 30th, 1821, when he resigned. In 1824, he was presidential elector and voted for Clay. From 1808 until his death, he was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church in West Union, O., and his son William, was also an elder in the same church from 1826, during his father's lifetime. He sat in the Legislature longer than any one man except John Bigger of Warren County, who served in 21 sessions. Mr. Kirker was not a brilliant man, but he was honest, conscientious and possessed of sound judgment and integrity that was unselfish and incorruptible. He was respected, esteemed, and exerted an influence that was felt in the entire circle of his acquaintance. He died February 20th, 1837. He reared a family of thirteen children, and has a host of descendants, in different parts of the United States. He succeeded Governor Tiffin, March 4th, 1807, when he resigned to enter the United States Senate and served to the end of his term. He served as Governor one year, or until December 12th, 1808, when Samuel Huntington succeeded him. The vote stood Huntington, 7,293; Worthington, 5,601; Kirker, 3,397.

Jean Pierre Roman Bureau (De Montrou) was born at Beton Bazoché, Canton de Villier, St. George Arondisement de Provins, Department de Seine et Marne, March 21st, 1770. Roman Grandjean was his god-father and Françoise nee le Vicaine (Fromonte), was his god-mother. His father was an officer who served with distinction in the army under the reign of Louis XV., returning home only to have a severe quarrel with his father. He left home, and, being very angry, vowed never to return and to go where he would never be heard from. His mother's maiden name was Marie Romaine Cruchet. She was the daughter of a distinguished and wealthy surgeon of Paris. In addition to one brother, Toussaint, who was in the army and died an old bachelor, he had four sisters: Angélique, the wife of M. Clars; Genevieve, the wife of M. Galbot; Romaine, who died young; and Marie Rose, the wife of Doctor Naret. Playing one day with two companions young Bureau attempted a high jump from a tree and paid the penalty for his recklessness with a fractured hip. Although he received the utmost skill that love and the science of the best surgeons of Paris could bring to bear, his injury was pronounced a compound one and hopelessly incurable. His mother, a woman of great piety and force of character, was not dismayed; placing the suffering lad on a well padded pillion securely fastened upon the back of a sure-footed ass, this valiant woman made, on foot, a pilgrimage to the shrine of our Lady of Liesse, walking beside her stricken son. At the end of nine days, their fervent prayers were answered, and miraculously cured, the boy left his crutches on the walls of the little chapel and returned to Paris. He always had a slight lameness, a reminder, no doubt, of the favor granted him by Heaven. The medal given the lad at Liesse after his cure is in the possession of the family of one of his grand-daughters, the late Mrs. Madeline Vinton Dahlgren. Witnessing with dismay some of the excesses of that awful French Revolution, young Bureau emigrated to America. His passport was executed and delivered February 14th, 1790, and was signed by Louis, King of France, and the Comte de Montmarin. Embarking February 19th, 1790, he arrived at Alexandria, Virginia, May 3rd, 1790, and the same year went to Gallipolis, Ohio, where already a few French emigrants had settled. Enduring his share of the toils and sufferings incident to a new settlement but not having the physical strength nor inclination for manual labor he changed his location to Marietta, where his fine education enabled him to open a French school for the youth of the place, which he conducted with great success, giving satisfaction to both patrons and scholars. In December, 1792, he returned to Gallipolis, Ohio, where he remained and became a successful merchant, occupying at different times the positions of Clerk of the Court, Justice of the Peace, Postmaster, etc. Very few men filled so many offices, conferred by their fellow-citizens, with so much credit to themselves and so much satisfaction to their constituents, as Mr. Bureau. He was Major in the first regiment of militia organized in Gallia County, hence his title. He was naturalized February 10th, 1806, and was Postmaster at Gallipolis from April 1st, 1806, to October 3rd, 1807. From December 7th, 1807, until February 22nd, 1808, he represented Washington, Muskingum, Gallia and Athens Counties in the House. He was then elected to represent Gallia and Scioto Counties in the Senate, and served from December 5th, 1809, to February 12th, 1812, during the eighth, ninth and tenth sessions. At the fourteenth legislative session, from December 3rd, 1832, until March 9th, 1835, he represented Gallia and Meigs Counties in the House. In the great question which arose at that time relative to the right of the Legislature to instruct Senators from Ohio in Congress, Bureau advocated the right to instruct and again showed his grasp of affairs, and that he possessed a true and broad conception of a Republican form of Government. He retired from public life and engaged in the business of merchandising, which he continued as long as he had the physical ability to attend to the labors thereof. When salt was discovered in Virginia, in the valley of the Kanawha, he at once commenced borings which resulted in his becoming a very successful salt manufacturer. February 19th, 1799, he married Madeline Francoise Charlotte Marret, third daughter of Joseph and Madeline Marret, who had been of the same party as Bureau when, in 1790, he fled from France, and had also gone to Gallipolis. She was at the time of her marriage, a pretty, witty and vivacious young girl of fifteen, slight, of medium height, with dark brown eyes and black hair, and straight, well-cut features. At that time there was no Justice of the Peace in that part of Ohio, and being obliged to obtain one from Point Pleasant, the ceremony was performed in a boat on the Ohio river so as to be within the jurisdiction of Virginia. She died on June 22nd, 1834. The children of this marriage, were: Madeleine Romaine, born November 20th, 1799, married Doctor Francis Julius Le Moyne of Washington, Pennsylvania; Romaine Madeleine, born January 6th, 1802, became the wife of the Hon. Samuel Finley Vinton, one of Ohio's most distinguished men and whose daughter was the late Mrs. M. V. Dahlgren; Marie, born February 26th, 1810, and died April 2nd, 1810; and Charles Louis Valcoulon, born August 25th, 1812. The latter spent some years in Athens College, Ohio, and later studied medicine and practised his profession. Major Bureau's daughters were given every educational advantage at that time to be obtained, going to school in Chillicothe, Gallipolis, and finally to Mme. Grileau's French boarding school in Philadelphia. The journey to the latter place was made by the young girls on horseback from Wheeling, accompanied by their father and the negro man servant following in a wagon with the baggage. Major Bureau died in Gallipolis, December 31st, 1854, aged 81 years and 10 months. He was buried in the same enclosure with his wife, daughter Mary, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Vinton and their son, John, in the old graveyard at Gallipolis. He was of medium height, broad shouldered and very strong. He was fair, and had blue eyes, rather heavy eyebrows and close trimmed hair and beard, full forehead and head. He had all the quick wit and observation of a Frenchman, and was exceedingly vivacious and polished in manner and bearing. He was a devoted and generous parent, husband and friend. He made money and, although he spent it freely, he left quite a large property. He was one of the most esteemed, popular and useful men of Gallia County and respected by all who knew him. It may well be said of Mr. Bureau that he was well fitted to be a leader to his countrymen, and in no instance was he ever known to betray the confidence reposed in him. To such men, its founders, the State of Ohio owes much. By their hardships and bravery it was reclaimed from the wilderness and savages, and their wisdom and untiring zeal gave it the solid foundation upon which its greatness and stability now depend.

Governor Robert Lucas was born at Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, Virginia, April 1st, 1781. His father was William Lucas, born in 1742, in Virginia. He was a Revolutionary soldier. He enlisted February 13th, 1777, for three years in Captain Nathaniel Welch's Company, also known as Captain 'Taliaferros' Company and as Captain Thomas Minor's Company in the Second Virginia Regiment commanded by Colonel William Brent and also by Colonel Gregory Smith. His name last appears in 1770. His wife Susannah was born in 1745.

He is said to have owned lands and negroes, but to have been hostile to the institution of slavery. He had five sons and three daughters. His sons were Joseph, Robert, John, William and Samuel. William and John came to the mouth of the Scioto in 1796, and located land at the mouth of Pond Creek. Their father voted for Jefferson, in Virginia, for President in 1800, and at once started for Adams County in the Northwest Territory. He located near Lucasville. His wife died May 4th, 1809, and he died in July, 1814. Both are buried at Lucasville and their graves marked. His daughters all married, one a Buckles, one a Creamer, and one a Sternberger. Joseph Lucas, through a daughter, is an ancestor of the Hibbs family. Robert Lucas, our subject, was the most distinguished of the family. He was but nine years old when he came to the Northwest Territory. He had a private tutor who taught him mathematics and surveying, and he was an excellent surveyor before his majority. That occupation enabled him to keep busy and make money. He was Surveyor of Scioto County in 1805, and was Justice of the Peace in 1806. On April 4th, 1810, he married Eliza Brown, daughter of John Brown, the first citizen of Portsmouth. The ceremony was said by William Crull, Justice of the Peace. She died in two years, leaving an infant daughter. On March 7th, 1816, he married Miss Friendly A. Sumner, the ceremony being performed by William Power, Justice of the Peace. Robert Lucas had a great deal of military spirit and soon became prominent in the Ohio Militia. As early as 1804, he was a Bridge Inspector with the rank of Major. In 1807, he had a Militia Company in Portsmouth and was its Captain. In 1808, he was elected to the House as Representative of Scioto County. In 1811, he was lister of Wayne Township.

He went to the War of 1812 and was in Hull's surrender. He managed to escape when the surrender was made and showed such military ability that he was made a Captain in the regular army, and is said to have been made a Colonel, but he was out of it in 1814, and in that fall was elected to the Ohio senate, in which he served continuously until 1822. In 1820, he appears to have been a Presidential elector for Monroe, and in 1828, for Jackson. He was again in the Senate from 1824 until 1830, except in 1829. From 1832 to 1836, he was Governor of Ohio. In 1832, he was chairman of the Democratic National Convention.

In 1824, he removed from Scioto to Pike County, where he resided until 1838, when he was appointed Governor of the Territory of Iowa by President Van Buren. In his youth he was a boisterous fellow, fond of all kinds of mischief and devilry, but when he reached Iowa he joined the church and favored religion and morality. He worked for temperance and against gambling and associated vices.

His influence is said to have made Iowa a prohibition state. In 1841, President Tyler removed him, and he took up his residence on a farm near Iowa City. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention, which met in Iowa City in 1844, from Johnson County. He was made Chairman of the Committee on Executive Department, and a member of the Committee on Boundaries. He was the first governor of Iowa Territory. He was the first Brigadier General of Militia in Scioto County. He delivered the oration at the farmers' celebration held July 8th, 1868, on Major Bonser's farm on Little Scioto. His private secretary in Iowa, Theodore Parvin wrote and published a sketch of his life in pamphlet form.

He died February 7th, 1853, and his grave is suitably marked in the cemetery at Iowa City. While territorial Governor of Iowa no one who was a gambler or drinking man could receive an appointment from him. He stood for all that was good and true with all the ardour of his intense nature. He was a man, very much the same kind as General Jackson whom he admired and followed. He was a shrewd politician or else he could not have remained in the Ohio Senate eight years successively representing such counties as Pike, Gallia, Scioto and Jackson, and from 1824 to 1828, he represented Pike, Scioto and Lawrence. He never failed to make the most of a political situation, and he knew when to be silent, a faculty rare in political life. He was a true blue Democrat all the time and was never a trimmer or changing. When he once adopted a policy he would go through fire and water to carry it out. He resolved to stamp out intemperance and gambling in Iowa Territory and he did it. In that territory he became a Methodist exhorter and was always pleased to exercise his functions.

He died at the age of 72, but his work was done and well done. It will reward the student of history to study the story of his life in a much more extended form than can be given in this work.

General William Kendall

was of Revolutionary stock. His father, Jeremiah Kendall served in the Revolutionary War and the following is his record from the War Department: "Was a private in Captain William Washington's Company, Third Virginia Regiment, commanded by Colonel Thomas Marshall. He enlisted February 23rd, 1776, to serve two years. He was transferred in August, 1777, to Captain S. B. Wallace's Company, same Regiment. He was wounded at Brandywine and was discharged on January, 1778." His wife was Rhoda McIntire, and their home was in Fauquier County, Virginia. There on November 23rd, 1783, our subject was born. His father moved to a farm in Pennsylvania directly after the close of the war of the Revolution.

Jeremiah Kendall made a trip to New Orleans on a flat boat directly after his arrival in Pennsylvania, and was accompanied by Samuel Lewis and Lewis Wetzel. They were attacked by Indians in canoes below Louisville, but they drove them off with a blunderbuss loaded with 36 rifle balls. He served with General Anthony Wayne in his campaign against the Indians in 1794 and was wounded several times in the battles and skirmishes. He was at the treaty of Greenville.

Our subject was his oldest son and settled on Paint Creek in Ross County, but visited the site of Portsmouth and was there with Henry Massie, before the town was laid out. He stopped with Captain John Brown, the first inn keeper in Portsmouth and fell in love with his daughter Rachel and married her, May 29th, 1806. Robert Lucas, a Justice of the Peace, who had married another daughter of Captain John Brown, performed the ceremony. There were eight children of this marriage.

General Kendall kept a dry goods store in Portsmouth, the first of its kind. He at all times did surveying whenever called upon, and during almost the whole of his life in Scioto County, was deputy surveyor of that part of the Virginia Military District in Scioto County, Ohio. His books as Deputy Surveyor are still extant and are in the possession of Mrs. John W. Overturf. In 1809, he was appointed Associate Judge, but the place was too slow for him.

He declined the honor. In 1812 his public career began. He took a company of horse into the war. The muster roll of that company is still preserved. The same fall he was elected to the Legislature as the Representative of Scioto County and was re-elected in 1813. He was re-elected to the House in 1821, 1825 and 1837. He was elected to the Senate in 1822, 1828, 1834 and 1847. He was always a Whig. He was Treasurer of Scioto County from 1815 to 1818, and again in 1841. He was the first Auditor of Scioto County, 1820 and 1821. He was one of the first nine city fathers in 1815, and drew the three years term. He was re-elected in 1818, and in 1821 and served until 1824. About his first official act as councilman was to contract for a public school house in 1815. In the same year he was on a committee to bring in a bill on executions. In 1816, he was allowed $9.00 for printing corporation bills. In the same year he brought in a bill in regard to keeping hogs. In 1819, he was on the committee on streets. In 1820, he was appointed town surveyor. He served in this capacity until June 1st, 1838, and again in 1849, just prior to his death.

In township matters he was prominent and useful. He was Township Treasurer in 1812. In 1810, he was Overseer of the Poor. In 1845, he was a Justice of the Peace. In 1831, at the famous 4th of July celebration, he responded to a toast. In 1835, he took the contract to erect the present court house of Scioto County at $12,650.00. He began it September 18th, 1835, and finished it September 11th, 1837.

In 1825, he made a map of Scioto County. In the same year he assessed the entire County of Scioto in 57 days at $2.00 per day. He was public spirited in every way.

After the death of his wife, Rachel Brown, November 26th, 1820, he married Christina, eldest daughter of William Lawson, October 12th, 1821, and by her he had seven children, or fifteen in all. His second wife died August 2nd, 1840, and he married Mrs. Ruth Claypool of Chillicothe, for his third wife and she survived him.

Serving as long as he did in the Legislature he could not escape the fate of being a Major General of Militia by joint resolution of the Legislature and he was compelled to take this title.

Nothing went on, in or about Portsmouth, unless he had something to do with it. He had a saw mill and grist mill on Brush Creek and built steamboats at its mouth. He was Postmaster in Portsmouth from February, 1842, to September, 1845. He was a director of the Commercial Bank for several years. He was popular and was always available as a candidate for office. After being nominated, he took care to be elected. He was a safe and sure man. He was large hearted and hospitable. He was active in his habits. His disposition was mild and he was always calm and deliberate. He never sought to obtrude his views on any one, but was tolerant of the views of others and a good listener. He had uncommon equanimity. He was seldom disturbed in mind or conduct and possessed a sound judgment. He was tall and spare, nearly six feet high, complexion between light and dark, blue eyes, and active in his movements.

He took hold of many enterprises and was very popular. No more active or energetic citizen ever lived in Scioto County, and none was more intimately connected with public affairs. He did not profess any form of religion. He died August 2nd, 1849, of consumption, but held office and served the public up to the time of his death.

He was the father of fifteen children, and here are their names, the dates of their births and whom they married, if married:

Jefferson, b. May 1st, 1807; m. Elizabeth Fenton, December 9th, 1830; d. September 16th, 1862.

Rhoda, b. December 9th, 1808; m. Conrad Overturf, July 20th, 1826.

Stephen, b. February 27th, 1800; m. Rebecca Riggs, August 6th, 1839; d. January 13th, 1877.

Milton, b. June 16th, 1812; m. Ruth Lawson, the sister of his father's second wife, January 23rd, 1833; d. August 16th, 1882.

Thomas, b. July 16th, 1814; m. Ann Glover, November 16th, 1836; d. December 16th, 1889.

Eliza, b. September 16th, 1816; d. October, 1823.

William, b. January 2nd, 1819; m. August 26th, 1839.

Rachel, b. September 21st, 1820; m. Conrad Overturf, August 23rd, 1838; d. October 30th, 1874.

The above were children of Rachel Brown.

The following were children of Christian Lawson.

John, b. January 5th, 1823.

Jeremiah, b. February 12th, 1825.

Susannah, b. June 6th, 1827; m. Samuel Baldridge.

Maria, b. November 23rd, 1829; m. James Salisbury, 1851; d. March 11th, 1880.

Joseph, b. October 20, 1832; died 1851.

Franklin, b. December 31st, 1834; m. Marietta Hall.

Lavinia, b. February 24th, 1837; m. Louis Dent Adair.

Joseph died of yellow fever at Rio Janeiro, Brazil, while on his way to California.

By his first marriage he was the brother-in-law of General Robert Lucas, to whom he was unalterably opposed in politics. Kendall was a Whig and Lucas a Democrat. They often contested against each other for the Legislature. Some of the old families of Portsmouth have disappeared, but the Kendall family is still well represented in the third and fourth generation from General Kendall.

David Mitchell

was born April 4th, 1774, in the State of Pennsylvania. His father, David Mitchell, was born in 1733 and was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He or his father came from the north of Ireland where his ancestors had high standing. His father's record in the Revolutionary War will be found under the title of Revolutionary Soldiers. He came to the Northwest Territory as early as 1797, and located in what is Nile Township, Scioto County, Ohio. In 1798, he was a Collector of Union Township, Adams County, Ohio, appointed by the County Commissioners, for Union Township, which extended on the river from Salt Creek in the present Adams County and ran up the river east to the mouth of Little Scioto and north about twenty miles, the same width. David Mitchell, Senior, was an important citizen as early as 1798. His wife Sarah Mitchell died September 19th, 1801, aged sixty-eight years. He died November 1st, 1805. Both are buried in the Mitchell cemetery on the Morrison farm in Nile Township, Scioto County, Ohio. The following can be said of the children of David Mitchell, Senior. Sarah named for her mother, married a Mr. Tucker; Mary, married a McBride. His son David married Mary Stockham. No others of the children of David Mitchell, Senior, can now be given. Judge David Mitchell, our subject, must have been married prior to coming to the Northwest Territory. His wife was Mary Stockham, said to be a sister of Colonel Aaron Stockham. It is said he went to the Salt Licks at Jackson, Ohio, and made considerable money there, but if he remained there anytime, it was after his father had located in what is now Nile Township in Scioto County, Ohio. From December 5th, 1814, to February 27th, 1816, he represented Scioto County in the House. In 1818 he was a Justice of the Peace in Nile Township. From December 6th, 1819, to February 26th, 1820, he represented Scioto and Lawrence in the House. From December 4th, 1820, until February 23rd, 1821, he represented Scioto, Pike and Lawrence in the House. On February 18th, 1820, he was appointed one of a commission to locate the County Seat of Meigs County. Elnathan Scofield of Fairfield County and John J. Martin of Pike County were his associates. After this he submitted to the usual fate allotted to prominent laymen retiring from the Legislature. In 1824, he was made an Associate Judge of Scioto County and served until 1831. In 1829, on July 18th, General William Kendall resigned from the Senate on account of private business. On August 15th, David Mitchell became a candidate for the Senate; Doctor G. S. B. Hempstead, also became a candidate. Each thought he was the best man for the place, and neither would give up for the other. Both were Whigs and depended on Whig support for election. The district was composed of Lawrence, Scioto, Pike and Jackson Counties, and had a Whig majority. Up to this time the contest for office had been free to all. There had been no party convention. If the Whigs had but one candidate, the Democrats could not hope to elect. There was a newspaper controversy; there was pulling and hauling, but neither of the two Whigs would retire for the other, and General Robert Lucas stood for the Democrats. The following was the vote:

	Lucas.	Mitchell.	Hempstead.
Scioto County.....	311	280	233
Lawrence ".....	191	211	19
Pike ".....	323	108	153
Jackson ".....	253	281	36
Totals.....	1078	688	441

This was an object lesson the Whigs never forgot. After that the candidates were nominated by the Whig Central Committee, or a County Convention. Judge Mitchell had a large farm in Nile Township, lately owned by Albert R. Morrison, his grandson, and resided there. In 1831, he had a great craze about silk culture, and published many articles in the newspapers but nothing ever came of it. His daughter Martha, born in 1813, married David Morrison, from whom comes the well known Morrison family of Nile Township. Judge Mitchell died November 19th, 1833, aged 59 years, 8 months and 15 days. He is buried on the hill overlooking his farm. Judge Joseph Moore and William Givens, also Associate Judges, are buried in the same spot. Judge Mitchell's widow survived until September 5th, 1852, when she died in her 73rd year. Judge Mitchell was what the late Homer C. Jones of McArthur, Ohio, would call a "knowledgeable man." He knew a great deal more than his neighbors, and thought he knew more than any of them. He was an investigator and student and when he once made up his mind on any subject, he could not be changed. He was a Federalist and Whig in his political views. He had no use for Democracy. He was one of the charter members of the Sandy Springs Presbyterian Church in Green Township, Adams County. On September 2nd, 1826, when that church was organized, he was made one of the three ruling elders. He was a man of strong will power and great force of character. The same traits have manifested themselves in his grandsons, a most excellent inheritance. He was one of the most influential men of his time. He liked to have things go his own way, and, where he could control, things did so. He was a good business man and was successful in whatever he undertook.

John Patterson

was born in Pendleton County, Virginia, November 23rd, 1793, and died in Wilkins, Union County, Ohio, February 1st, 1859. His parents were James Augustine Patterson, of English descent, and Ann Elizabeth Hull, of Dutch descent. The family lived on the South Branch of the Potomac river. Patterson Creek in Mineral and Hampshire Counties, West Virginia, is named for the Pattersons original settlers there. James A. Patterson removed from Alexandria, Virginia, to land now in the heart of the city of Pittsburg. John Patterson was but eight years of age when his father died, in 1801, and in 1804, he was apprenticed to Z. A. Tannehill for a period of ten years to learn the trade of watchmaker and silversmith. His employer died in 1813, leaving his apprentice on his own resources. He enlisted in a Pittsburg infantry regiment, serving in General Adamson Tannehill's Brigade in what is historically known as the "War of 1812." He was made a corporal. In the autumn of 1817, he went down the Ohio river on a keelboat to Manchester, and thence overland to West Union. Here he opened a jewelry store, made and repaired watches and clocks and manufactured articles of silverware. He afterwards established a tannery, and then one of the first wool-carding and combing factories erected in Southern Ohio. He was elected a Justice of the Peace for Tiffin Township, Adams County, on April 13th, 1820, and served for nine years. He was a tax collector for Adams County for several years. In 1826, he was elected as Representative from Adams County to the twenty-fifth General Assembly; in 1828, to the twenty-seventh; in 1829, to be joint representative with Hosea Moore in the twenty-eighth General Assembly. He was always an ardent Democrat. In 1833, and again in 1834, he was for the fifth and sixth times elected as representative in the Legislature. In 1836, he was elected as State Senator from Adams, Brown and Scioto Counties to the thirty-fifth General Assembly. He was a member of the Legislature longer than any one member with the single exception of Hon. Thomas Kirker. He was a firm friend of all public improvements, and heartily supported the "National Road" and all the various canal projects which were before the Legislature during his eight terms of service. In 1834 he was one of the three commissioners appointed by Governor Lucas to settle the boundary between Ohio and Michigan. On March 21st, 1838, he was appointed United States Marshal for the state of Ohio, to succeed John Patterson, of Belmont County, who, though he bore the same name, was not a relative. He served until July 10th, 1841. He took the census of 1840 and 1841. He returned to Adams County, living at York Township, Union County, where he lived the remainder of his life. He was married three times. His first wife was Mary Brown Finley, daughter of Major Joseph Lewis Finley. His second wife was Celia Prather, daughter of Major John Prather of West Union. His daughter, Matilda Ann, of his first marriage, married Mr. John Smith and is the mother of Mrs. C. J. Moulton, of Lucasville. His third wife was Mary Catherine McCrea, a relative of Jane McCrea, whose tragic massacre by the Indians near Saratoga, N. Y., is narrated in the annals of the Revolution.

John Glover

was the oldest son of Elijah Glover, Sr., and Catharine James his wife. He was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, about 1806, and was the third child born in the town. As he grew up he learned the latter's trade of his father, and followed it to some extent, but became a dealer in furs and followed that business extensively. He early developed a liking for trade and merchandising. He had four brothers, Samuel G., Elijah B., Nathan and Azel. In 1831, he owned a lot on Sixth street near the site of the present Court House and was asked to donate it for Court House purposes. In the same year he and Jacob P. Noel were conducting a general store in Portsmouth and in the French Grant. In 1831 he and Jacob Noel undertook to build the upper rolling mill. They completed it in 1833 and carried on a foundry in connection with it. It did not prove a successful venture to them and they sold it out in 1837 to Thomas Gaylord. In 1836 he married Miss Eliza Nourse of the French Grant and she survived him with four children, three daughters and one son. His four brothers were all Whigs, but he became a Democrat. In 1836 he was elected to the Legislature as a Democrat to represent Adams, Brown and Scioto Counties with James London of Brown. The vote in Scioto County stood Glover 488, James London of Brown, 599, Whig, General William Kendall 981, James Pilson of Brown 924. Adams and Brown overcame the Whig vote of Scioto. In 1837, he was defeated for re-election in the same district by General William Kendall. 1837 was a year of disaster to the Democracy. General Kendall had 897 votes and Nelson Barrere 845 votes in Scioto County as the Whig candidates and General James London 427 and Doctor John Glover 408 votes as the Democratic candidates for the Legislature. From 1839 to 1841, he represented the same counties in the Senate. In 1855 he went to Bennett, Nebraska, with his family. In his old age he lost his eyesight. His children were Mrs. Cora Lytle, Mrs. Anna B. Stout and Ella B. Glover all of Nebraska. His daughter, Mrs. Kate McIlvann, resides at West Liberty, Ohio. He died June 10th, 1885. Mrs. Stout died June 19th, 1887.

He studied medicine in Portsmouth, Ohio, and thereby obtained the title of Doctor, but he never practised either in Scioto County or in the state of Nebraska. He said medicine was a humbug and its practice was guess work. He was a man of fine appearance, tall and slender, over six feet tall, with blue eyes and dark curly hair. As a young man he was quite a beau, and when in the full dress of his time, with cambric ruffles, edged with thread lace on his sleeves and ruffled shirt and all other parts of his dress in the highest style, he was the beau of the town. For awhile he lived the life of a farmer in the French Grant but it palled on him and he returned to town life.

was born at South Hadley, Massachusetts, September 21st, 1804. In 1825, he entered Amherst College and was graduated in 1829. He studied law two years and, in 1831, located in Gallipolis, Ohio, at the instance of the Hon. Samuel F. Vinton, then the only lawyer residing in Gallipolis. Mr. Nash completed his law studies under the Hon. Samuel F. Vinton, and was admitted to the bar in 1833. He lived in Gallipolis all his life. He was a great collector of the books appertaining to his profession. He was two years in the State Senate, from 1841 to 1843, and represented Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto Counties, as a Whig. After the demise of the Whig party, he became a Republican. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1851, and occupied the Common Pleas bench ten years, February 9th, 1852 to February 9th, 1862. He prepared and published Nash's Pleadings in two volumes directly after the adoption of the Civil Code. It is large a criticism on the Civil Code of Ohio. He also prepared a Digest of the Ohio Reports. He published a work on "Morality and the State," and another entitled "Crime and the Family". He was a fine French scholar. He was never a member of any church or secret society. He died January 20th, 1879.

Moses Gregory.

Moses Gregory was one of the most active citizens who ever resided in Portsmouth. He was before the public as often and held as many, if not more, offices than any other Portsmouth citizen, except John R. Turner.

He came in almost with the century. He was born March 24th, 1801, near Chillicothe, Ohio, and never knew the care of a father, for the latter, David Gregory died when he was an infant, and his mother Elizabeth Hays, married Henry Sheeley. He, his mother and stepfather, came to Portsmouth from Chillicothe, Ohio, on a keel boat in 1805, when there was nothing but log houses in the town.

His stepfather was a tailor by trade and the first of the craft who located in the place. All Moses Gregory's youthful ideas were acquired in Portsmouth. As soon as he was of a suitable age, he was apprenticed to Aaron Kinney, to learn the tinner's trade. However he did not like the confinement and surroundings, and became a keel-boat man and boated salt from the Kanawha Salt Works down the Ohio river.

After some experience in this line he ventured and took cargoes to New Orleans. In 1823, he was back in Portsmouth and carried on the butcher business. He had two stalls in the Portsmouth Market House. In 1825, he became Deputy Sheriff under William Carey. In 1826, William Carey died three days before the October election and Gregory became a candidate for the place. He distributed his tickets over the country and was elected, receiving 689 votes to 234 given to Washington Clingman. In 1828, he was re-elected without opposition, receiving 887 votes.

The records of the election of 1830, have been destroyed, but he was then elected Auditor of Scioto County, and re-elected every two years thereafter until 1840, when he retired from the office. While this period was the beginning of the county he was undoubtedly the most efficient Auditor the County ever had, as an inspection of his records with the records of those who preceeded and followed him is convincing proof. That the people of his time thought likewise is shown by the fact that he held the office longer than any one ever held it, before or since.

In December, 1841, he took his seat in the Legislature as the representative of Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto Counties. He attended the special session July 25th to August 12th, 1842, and was one of the thirty Whig members who left on the latter date, and thereby prevented the passage of the congressional districting bill. In the fall of 1834, he was elected to the Senate, from the district composed of the same counties he had represented in the House, and served one term of two years. At the second session the Senate refused the repeal of the Black Laws, but Mr. Gregory did not concur.

In 1846, he was made a member of the First Board of Infirmary Directors of Scioto County, and served two years. In 1840, he became a "forty-niner", and went to California for gold. He returned in a year, but had not made a fortune. In 1851, he took the contract to build several sections of the Scioto and Hocking Valley Railroad, but owing to slow and partial payments by the company was very nearly overtaken by financial disaster. After this venture he retired to his farm on Turkey Creek, and resided there for several years. But he soon tired of rustic life and returned to Portsmouth. But we have not told near all the offices held by Mr. Gregory. For several years he was a school trustee and visitor in Portsmouth, and a most efficient one. He was an active and consistent member of the Bigelow Methodist Episcopal Church, and was one of its Trustees as early as 1834. He was for several years a member of the town council of Portsmouth, and one of the Committee on Claims. That meant that he conducted the affairs of the town, and he seemed to have done it with general satisfaction. He was Recorder of the Town from April, 1845 to April, 1846, and again from April, 1847 to April, 1848.

In 1843, he was elected fence viewer of Wayne Township. This was quite a compliment as at that time it was customary to elect the most prominent citizen to that office to remind him that no American Citizen was too high or proud to accept the humblest office.

In 1834, he was President of the Town Council. In 1829, while Sheriff, he was also the County Assessor.

From 1864 to 1870, he was Justice of the Peace of Wayne Township. He retired at the end of the second term on account of failing health, and died of consumption December 15th, 1871.

In Mr. Gregory's case, while he enjoyed the responsibilities of public office, he could not be said to have been an office seeker. He preformed the duties of every office he held on his conscience. He was faithful to every trust. He was as fond of political management as a cat is of cream, and enjoyed the manipulations of politics. He was a zealous and ardent Whig and never flagged in his devotion to his party.

He managed to leave the Legislature without being made an Associate Judge or a Major General of Militia, the usual fate of retiring Legislators under the Constitution of 1802, and so was plain Moses Gregory all his life; but no man was more useful than he in the many offices he held. As a member of the community, he was always in favor of progress and improvement. He was a member of the Common Council at a time when all the aristocracy and chivalry of Portsmouth either held Coffee House Licenses or were in favor of them, yet he and Benjamin Fryer invariably voted against each and every Coffee House License. He did this from high temperance principles, and lived to see the practice of issuing these licenses abolished and condemned.

His first wife was a daughter of Major John Bell, and by her he was the father of Hon. John B. Gregory of Fontana, Ky.

Moses Gregory was a remarkable example of the model American citizen; always ready to serve the State in any way, and doing it to the satisfaction of his constituency.

Mr. Gregory was a member of the Aurora Mosonic Lodge, and one of the charter members of Cavalry Commandery Knights-Templar. Among the Masons he is esteemed as one of their Saints, with Drs. Hempstead, Offner and Burr.

Joseph J. Combs

was born in Clermont County, Ohio, in 1805. He went to Gallia County in 1826. He began to publish the Weekly Journal in 1831, and in 1834, took in Alexander Vance as a partner. He was Clerk of the House of Representatives in 1830 and 1831. In 1833, he began the practice of law. In the Forty-second General Assembly, December 4th, 1843 to March 13th, 1844, he represented Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto Counties in the House. In the Forty-fourth General Assembly, December 1st, 1845, to March 2nd, 1846, he represented the same Counties in the Senate. In the Forty-fifth General Assembly, December 7th, 1846 to February 8th, 1847, he represented the same three Counties and Jackson in the Senate. He was a Whig in politics. He made quite a reputation as a lawyer in Gallia County. He married a Miss Lesby at Gallipolis in 1846. In 1849, he went to Washington and became a clerk in the Interior Department and was Chief Clerk under Secretary Thomas Ewing. In Mr. Lincoln's administration, he became a Patent Examiner. Hon. S. F. Vinton secured him the appointment of Chief Clerk of the Interior Department under General Taylor's administration, aided by General Thomas Ewing. He died April 29th, 1886, in Washington, D. C., of paralysis. He was one of the best and most successful political managers ever known. His plain practical sense and honesty captivated the people. Hon. Samuel F. Vinton had the utmost confidence in his political management.

was born August 1st, 1786, in Fayette County, Penn. So many stories are told about him, that it is difficult to determine the truth. As a young man, he came to the salt works of Jackson County as agent of a company at Uniontown, Pa., which sold salt kettles. He remained long enough to see that there was money in making salt and engaged in it. He was a regular devil, as a young fellow. He always carried a deck of cards and a bottle of whiskey with him and was very fond of playing cards for money. He was usually a winner. He was such a constant winner that the men with whom he played suspected unfairness and it became dangerous for him to remain there. After many personal encounters and hairbreadth escapes, the place became too warm for him, and he went back to Pennsylvania. There he ventured into politics and was elected Sheriff of Fayette County, at a time when the office was paid in fees, and when fees were plenty. In 1829, while he was Sheriff, he escorted Gen. Jackson through the County. The General was traveling in his own carriage on the way to Washington to take the presidential chair. Sheriff Salter had an escort of militia along. Each County through which the President-elect passed, showed him the same courtesy. In 1831, after retiring from the Sheriff's Office in Fayette County, he came to Portsmouth. He invested some of his money in Scioto Furnace. He was a long time manager there and was very successful. He was County Commissioner from 1838 to 1841, while a resident of Scioto Furnace. He removed to Portsmouth in 1847 and built a house where the Bigelow Church now stands. It was burned down before he occupied it. He then owned and occupied the Eustace Ball residence. After that, he bought the High School property and built there. In December, 1813, he married Miss Francis Mason. They never had any children. She died May 27th, 1872. He became a member of the Methodist Church in 1839, and continued such during his life. He was always a Whig.

On January 2nd, 1844, he was elected an Associate Judge of the County and served until 1851. From December, 1849, to March, 1850, he was in the State Senate, representing Adams, Pike, Lawrence and Scioto Counties. In 1842, he was one of the Commissioners of the Surplus Fund of the County, and in 1849, he was a Commissioner of Free Turnpikes. He died October 6th, 1876, aged 90 years, 2 months and 5 days. At the time of his death he had $60,000.00 on deposit in one of the City Banks.

He made a great deal of money in the period of his activity. He was successful in all of his undertakings, and kept his own counsel. While a man of great decision of character, he was a pleasant and agreeable neighbor. His talent was for accumulation of wealth, and he exercised it well.

Thomas McCauslen

was of Scotch-Irish descent. He was a native of Jefferson County, Ohio, born March 16th, 1819, the eldest son of Hon. William McCauslen, a Congressman of Ohio. He attended the district schools of his home and Scott's Academy at Steubenville. In the academy he was a good student, and from there he went to studying law in the office of Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, afterwards the great war Secretary. In 1844, he was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Warren County, and located at West Union the same year. He was liked by the young people, and was popular with all classes. As a lawyer, he was diligent and attentive to business and a fluent advocate. He filled the office of Prosecuting Attorney of Adams County, for three terms, from 1845 to 1851, and did it with great credit to himself. In 1853, he was elected to the Ohio Senate from the Seventh District, composed of Adams, Scioto, Pike and Jackson Counties, and served one term. He participated in the election of the Hon. George E. Pugh to the Senate. During his term, the Supreme Court of Cincinnati, was created, and the Judges' salaries were fixed at $1,500, and the circulation of foreign bank bills of less than $10.00 was forbidden in the State. This Legislature must have had a sweet tooth, for, by joint resolution, it asked Congress to repeal the duty on sugar and molasses. It also favored the construction of a Pacific Railway. He declined to be a candidate for a second term. In 1856, he was one of the attorneys who defended William Milligan, indicted for murder, in the first degree. Milligan was undoubtedly guilty as charged, but the jury brought in a verdict of murder in the second degree, and he spent the rest of his life in the penitentiary. In 1857, Mr. McCauslen removed to Portsmouth, where he resided and practiced law until 1865, when he removed to his native county, and located at Steubenville. He continued in the active practice of his profession in Steubenville until 1883, when he retired. He, however, left his business to his eldest son, William, born in West Union, and who has succeeded him. He was married in West Union on February 19th, 1851, to Mary Jane Sparks, daughter of John Sparks, the banker of West Union, and neice of David Sinton, of Cincinnati, Ohio. At his present home, within one-half mile of Steubenville, he spent thirteen years of dignified and honorable retirement in the enjoyment of the society of his family and his friends. He had four sons and four daughters, all of whom grew to maturity. He died February 10th, 1896. As a young man, Mr. McCauslen was jolly, good natured, and fond of outdoor sports. In politics, he was a staunch Democrat, but with no particular taste for party work. In religion he was a Presbyterian. As a lawyer he was active and energetic and a fine speaker before a jury. He enjoyed a legal contest, and would throw his whole soul into it. He was an honorable gentleman, an excellent conversationalist, and a delightful companion. His manners were uniformly cordial, and it was always a pleasure to meet and converse with him. While he grew old in years, he preserved the perennial spirit of youth.

"In his years were seen

A youthful vigor and an autumnal green."

George Corwine

was born near Sharonville, now Omega, Pike County, March 18th, 1817. His parents were Samuel Corwine and Mary Wilson. He was raised a farmer, and he had a common school education. He attended school at Dennison University, at Granville, Licking County, Ohio. He was Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of Pike County, Ohio, from 1843 to 1854. He was a member of the 53rd General Assembly from Pike, representing the Seventh Senatorial District. In 1858, and 1859, he was elected as a Democrat. He was treasurer of Pike County, Ohio, from 1860 to 1864. He was married in 1844 to Lydia McCollister, daughter of Charles McCollister, an associate Judge of the Common Pleas Court of Pike County. He removed to Missouri in 1871, where he resided on a farm until his death in 1898. His wife and seven children survive him. All his children reside at Carthage and Joplin, Missouri.

William Newman was born at Salem, Roanoke County, Virginia, on the 19th of January, 1807, the son of William and Catherine Ott Newman, who had removed from Virginia to Pennsylvania. His boyhood years were spent at Harrisonburg, Virginia. He came to Ohio in 1827, and cast his first vote at Newark, Ohio, for Andrew Jackson for President. He returned to Virginia, and on the 20th day of February, 1834, was married to Catherine Ott Williams of Woodstock, Shenandoah County. They resided at Staunton until 1838, where Ann M. (now Mrs. Joseph G. Reed), and George O., were born. In March of the latter year, they came to Portsmouth, where they resided ever after with the exception of a brief period of residence in Highland County in 1841. Five children were born to them in Ohio—Wm. H., James W., J. Rigdon, Charles H., and Hervey M., who died in infancy. The others still live, except Rev. Charles H. Newman, who was an ordained minister of the Episcopal Church. He was sent as a missionary to Japan in 1873. For years his health was impaired; he retired from the ministry and died in St. Augustine, Florida, May 30th, 1887, where he had gone with his wife to try the effect of its mild climate.

William Newman was, by occupation a contractor and builder. Many of the larger and finer buildings erected in Portsmouth from 1840 to 1847, were his work, including churches and school-houses. Among these are the First Presbyterian Church, All Saints, the two Catholic Churches, the Massie Block, the George Davis residence and many others.

Mr. Newman served as a member of the Board of Education of Portsmouth several terms and for a number of years, he was an active member of the city council. In 1847, he was a Democratic candidate for the State Legislature from the Lawrence-Scioto district, these two counties then constituting one legislative district. In 1859, he was elected to the Ohio State Senate from the Seventh Senatorial District, composed of Adams, Scioto, Pike and Jackson Counties. He served in the same Senate with Garfield, who afterward became illustrious in the Nation's annals, and although different radically in politics, a warm personal friendship sprang up between those two men, as a correspondence several years after testified. He died in Portsmouth on the twenty-third day of July, 1847, aged 67 years.

William Newman was a man of strong character and earnest convictions. To any cause that he espoused, he stood true to the end. He believed in the principles of Jefferson, Madison and George Mason, of his native state. He was a Virginian in all that the word implies, and the doctrines taught by its early statesmen and leaders were planted deep in his heart. He was noted for his honesty. Integrity was the very corner stone of his character. As his old friend, the well known editor, Walter C. Hood, once wrote. "William Newman is an honest man, a strong stocky man of the people. He would rather stand up, assured with conscious pride alone, than err with millions on his side."

General Benjamin F. Coates was born June 23rd, 1827, near Wilmington, in Clinton County, Ohio. His father was Aquila Coates, born in 1799, in Chester County, Pennsylvania. His mother was Rachel Pidgeon, born in 1801, near Lynchburg, Va. His maternal grandfather, Isaac Pidgeon, was the owner of 1,600 acres of land, about five miles north of Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia, which he divided among his children. General Coates' father and mother, and his grandfather Pidgeon were Friends, and were married according to the formula of that faith at Hopewell Meeting House, near Winchester, Virginia. They came to Ohio in 1823. They had eight children, six sons and two daughters. General Coates was reared on his father's farm, and attended the common school in Clinton County. He also attended an Academy at Wilmington, conducted by Oliver W. Nixon. He studied medicine with Dr. Aquila Jones at Wilmington, and took his first course of lectures at the Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati. His second medical course was taken at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He began the practice of medicine at Mowrytown, in Highland County, in 1815, and remained there two and one half years. He located in West Union, Ohio, in 1853. In 1857, he was married to Elizabeth J. Patterson, a daughter of John Patterson, a former resident of Adams County, and a prominent politician. In Adams County, General Coates was a Democrat, and as such was elected to the Ohio Senate in 1861, to represent the present Seventh Senatorial District. George A. Waller, of Portsmouth, was his opponent, and Coates' majority was twenty-three. In the Legislature he found himself at variance with his party, and acted with the Republicans on all questions relating to the Civil War. On August 10th, 1862, he entered the Volunteer Army as Lieutenant Colonel of the 91st Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. From Jan. 6th, until April 24th, 1863, he was granted a leave of absence to attend the adjourned session of the fifty-fifth General Assembly. He was wounded August 24th, 1864, at the battle of Hatttown, Virginia. He was promoted to the Colonelcy of his regiment December 9th, 1864, and was brevetted Brigadier-General March 13th, 1865. He was mustered out of service June 24th, 1865. He made an excellent officer, and was highly esteemed for his ability and bravery by his superior officers. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, July 1st, 1865, as a physician. On July 1st, 1866, he was appointed Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue, under Col. John Campbell, of Ironton, Ohio, and on October 1st, 1866, was appointed Collector in the eleventh district of Ohio, in place of John Campbell, and held the office until July 1st, 1881, when he resigned. He was a trustee in the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home from 1868 until 1871. He was Receiver of the Cincinnati & Eastern Railway Company from September 1st, 1885, to February 1st, 1887, and as special Master Commissioner, sold the road to the Ohio and Northwestern Company. He has served on the Portsmouth City Board of Equalization one or more terms. In 1897 he was appointed a member of the City Board of Elections for a term of four years.

Since 1862, General Coates has been a Republican. He left the Democratic party, on account of war questions. During the time he held the Collector's office, he was the leader of his party in the county and congressional district. He had a wonderful insight of human nature, and could tell before hand how the public would form opinions of men and measures. He had great executive ability and always had the courage of his opinions. He was a pleasant and agreeable companion, and had hosts of friends. He had been unwell some two weeks prior to his death. On Saturday evening, May 6th, 1899, he went to the Republican primary meeting in his precinct and voted. On returning he lay down for a few moments, and then arose and undertook to walk to his chair. He sank between the bed and the chair, where he breathed once or twice, and then died of heart failure. He left a widow and three children: his son, Joseph, and daughters Lillian and Sarah. The latter is engaged in Boston, Mass., as a teacher. General Coates made quite a reputation as an officer, and his memory will always be cherished by the survivors of his regiment and by all who knew him.

James Emmitt.

His grandfather came from Ireland where he had been a merchant. He and his wife emigrated to this country during the Revolutionary War from Dublin. He settled in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania near Kittaning. His grandfather became a miller and a merchant. His father George Emmitt was born in 1804, and when nineteen years old married Addie Stanford, the daughter of a neighboring farmer. James Emmitt our subject was the first child, born November 6th, 1806. In 1816, five families started from the Emmitt settlement to the Ohio Valley. Abram Stanford and wife were among the party, Mr. Emmitt's grandparents. Emmitt, then fourteen years of age, came down the Ohio on a raft with the party. The party stopped at Steubenville, while the elder Stanford went on and bought 160 acres of land near Waverly. In the fall the party left Steubenville and went down the river. They encountered a myriad of squirrels on the way down. The party landed at Portsmouth. From there they went to their land by wagons. A road was made for them in advance of the wagons by cutting trees and filling ruts, etc. They traveled four miles the first day and lodged with Colonel Jacob Noel, all of whose family had the ague. Piketon had only been laid out in 1815, and Abram Stanford met them there and took them to two log cabins, two miles north of Waverly. Panther, deer and wild turkeys were abundant and their nearest neighbors were two miles away. Emmitt became a good shot with the rifle. In 1819, he worked out at $6.00 per month and board. He wore moccasins in the winter and went barefoot in the summer. His clothing was made of buckskin. In 1820, he spent five weeks in learning the blacksmith's trade and the knowledge thus acquired stood him well the remainder of his life. In 1824, he was employed as a wood chopper at $4.00 per month. In 1825, he became a teamster for Hugh Cook at $6.00 per month between Portsmouth and Chillicothe. He kept at this till August 1828. Freight by wagon was 50 cents per hundred and a full load from Portsmouth to Chillicothe made Hugh Cook $15.00. A round trip between Portsmouth and Chillicothe was made in one week. In 1828 he had the ague so bad he quit Cook's employ. He saved $10.00 in the three years he worked for Cook, became a capitalist and went into partnership with Henry Jeffords in the dry goods business at Waverly. The store was burned out in January 1849. Jeffords was a mail carrier at that time. The beginning of the partnership with Henry Jeffords was the foundation of Mr. Emmitt's fortune. Among other things he bought shoes of Murtaugh Kehoe which had been made by hand, in Portsmouth. Emmitt bought goods on time of Josiah Lawrence in Cincinnati. They were sent to Portsmouth by boat and wagoned to Emmitt's store. June 11th, 1829, he was married to Miss Louise Martin, daughter of Joseph J. Martin, Clerk of the Courts of Pike County from 1815 to 1822. Mr. Emmitt's house built in what is now Waverly in 1829, was the first house there. His first cooking was done on a fire outside of the house. In 1831, he was made the first Postmaster at Waverly. He kept a hotel in 1831 and 1832 and took the first canal boat to Portsmouth. In 1832, the first stages were run between Portsmouth and Columbus and Emmitt had the contract to board the drivers. Neil, Moore & Company owned the line. Mr. Emmitt called his hotel, "The Coach and Four." It was on the site of "the Grand" in Waverly. The first freight shipped by canal from Chillicothe was a barrel of whiskey for Portsmouth. Who got it? Mr. Emmitt went to New Orleans with a fleet of flat boats in November, 1833. In 1837, when everyone was breaking up, Emmitt made $10,000 profits in selling corn from the valley in Cleveland. In 1845, he and Christian Schultz started a distillery at Waverly. He very nearly ruined himself in this venture, not understanding the business. He had to pay his partner $20,000 or fail. He borrowed the money of James Davis and saved himself, though at this time he owed $80,000. The firm became Emmitt & Davis and made money. It cleared $100,000 in five years and he bought out his partner for $100,000. Mr. Emmitt first traveled on a railroad in 1843 from Cumberland, Maryland, to Baltimore. Robert Montgomery and William Hall of Portsmouth accompanied him. In 1856, Mr. Emmitt purchased the distillery just below Chillicothe and while operating it, contributed $20,000 towards building the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad. In 1861, he secured the removal of the County Seat from Piketon to Waverly. In the same year his Chillicothe distillery burned with a loss of $80,000. He rebuilt the distillery in sixty days. Before the war tax, whiskey sold at 15 cents per gallon. When the tax was to be put on the distillers got a stay for 60 days. Emmitt's share of the lobbying to secure this was $10,000. Emmitt's distillery ran night and day, during the 60 days grace and had a great stock of liquors on hand when the tax went on. In 1858 and 1859 was the great County Seat contest. He determined the County Seat should be moved to Waverly. He offered to build the Court House and jail and a road to Waverly and donate them all to the County. His petition to the Legislature outnumbered the remonstrants. Alex Sands lobbied for the bill. William Newman then in the Senate from Scioto County, favored the bill as did Cockerill from Adams. Will H. Reed, the attorney worked for Piketon, but his opponents took advantage of his weakness and kept him out of the way most of the time. General Wells S. Jones worked for Jasper. Colonel Higgins also worked for Waverly. When the bill finally passed, the campaign was a nine days wonder. Emmitt canvassed the County with a band wagon and band and with speakers galore. The vote of the people gave 309 majority for Waverly. The contest cost Mr. Emmitt at least $40,000. Mr. Emmitt built up Waverly. He built the Emmitt House, organized and conducted in Waverly a bank, a sawmill and grist mill, a furniture factory, a lumber yard and a large general store. He was engaged in other enterprises in Chillicothe and elsewhere. At one time he paid 1-3 of the taxes of Waverly and 1-10 of Pike County. He was instrumental in the building of the Springfield, Jackson & Pomeroy Railroad and was its first President. He built the first bridge across the Scioto river in Pike County. In 1865, he took a trip to Europe and was gone nine months. Mr. Emmitt invested $3,000 in the Muskingum Valley Railroad, $6,000 in the Scioto Valley Railway and $90,000 in the Springfield, Jackson and Pomeroy Railway. The Beaver pike cost him $15,000 and the bridge across the Scioto $20,000. John Morgan burned it. He built sixteen miles of the Waverly and Sunfish turnpike, at a cost of $40,000. In 1867, Mr. Emmitt was elected to the State Senate from the Seventh District, composed of Adams, Pike, Scioto and Jackson. The vote stood as follows:

	James Emmitt.	General Wells S. Jones.
Adams County.....	2,309	1,979
Pike ".....	1,780	951
Jackson ".....	1,818	1,858
Scioto ".....	2,538	2,815
	8,445	7,103

Majority for Emmitt 1342. Mr. Emmitt was re-elected to the Senate in 1869 defeating Doctor A. B. Monahan of Jackson. Emmitt received a majority of 565 in Adams and 428 in Pike. Monahan received a majority of 230 in Scioto and 310 in Jackson. Emmitt's majority in the District was 453.

Mr. Emmitt owned over 7,000 acres of farm land in Pike County. He owned a great deal of real estate in Waverly, Chillicothe and elsewhere. One of the most interesting and readable books ever published is the "Life and Reminiscences of Hon. James Emmitt as reviewed by himself," by M. J. Carrigan, published at Chillicothe, Ohio in 1888. It is history and romance happily combined. It is written in pure literary style and the interest is maintained throughout. For historical reminiscences of the Valley nothing equal to it has ever been published. As to books and literature Mr. Emmitt's knowledge was like the darkness of Egypt, but in seventy-five years from now that book will hand him over to posterity as a man of great literary acquirements. Mr. Emmitt knew men and he knew business. He had wonderful courage, will power and force of character, and that made up for the lack of early advantages, for which he was not responsible. While the ideas in the book are Mr. Emmitt's, they are clothed in the language of Mr. Carrigan; a happy combination making a book of local history priceless in value and interest. Mr. Emmitt died January 5th, 1895.

James W. Newman,

of Portsmouth, Ohio, was born in Highland County, Ohio, March 12th, 1841, the son of William and Catharine Ott Newman. His father has a separate sketch herein.

Soon after the birth of our subject, his parents removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, where he has since resided. He was educated in the Portsmouth schools, graduating there from in the year 1855. Afterwards he attended the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, where he graduated in July, 1861. In November of that year, when but twenty years of age, he began the publication of the "Portsmouth Times," which he continued for thirty years, and his talent and ability, as displayed in its publication and management brought him reputation and fame. That newspaper is now one of the most influential in the State and its columns in the thirty years he managed it show Mr. Newman's ability as a journalist. In 1894, the "Times" property was turned into a corporation, in which Mr. Newman still retained an interest.

In 1867, Mr. Newman was elected on the Democratic ticket to represent Scioto County in the Legislature, defeating Col. John R. Hurd, the Republican candidate for that office. In 1869, he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by Hon. Elijah Glover, by a majority of twenty-three votes. In 1871, Mr. Newman was a candidate of his party for the State Senate in the Seventh Senatorial District, composed of Adams, Scioto, Pike and Jackson Counties, and was elected and re-elected over the late Benjamin B. Gaylord, to the same office in 1873. During his second term he was chairman of the Committee on Finance, and also of Benevolent Institutions, and conducted the affairs of these committees with recognized ability. In 1882 he was elected Secretary of State on the Democratic ticket, by a majority of 19,117 over Major Charles Townsend, of Athens County. In this election he came within forty-one votes of carrying his own County, strongly Republican, and carried Hamilton County by over 10,000 majority. In 1884, he was defeated for re-election as Secretary of State by General James S. Robinson, by a majority of 11,242. It was a memorable campaign year in which Grover Cleveland was first elected President. Mr. Newman headed the State ticket in the October contest, and received the highest vote that has ever been cast for a Democrat in Ohio. In his first annual report, as Secretary of State, he recommended a system for taxing corporations, in the granting of articles of incorporation, and drafted the bill carrying out his ideas. This measure was that winter enacted into a law by the Legislature, and the system has since developed until it now produces a very considerable revenue to the State. On June 20th, 1885, Mr. Newman was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eleventh Collection District of Ohio, and held the office four years.

He was always prominent in his party, served on its stage, central and executive committees, and aided it in its councils and on the stump in every campaign for the past thirty-five years.

He was a prominent and active Elk, and served two terms as Exalted Ruler of the Portsmouth Lodge. He was called upon to deliver addresses on numerous occasions in connection with that body. He was a public speaker of high order, and his addresses on these occasions, as well as on others, were eloquent and well received.

In 1893, he aided in organizing and establishing the Central Savings Bank in Portsmouth, and has since been its president.

In all public enterprises in the city of Portsmouth, Mr. Newman took a leading and prominent part, and was known as a public spirited citizen. He was fond of good literature, and kept well informed on all current topics.

On October 24th, 1871, he married Miss Kate Moore, a daughter of Colonel Oscar F. Moore, who has a separate sketch herein. They had one son, Howard Ott Newman. Mr. Newman died Jan. 1st, 1901.

John William Gregg,

one of the principal farmers of Pike County, was born July 13th, 1845, on the farm where he now resides. His father, John Gregg, was born October 15th, 1808, in Pennsylvania, and emigrated to Ohio in 1818. He came to Ohio to make a fortune and succeeded. He worked on the canal when it was being built through Pike County. Our subject had only a common school education and was reared to the occupation of farming and stock raising.

He was married November 8th, 1866, to Miss Minnie C. Downing whose parents were among the first settlers in Pike County. They have five children, John W., aged 32, who is the Recorder of Pike County; George A., who is a book-keeper at Washington Court House; Edgar M., who is a book-keeper in the bank at Waverly, and two daughters, Ada Belle and Minnie E., who are at home with their parents.

Mr. Gregg represented Adams County as a part of the Seventh Senatorial District in the sixty-sixth and sixty-seventh General Assemblies, from 1884 to 1888 and did it ably and well. Mr. Gregg was in the dry goods business in Waverly from 1864 to 1866 and, with that exception, has always been a farmer. He resides in Seal Township, two and one-half miles east of Waverly. His two oldest sons are married and have families. He has always been a Republican, served on the central committee of his county many times, and has often been a delegate to district and state conventions.

Mr. Gregg is a man of generous and genial disposition. His heart is full of kindness and sympathy. It is said of him that no deserving person ever applied to him in vain. To the poor he has always been kind.

In politics he is one of the strongest of strong partisans. He never fails in an opportunity to aid his party or advance its interests as he sees them.

In business he is a man of the highest integrity and honor, and for those qualities he enjoys the confidence of all with whom he has any business relations. As a legislator, Mr. Gregg made a most creditable and honorable record.

Captain Amos B. Cole was born December 13th, 1827, in Portsmouth, Ohio. He was reared on a farm. In 1846, he went to the Mexican War and served until 1848. On August 22nd, 1862, he became Captain of Company F, 1st Ohio Heavy Artillery, and served until December 19th, 1864, when he was discharged for physical disability. After leaving the army he was an insurance agent with James Lodwick and W. H. Bonsall. He was Clerk of the Courts of Scioto County, Ohio, from 1873 to 1879. He represented Scioto County in the House of Representatives from 1880 to 1882. He was in the State Senate from the Seventh District, composed of Adams, Pike, Jackson and Scioto Counties, from 1888 to 1892. In 1851 he married Miss Martha E. Orme. They had six children: J. Orme Cole, O. V. Cole, Charles C. Cole, A. Spencer Cole, Mrs. Ida Anderson and Mrs. Lollie L. Dudit. He was a Republican at all times. He was raised in the Methodist Church. He died September 3rd, 1897, and was buried in Greenlawn Cemetery.

Elias Crandall

was born in Angelica, Alleghany County, New York, May 25th, 1829. His father was Lester Crandall, a native of Connecticut. The family removed to Warren County, Pennsylvania and later to Newport, Washington County, Ohio, in April, 1858. Lester Crandall was an old line Whig, a Justice of the Peace for a number of years and a soldier in the war of 1812. To him and his wife seven children were born, four sons and three daughters, of whom the subject of this sketch, and William L. of Iowa, are the only survivors. Elias' mother's maiden name was Mary Tracy.

Our subject attended only the schools in the district where he resided until the age of sixteen years when he engaged in business for himself. He was a resident of Scioto County from 1853 to 1872, when he removed to Jackson County, where he has since resided. He was a part owner and manager of Empire Furnace in Scioto County, from 1861 to 1872.

On the 6th of January, 1861, he was married to Nancy Ford Forsythe, the daughter of James Forsythe, one of the proprietors of Empire Furnace. Our subject was the first store-keeper, then book-keeper and then manager of this furnace. Since removing to the town of Jackson, he has been the general manager of the Globe Iron Works. His daughter, Elizabeth, married Benjamin Bentley, a grocer in Jackson; his daughter Carrie, married Edward McGee, a book-keeper at Globe Furnace, Ky.

Mr. Crandall has been connected with the iron business in Scioto and Jackson Counties for forty-five years. When he first went to Jackson he bought an interest in Fulton Furnace, and afterward became a member of the Globe Iron Company, which has been manufacturing stone-coal iron. This plant has a capacity of twenty tons a day and is one of the leading pig iron manufactures in the Jackson iron and coal fields. Mr. Crandall is one of the principal business men in his section of the State, and has a wide acquaintance with the commercial as well as the political world. He was always a Republican. He voted for Fremont in 1856 and has voted for every other Republican candidate for President from that time since.

In 1895, he was the Republican candidate for Senator against James S. Thomas, Democrat, and was elected by a plurality of 4,189 votes. He was again a candidate and was re-elected in 1897 by a large majority. During his first term in the Senate he was on the Committee on Corporations, Chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining. He was also on the Committees of Agriculture, Medical Colleges and County Affairs. In his second term, he was chairman of the Fish and Game Committee and of County Affairs, and was a member of the Agricultural, Medical Colleges and Turn-pike Committees. In his own County he has been on the Executive Committee many years, and has been a delegate to the State, Congressional, Judicial and Senatorial Conventions in many years. He believes in protection, reciprocity and the gold standard, but gives most of his attention to his extensive business. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is not a fraternity man, not belonging to any lodges. He commands the confidence and respect of every one who is acquainted with him.

Samuel Lincoln Patterson, who now represents the Seventh Senatorial District, is a great-grandson of Judge Joseph Lucas, who represented Adams County in the First Legislature of Ohio, and a sketch of whom is found elsewhere in this book.

He was born September 7th, 1860, at Piketon, Ohio, son of William Patterson and wife, Hannah Brown, who was a daughter of John R. Brown and his wife Levisa Lucas, daughter of Judge Joseph Lucas.

Our subject's father was born near Philadelphia. His father Thomas, died when his son William was quite young. The father of John R. Brown, named above was a Captain in the Revolutionary War from Virginia, as was Major William Lucas, father of Judge Joseph Lucas. Mr. Patterson, the father of our subject, was a wagon maker and blacksmith. His wife had a farm adjoining Piketon and he operated that in connection with his trade. He died June 11th, 1879, and his widow still resides in Piketon. Our subject attended school in Piketon until 1879, when he went to Lebanon. He began the occupation of a school teacher in 1881, and followed it until 1886. In Piketon, he taught in 1884, 1885 and 1886, having the position next to the superintendent. He was Mayor of the village of Piketon from 1882 to 1890, and was a Justice of the Peace of Seal Township from 1883 to 1886. He was a member of the School Board in Piketon from 1889 to 1897. He was elected State Senator in the Seventh Senatorial District composed of Adams, Pike, Jackson and Scioto in the fall of 1899. At the organization of the Senate he was made Chairman of Finance, and was placed second on the Judiciary Committees and on the Committees on Public Works and Insurance. In 1901 he was re-elected to the Senate in the same district.

He was married May 18th, 1882, to Miss Lizzie M. Bateman, daughter of Rev. Samuel Bateman, of Piketon. They have six children, two boys and four girls. In his political faith Mr. Patterson is an earnest Republican, and was chairman of the Republican Executive Committee for the first three years Pike County went Republican.

He is a man of strong convictions, but cautious and conservative in the expression of them. While among his friends, he is gentle and reserved in his manner, at the same time he is one of the most positive men, and firm in his purposes. As a lawyer; the longer he devotes himself to a cause; the stronger he becomes in it. He has great reserve force, he always appears to have something reserved for a denouement. He has rare judgement and fine discrimination. He seldom reaches a false conclusion. As a lawyer, he is an untiring worker. In taking up a case he masters the facts, and then the law, then he prepares his pleadings which are models of accuracy. He gives great promise as a lawyer. As a member of the Ohio Senate, he has already taken a high position amongst his fellow Senators. He bids fair to make an enviable reputation as a Legislator.

Issue Bonser was elected. Samuel Crull contested his seat and it was awarded to him.

Joseph Lucas

was born in Virginia, in 1771. His father, William Lucas, was born in 1742, and served throughout the Revolutionary War, raising to the rank of Captain. He belonged to one of the proud families of Virginia. He owned extensive lands and negroes. His son, Joseph, was married in Virginia, in 1792, to Hannah Humphreys. He and his brother, William, came to the Northwest Territory in 1797, to locate their father's land warrants. They located at the mouth of Pond Creek in what is now Rush Township, Scioto County, then Adams County. In 1800, Captain William Lucas, father of our subject, sold his possessions in Virginia, and came to the Northwest Territory, and joined his sons. He had a son, John, who laid out the town of Lucasville in Scioto County, and his son, Robert, was Rep-representative and Senator in the Ohio Legislature for nineteen years; Governor of the State 1832 to 1834; and Territorial Governor of Iowa from 1838 to 1841.

Joseph Lucas was one of the three Representatives from Adams County, in the First Legislature of Ohio, which met in Chillicothe, March 1st, 1803, and continued its sessions until April 15th, 1803. This is the Legislature which met under a sycamore tree on the bank of the Scioto River.

Joseph Lucas was well educated, and took a prominent part in public affairs. His colleagues from Adams County in the House were: William Russell and Thomas Kirker; in the Senate General Joseph Darlington. At this session, Scioto County was organized and Joseph Lucas was made one of its Associate Judges, in which office he continued until his death in 1808. In politics he was a follower of Thomas Jefferson; and in religion he was a Presbyterian. Dying at the early age of thirty-seven, a most promising career was cut short. He left three sons and three daughters. His daughter, Rebecca, married Jacob Hibbs, Sr., and was the mother of General Joseph L. Hibbs and Jacob Hibbs of Portsmouth, Ohio. His daughter, Levisa, married Jacob Brown, of Pike County, and became the mother of several well known citizens of that County. His sons, Joseph and Samuel, located in Muscatine, Iowa, and died there. Harry Hibbs, of the firm of J. C. Hibbs & Company, of Portsmouth, Ohio, is a great-grandson. The Hon. S. L. Patterson, of Waverly, Senator for the seventh district, is his great-grandson.

Judge Joseph Lucas was one of the active characters of Adams County, but fell a victim to the untried climate which the pioneers found in their first settlement.

Colonel Daniel Collier came to the Northwest Territory in 1794. He was born in January, 1764, and died on his large farm on Ohio Brush Creek, where he was buried, April 17th, 1835. Colonel Collier selected the site of his future home on Ohio Brush Creek while surveying in that region with Nathaniel Massie and others. The lands, five hundred acres, were purchased from General William Lytle, who held military warrants of Jonathan Tinsley, John Shaver and George Shaver, Virginia Line, Continental Establishment.

Colonel Collier was prominently identified with the public affairs of Adams County in his time. The Second Legislative Session was from December 5th, 1803, to February 17th, 1804. The General Assembly was the Constitutional term for the Legislature, and met on the first Monday of December in each year. At this session, Daniel Collier, of Tiffin Township, John Wright, of Sprigg, and Abraham Shepherd, of Byrd Township, represented Adams in the Lower House. At the fourth legislative session under the second appointment, December 2nd, 1805, to January 27th, 1806, Phillip Lewis, Daniel Collier and Abraham Shepherd were representatives from Adams and Scioto Counties. He was commissioned Colonel of the Third Regiment, First Brigade, Second Division, of Militia, by Governor Samuel Huntington, December 29th, 1809. He served in the war of 1812, and was in the engagement at Sandusky. On May 2nd, 1814, Acting Governor Othniel Looker, endorsed Colonel Collier's resignation as follows: "The resignation of this commission is accepted on account of long service, advanced age and bodily infirmities." Among Colonel Collier's old tax receipts in possession of one of his grand children, is one dated September 8th, 1801, for one hundred and seventy-five cents, his land tax for that year and subscribed by John Lodwick, Collector for Adams County. In 1811, the tax on the same land was nine dollars, as shown by the receipt of Thomas Massie, Collector. His wife was Elizabeth Prather, born December 9th, 1768, and died August 4th, 1835. He had twelve children: James, John, Thomas, Daniel, Joseph, Richard, Isaac, Sarah, Elizabeth, Katherine, Luther and Harriet.

Abraham Shepherd

came from Virginia's best blood. His grandfather was Captain Thomas Shepherd; and his grandmother was Elizabeth Van Meter, daughter of John Van Meter. His father John Shepherd was born in 1749; and in 1773 he was married to Martha Nelson, born in 1750. They had seven children, six of whom were born in Shepherdstown, Virginia, and one at Wheeling Creek, Ohio. Captain Thomas Shepherd, his grandfather, died in 1776; and among other property he left a mill, which fell to his son, John, (father of our subject), who was a soldier. He was a private in Captain William Cherry's Company, 4th Virginia Infantry, from April, 1777, to March, 1778. The regiment was commanded by Colonel Thomas Elliott and Major Isaac Beall. His brother, Abraham, was a Captain of the 11th Virginia Regulars. Captain Abraham Shepherd on August 13th, 1787, entered 1,000 acres of land, Entry No. 1,060, at Red Oak, Brown County, Ohio on Virginia Military Warrant, 290, for his own services. This was surveyed November 3rd, 1791, by Nathaniel Massie, deputy surveyor; Duncan McKenzie and Robert Smith being chain carriers and Thomas Stout, marker. Our subject was born August 13th, 1776, at Shepherdstown, now Jefferson County, Virginia. Next year his father was in the service and so continued most of the time during the war. From 1781 to 1787, his father operated a flour mill; and his son Abraham learned something of the business. It is said Abraham received a liberal education, for his time and surroundings. The details of that education we do not know; but we do know that he learned the operations of his father's mill, and the art of land surveying. In 1793, John Shepherd removed to Limestone, Kentucky, where he remained two years. In 1795, he removed to what was then Adams County, Ohio, but what is now Red Oak, in Brown County, located on the tract entered by his brother, Captain Abraham Shepherd. In 1799, our subject married Margaret Moore. He was at that time living at Red Oak. Soon after this he bought a part of Captain Phillip Slaughter's survey No. 588 on Eagle Creek and built a brick house on it, now owned by Baker Woods. Here he also built and operated the mill afterwards known as Pilson's Mill. In October, 1803, he was elected one of the three representatives of Adams County in the Lower House, and took his seat December 5th, 1803. He continued to represent Adams County in the House by successive re-elections until February 4th, 1807. He remained out till December 4th, 1809, when he again represented Adams County and continued to do so till January 30th, 1811. In December, 1809, he received two votes for U. S. Senator, but Alexander Campbell was elected. From December 1st, 1806, to February 4th, 1807, he was Speaker of the House. At the same time Thomas Kirker, also from Adams County, was Speaker of the Senate. He seems to have dropped out of the Legislature from January 30th, 1811, to December 4th, 1815. He was then in the War of 1812, as Captain of a Company, and had two of his men shot by Indians, as they were returning home in 1812. In 1813, he was Captain of a Company in Major Edward's Battalion, 1st Regiment, 1st Brigade, 2nd Division, Ohio Militia. From December 4th, 1815, to February 27th, 1816, he was a member of the Senate from Adams County. He was a member of the Senate from Adams County in the fifteenth legislative session; and was Speaker at the same time Ex-Gov. Kirker was speaker in the House, he and Shepherd having exchanged offices from the fifth legislative session. In 1816, he was one of the eight presidential electors of Ohio, and cast his vote for James Monroe. Brown County was set off from Adams and Clermont by the Legislature December 27th, 1817; and Abraham Shepherd procured the passage of the act in the Senate. In 1818, the first court was held in Brown County; and he was appointed Clerk and served for seven years. In 1825, he was sent back to the Senate from Adams and Brown. During this twenty-fourth legislative session, from December 8th, 1825, to February, 3rd, 1826, he was appointed a member of the State Board of Equalization for the sixth district, the first State Board appointed. From December 4th, 1826, to January 31st, 1827, he was again in the Senate for Adams and Brown, and was again its Speaker. He was a Presbyterian in faith and practice; and was a ruling elder in that church. The records of the Chillicothe Presbytery show that he attended, as a delegate, in 1823, 1830 and 1832. He was a prominent Mason and Master of the lodge at Ripley in 1818. In 1815, he built and operated Pilson's Mills on Eagle Creek then in Adams County, now in Jefferson township, Brown County. He held this until about 1817, when he sold it and went to Ripley. He built the Buckeye mill on Red Oak, and operated it with steam as early as 1825. While engaged in this he was a pork packer. He had a pleasing appearance, and was large and portly. No picture of him was preserved or can be obtained. He was popular with all sorts and conditions of his fellow men. He was possessed of unbounded energy and wonderful perseverance; and naturally became a man of influence and importance in his community. As a legislator and as presiding officer of the two houses, his services commanded the respect and commendation of his constituents and his fellow members. In farming, he excelled his neighbors; and he made more improvements on his farm, and did it more rapidly than any of them. As a miller, he did more business than his competitors; and the same is true of his pork packing. In 1834 he met with financial reverses, and in consequence removed to Putnam County, Illinois where he lived until his death, on January 16th, 1847. When the slavery question came to be agitated, he became strongly anti-slavery. While he acted with the Democratic party in his earlier career, he abandoned it later on account of slavery and became an Abolitionist. His influence was always on the side of justice and right.

Daniel McKinney, Sr.

was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in the year 1744. He served in the early part of the Revolutionary War, the first two years in the Pennsylvania Militia. He was a locksmith and gunsmith by trade, and as such, his services were in great demand. About 1778, while he was burning a coal pit near his home, he was captured by the Indians. He had left his coal pit to go past some brush and timber to his potato patch to gather potatoes. He gathered the potatoes and was returning to his coal pit when a party of fifteen Indians, secreted behind a fallen tree top, took him a prisoner. They took him down the Ohio River to the mouth of the Wabash River, and up that river some distance. They kept him with them about a year, and then took him to Detroit and sold him to the British. He was kept a prisoner about Detroit for some time, and one day some man wanted a gun lock repaired. There was a person at Detroit who pretended to do that work but was not able to do it, well. McKinney saw him at work and offered to help. It was then discovered that McKinney was a gunsmith; and the British then required him to make guns for the Indians, their allies in fighting the Americans. They gave him $2.50 a day to make gun barrels and to finish the guns; but he was shut up in prison every night. He made the guns; but he spoiled every gun barrel so that they could not be relied upon to shoot his countrymen. It is supposed that he made about 250 guns and spoiled them all but one. There was one Indian who knew what a good gun was, and he got on to McKinney's scheme; he told him he would not betray him if he would make him a perfect gun, which McKinney did. It is said, that the Indians used one of McKinney's guns and shot seventeen times at Gen. Washington, but could not hit him once. McKinney remained a prisoner at Detroit until about 1783 when he was released. He went back to Pennsylvania and was married to Millie Douthett. They had the following children: Theodore born 1785; Daniel, jr., born 1787; and Cynthia born 1789, who married Nathaniel Skinner. The second wife of Daniel McKinney, Sr., was Mary Hodnett. She had the following children, Solomon, James, Thomas, Charles and Willam. Daniel McKinney, Sr., was a member of the Legislature from Scioto County from December 4th, 1800, until February 21st, 1812. He was a very active, energetic man and citizen. He died June 17th, 1816. Daniel McKinney, jr., his son, was the father of Lorenzo Dow McKinney, who has a separate sketch herein. Daniel McKinney, jr., was married June 25th, 1808, to Kate Sampson by Thomas Waller, Justice of the Peace. They had the following children: Cynthia, married Jacob Bennett; Randolph, Benjamin Franklin, Lorenzo Dow, born June 17th, 1816, and Susannah, his twin sister, who married David Hahn, a famous stage driver.

Daniel McKinney, jr., was a Commissioner of Scioto County, from 1824 to 1827. He died at the age of 44, but his wife survived until 1875. He was a farmer all his life. He was buried in the Squires graveyard in Madison Township.

Ezra Osborn.

The date of his arrival in Portsmouth is not precisely known, but it was probably about 1810. He was a native of Vermont and came to Portsmouth, already married. He never had any children. His wife Abigail, died in advanced life, February 6th, 1838, as the papers stated, after a lingering illness. His first official appearance in Portsmouth was in 1813, when he was elected a Justice of the Peace in Wayne Township.

In 1816, he was elected to the Legislature and re-elected in 1818 and 1819. On August 5th, 1819, he was appointed President Judge of the Common Pleas and served until February 6th, 1820, when he was elected by the Legislature. February 9th, 1826, he retired and in March, 1826, he was elected a Justice of the Peace of Wayne Township, and was re-elected, and served continuously until his death in 1840. In the fall of 1826, he was a candidate for the Legislature, but did not reach the office.

He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a leader in it. He was a faithful Sunday school teacher. He must have been a man of property and substance, since he was often received as surety on Treasurers' bonds. His home was on the south side of Second street, where the Adams Express office stands. When elected Justice of the Peace in 1826, he had 71 votes and John Brown had 48. In 1829, when re-elected, he had 27 votes, all that were cast. In 1830 he was an Overseer of the Poor in Wayne Township. On February 28th, 1830, he presided at the meeting when the Scioto County Bible Society was organized.

In 1830, he was a fence viewer of Wayne Township. In 1831, he was Deputy Auditor of Scioto County and President of the Council.

In 1837, he was Deputy Treasurer. In 1816, he was allowed $4.00 for listing the property in Portsmouth. He was a short fleshy man, of an easy temperament, and, in his personal appearance, he much resembled Judge Towne.

In politics, he was a Whig. He was born about 1773 and consequently, was about 37 years of age when he came to Portsmouth.

As a lawyer he had no particular ability; but he was a good citizen, and a consistent Christian. His tastes and inclinations were all for the humbler duties of the profession. He was probably better suited for the office of Justice of the Peace, than that of President Judge of the Common Pleas.

He had a stroke of paralysis in the fall of 1839, which disabled him. He survived till April 18th, 1840, when he died. His burial place is unknown. William Hall was his administrator and settled his estate.

William Collings

was born in Maryland, on December 11th, 1780. He was the eldest son of James Collings, a Revolutionary soldier, whose record, as such, is given herein. His mother's name was Christian Davis, of the same family as the Honorable Henry Winter Davis. They were married February 20th, 1780. His father emigrated to Ohio and bought 400 acres of land just south of West Union, O.; where he died in 1802 at the early age of forty-eight. He is interred in the Collings Cemetery just south of the village. William moved to Scioto County, soon after his father's death and located in that part afterwards set off to Pike. He at once took a prominent position in Pike County; and was its first Sheriff, 1815 to 1818. In 1824, he was elected a member of the House of Representatives to represent the District composed of Lawrence, Scioto and Pike Counties. During his membership, William Henry Harrison was elected United State Senator. Mr. Collings was in the war of 1812 with a horse company under Col. Barnes. He was well informed and was a thorough business man. He was a Federalist and later a Whig. His home was on a farm three miles south of Piketon. It is still known as the Collings farm. William Vulgamore resides on it. Our subject was married to Priscilla Guthery, a daughter of one of the early settlers of Pike County. He had three daughters and one son. His daughter, Lydia married John Chestnut and left issue, William Chestnut, who resides in Cleveland. His daughter, Louisa, married William Sargeant and left no issue. His daughter, Minerva married Charles Sargeant, and left no issue. His son, James Collings, was born in 1815 and married Ada Jane Cole, daughter of James Cole. He died in 1856, and she resides in Piketon. They had children, Guthery, and William Cole; a son died in infancy, a daughter, Kate Ellen, married J. W. Lang and resides in Waverly; a daughter, Nancy, married Lorenzo Dow Philips and resides in Piketon. William Collings died, March 11th, 1826, aged forty-five years and three months. His wife was born July 16th, 1777, and died October 21st, 1878, aged ninety-five years, nine months and five days.

was born in 1767. In his childhood he was on the frontier in Pennsylvania and was accustomed to assist the men who were protecting the mills against the Indians, during the Revolutionary War. He had a taste for hunting and back woods life, and became a very expert hunter and woodsman. At the age of sixteen he was employed as a guide and hunter for a surveying party in the back woods of Pennsylvania. He became such an expert hunter and woodsman that he could no more be lost in the forest than an Indian. In the spring of 1795, he was selected by a party of would be emigrants to visit the Northwest Territory and select a location for settlement. He went alone, on foot, with nothing but his rifle, blanket and such equipment as he could carry. He crossed the Ohio river and wandered along the north bank of the river, until he reached the east bank of the Little Scioto river. He had marked out a piece of ground with his tomahawk, supposing that he would be entitled to it by priority of discovery and locality, and by marking it out. At that time there was no settlement on the north side of the river between Gallipolis and Manchester. Bonser camped out alone on this trip. When he was ready to start back, he met the surveying party under Mr. Martin who had just finished surveying the French Grant lots. They were returning to Marietta in a canoe. Mr. Bonser found them in a bad predicament. They had exhausted their stock of provisions, their powder had become damp, and they were in danger of starving. Mr. Bonser took in the situation at a glance. He proposed to them that as he was going up into Pennsylvania, if they would take his baggage into their canoe, he would travel on shore, with nothing but his rifle to carry, and supply them with all the game they needed. He would kill a deer or turkey, bear or buffalo as occasion offered, and they could carry the game in the canoe. The first night they were together Bonser examined their powder, and showed them how to dry it out. He dried it out by sticking a forked stick in the ground a safe distance from the fire, on which he hung the powder horn, after taking out the stopper, and let the steam from the powder pass out slowly. He left the powder horn in that position until morning, when the heat of the fire had completely dried it out.

The party traveled in this manner to Marietta where Mr. Martin reported to General Putnam; and Bonser continued his trip to Pennsylvania. Isaac Bonser was the first white man to visit Scioto County with the view of settlement. He saw the whole country before the banks of the river had been disturbed, or any timber cut down by white men. The next year the five families, for whom he had made the trip, set out to locate in Scioto County. They went to the Monongahela river, and built a boat large enough for them and their families. They arrived at the mouth of the Scioto, August 10th, 1796, and took possession of the ground Bonser had staked out the year before. The men in the party were Isaac Bonser, Uriah Barber, John Beaty, William Ward, and Ephriam Adams. They found two families ahead of them, Samuel Marshall and John Lindsey, who had moved up from Manchester a few months before. Isaac Bonser located above the mouth of the creek and built the third cabin in Scioto County. He cleared a field and fenced it, preparatory to raising a crop the following season. He had a field of eight or ten acres prepared in which he planted corn and such other vegetables as were needed. This was the first attempt to cultivate the soil in Scioto County. He built a water-mill one mile from the mouth of the Little Scioto, in 1798, at the mouth of Bonser's Run. In the summer of 1798, when the Ohio River was very low and he was engaged in building his mill, having all the men from the settlement helping him, five bears came to the settlement where the women were at work. They made it so hot for the bears that they took to the trees, and Barney Monroe came along and shot all five of them. As soon as the land office was opened in Chillicothe in 1801, Isaac Bonser secured the land on which his mill was built and kept a mill there until his death.

The land was said to have sold for $2.00 per acre, being congress lands, and sold for cash only.

Bonser built a house and planted an orchard. Some of the apple trees he planted out are still living. In 1803, Bonser and Uriah Barber and another party took a contract to make a wagon road to Gallipolis from Portsmouth. In June, 1804, he was a grand juror. On July 4th, 1808, there was a great celebration on the farm of Major Bonser. It had been announced before hand and parties came from Gallipolis, West Union, and other points. For want of a cannon, they bored out a log and banded it with iron but it burst during the firing. Robert Lucas read the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. Bonser took an active part in organizing the militia of this county. There were ten companies and he was elected a Major of the Militia. In 1813, he went out in the general call as Major of the Militia and went as far as Sandusky. He was County Commissioner from 1814 to 1820. In 1817, he built an overshot mill, the only one of the kind ever built in Scioto County. He was a member of the Legislature from 1826 to 1828. He was very fond of tinkering with mills. This mill he kept until his death. He had some peculiar ideas. He thought the price of wheat and corn should never vary, and corn should sell at twenty-five cents and wheat at fifty cents per bushel. He was a very industrious man, and worked diligently, no matter what the condition of the weather was, whether cold or warm. He worked at his mill until he was upwards of eighty years of age, and his last sickness lasted but a week. He died in Scioto County in 1849, aged eighty-three years. While he was fond of hunting, he would not kill game for sport. He would only do so when it was required for meat; and it was a common thing for him, on account of his being such an expert hunter, to hunt for other families as well as his own. In his politics he was always a Democrat. He voted for Jackson, in 1824, when there were few men of his kind in the county. He was never a member of any church, but his wife was a Baptist. Her name was Abigail Burt. She was born in New Jersey in 1770. They had four children before they came to Ohio. Their oldest son, Joseph, was killed by the premature discharge of a cannon, in 1836, when he was attempting to fire a salute in honor of General Jackson. She died in 1853, near Sciotoville, in her eighty-third year.

The four children born in Pennsylvania were: Joseph, Jane, Hannah and Samuel. The six born in Ohio were: Isaac, Sally, Jacob, Uriah, John and Nathaniel.

James Rogers

was born in Cumberland County, Pa., Dec. 7th, 1787, the only son of Andrew and Mary Duncan Rogers. His father emigrated from County Tyrone, Ireland, at the close of the Revolution. When James was a child, his father removed to Washington Co., Pa. At sixteen our subject was apprenticed to John Rhodes to learn the trade of a millwright; and he served his time till the age of twenty-one. He then took a flat boat of merchandise to Nashville, Tenn., in the fall of 1799, and wintered there. He returned to Pennsylvania and worked at his trade with the Pittsburg Steam Engine Co. In May 1813, that Company sent him to attach steam power to the Brush Creek Furnace in Adams County, which he did; and that was the first attempt to blow a blast furnace by steam in this country. His next work was to put up a steam engine, for a saw and grist mill, at New Albany, Ind. He built Steam Furnace in Adams County, in 1816, and with Andrew Ellison and the Pittsburg Steam Engine Co., as partners under the name of James Rogers & Co., he run it until 1826. In that year he went prospecting in Lawrence County, and as a result, on the 4th of July of that year, he began the erection of Union Furnace, the firm again being James Rogers & Co., but composed of himself, John Sparks and Valentine Fear. This was the first blast furnace in Lawrence County. He represented Adams County in the Legislature, in 1825, and 1826, with Col. John Means as his colleague.

From 1830 and 1832, he represented Scioto and Lawrence Counties in the House. In 1837 to 1839, he represented Athens, Meigs, Gallia and Lawrence in the Senate. In 1849, and 1850, he again represented Scioto and Lawrence in the House.

He was married three times. He was a Presbyterian in his religious faith. His funeral was June 9th, 1860, conducted by Rev. Dan Young. He was buried first at Hanging Rock and afterwards at Spring Grove, Cincinnati. He was a son of Oliver Rogers, who lives in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Gen. Edward Hamilton

was the Chevalier Bayard of Portsmouth. He was a gentleman by instinct and by culture, and was always self-possessed. As a lawyer, he was not eminent, but as a citizen and a patriot, he was pre-eminent. He was a citizen of Portsmouth from June, 1826 to October, 1849, a period of twenty-three years. The date or place of his birth is not known; but he came from Wheeling to Portsmouth, and was married after coming here. He first published his card June 18th, 1826, in the Western Times. In his day, Justices of the Peace were usually elected at special elections. On December 20th, 1826, he was elected a Justice of the Peace for Wayne Township. 112 votes were cast. He had 59, while John Noel had 51. January 1st, 1831, he became the editor of the Portsmouth Courier. Elijah Glover being the publisher. He remained the editor one year. July 4th, 1831, at the famous celebration of the day, he delivered the oration. In 1833 and 1834, he represented Scioto County in the legislature.

December 6th, 1836, he began the publication of the Scioto Tribune, having purchased the Courier of Mr. E. Glover. In 1839, Silman Clark took an interest in the paper and the name was changed to the Portsmouth Tribune. February 14th, 1840, he and Silman Clark retired from the Tribune, and were succeeded by Hutchins and Blinn.

From 1838 to 1842, he was Mayor of the Town of Portsmouth. On August 12th, 1842, he announced that he would thereafter devote himself exclusively to the practice of the law; but he did not stick to his promise; for in a short time he returned to the Tribune as its editor, and continued to be such until he went into the Mexican War.

In 1842, he built the Judge Towne residence on Court street, just south of Captain William Moore's residence. A door entered the dining room from the alley. This room he used for an office for sometime. That door has long since been bricked up, but its location can be noticed.

In 1840, he was Examiner of the Public Schools. When he was elected Mayor in 1840, he received 125 votes and L. C. Goff 51. From 1843 to 1847, he was President of the Council. Feb. 20th, 1846, he formed a law partnership with E. W. Jordan, as Hamilton and Jordan. He resigned July 6th, 1846, to go into the Mexican War. He was a strong Whig; yet he raised a Company to go into the Mexican War. It was Co., D. 1st Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Edward Hamilton was appointed Captain, June 1st, 1846. May 2nd, 1846, he was a Major General of the Ohio Militia. His Company was made up almost entirely from the County and about the furnaces. The regiment was in the battle of Monterey, September 21st, 1846, and saw some hard service. It lost 66 men by death, 24 killed and 42 died of disease. From October 15th, 1847, to October 6th, 1849, he was Town Clerk. On February 16th, 1849, he was one of the committee of Council to receive and welcome General Taylor, on his way up the river to Washington to be inaugurated President.

General Taylor, who remembered him in Mexico, gave him a most cordial welcome and had him remain on the boat and go up the river with him some distance. It is believed that, on this trip, he promised Mr. Hamilton the office which he gave him the next October.

In August, 1849, he was appointed examiner of the Public Schools. October 14th, 1849, he resigned as Town Clerk, on account of his removal.

President Taylor had appointed him Secretary of the Territory of Oregon and he had accepted. He left with the Council the flag he had carried through the Mexican War; and the Council accepted it by proper resolution.

Mr. Hamilton possessed excellent literary tastes. He frequently gave public lectures on educational subjects. He was never prominent as a lawyer. His income as such in 1830 was rated at $300.00, and never above $800.00. He preferred the quieter walks of the profession. He was a communicant of All Saints Church and he and Mr. Burr were great friends. When Monterey was captured, Gen. Taylor appointed him Military Governor of the place; and in discharge of his duties, he greatly pleased the General. It was a Red Letter day in Portsmouth, when he and his Company returned from the Mexican War. They were given a public welcome. Those who knew him best, say he was entitled to better success as a lawyer than he obtained; that he was too high toned to obtain much practice.

When he began as a Justice of the Peace, some of the members of the bar thought to make a guy of him. They got up a sham lawsuit. One of them sued Wm. V. Peck, in trover, for the conversion of a pen knife. A very strongly contested law suit was held before Esq. Hamilton. He presided with great dignity. Witnesses were examined and arguments made. The value of the knife was taxed at $1.50 and Peck was found guilty and adjudged to pay the value of the knife and costs. The lawyers left the Court in high glee, thinking they had perpetuated a great joke. Soon after, Hamilton issued execution; and Lawyer Peck had to pay the judgement and costs in full.

Prior to 1842, Mr. Hamilton resided in a frame house on the Judge Towne lot. It was destroyed by fire. The citizens raised a fund and tendered him, but he declined it. He had a daughter, who was grown in 1849. He and his wife and daughter left New York for Oregon in a sailing vessel, the "Supply," around Cape Horn. Aaron Kinney, who was in love with the daughter, went along. On board there was an Army Officer who fell in love with this daughter, Genevieve, on the long voyage; and afterwards married her. Aaron Kinney remained a bachelor. After Oregon became a State, Hamilton is said to have been a Supreme Judge and to have made quite a judicial reputation. He is said to have lived to about the age of 80, but his life after leaving Portsmouth is mere tradition and we have been unable to communicate with his family.

He was slender, fine appearing, and carried himself with great dignity. His father lived with him in Portsmouth and wore the old style apparel. He had his hair braided in a queue, and always wore it that way.

Governor Hamilton while a resident of Portsmouth, was poor in pocket, but rich in integrity. He was a gentleman from every point and is affectionately remembered by all who knew him.

Nelson Barrere

was born near Newmarket, Highland County, Ohio, April 1st, 1808, and was the seventh of twelve children. His father was George W. Barrere, a very prominent citizen of Highland County. He was a deputy surveyor, Justice of the Peace, member of the Ohio Senate nine years, and an Associate Judge of Highland County for fourteen years. He fought in the Indian War, and participated in St. Clair's defeat and Wayne's victory. He was also in the War of 1812 at Hull's surrender, and was in every public enterprise in Highland County until his death in 1839. His son Nelson, lived on the farm until eighteen years of age and attended school in the winters. He spent a year in the Hillsboro High School, and in 1827, entered the Freshman class at Augusta College. He graduated from there in 1830, finishing a four years course in three and one half years.

In 1831, he began the study of law in Hillsboro with Judge John W. Price and was admitted to the bar on December 23rd, 1833. He opened an office in Hillsboro and remained there nine months. He located in West Union in 1834, forming a partnership with Samuel Brush. This partnership continued for a year. He remained in West Union eleven years altogether, and had a large and lucrative practice. He had the confidence of the people. He represented Adams Scioto and Brown Counties in the Lower House of the Legislature at the thirty-sixth Legislative session from December 44th, 1837, to March 4th, 1853. In 1853, he was the Whig candidate for Governor, but was defeated, receiving 85,847 votes, while his competitor, William Medill received 147,663. When the Whig party dissolved, he went over to the Democratic party, in which he remained during the remainder of his life; but during the Civil War he supported the Republican administration. In 1870, he was a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket, but was defeated. He was the Democratic candidate from Highland County for member of the Constitutional Convention, in 1875, and was defeated by one vote. He never married. He continued in the active practice of law until his death, which occurred August 20th, 1883.

In Adams County, during his residence there, he was very popular. He was always conspicuous for his public spirit. As a lawyer he was energetic and industrious. He was a safe and reliable counselor, and an eloquent and successful advocate. He was always agreeable and courteous in his manners. In West Union, he formed many warm friendships, and he, Joseph Allen Wilson, Davis Darlington, and others had a club at Darlington's store to which they resorted of evenings and spent many pleasant hours. Joseph West Lafferty and John Fisher, of Cedar Mills, were two of his most particular friends in Adams County. The author of this work received his name Nelson, in honor of Mr. Barrere.

Dan Young

was born April 7th, 1783, in Grafton County, New Hampshire. His father was Jesse Young, an officer from Massachusetts in the Revolutionary War, who was born and reared in Massachusetts. His mother, Ruby Richardson was a native of Connecticut. His ancestors on both sides were from England. Dan Young was the third child of his parents. He first heard of Methodism when he heard Rev. Jesse Lee in 1798. When twenty-one he was a school teacher, and soon after became a local preacher in the M. E. Church. In his twenty-second year, he was admitted to the New England Conference of the M. E. Church; and went to the New Grantham Circuit as Junior preacher. In 1806, he was sent to Barre Circuit, in Vermont. The same year he began the study of Latin. In 1807, he was assigned to Athens Circuit, Vermont. In 1808, he went to Hanover Circuit, New Hampshire and while there studied Hebrew at Dartmouth College. In 1809, he attended Conference at New London, Conn., where he and his brother James were ordained elders. He was sent to Lynn, Massachusetts. He was in the Legislature of New Hampshire from 1812 to 1813. At that time it was customary to treat the electors to whiskey. Dan Young refused to do this and gave the money to the School Fund. After election he introduced a bill to suppress the custom, and it became a law. He was in the Senate of New Hampshire from 1816 to 1821. He introduced a bill in the Senate to forbid the levying of taxes for the support of the State Church. At the first session it failed to pass and received but two votes, one besides his own. He introduced it four times before it passed. In 1820, he formed a company and started for Ohio. He was a member of the New Hampshire Senate and resigned. His company went to the Alleghany River in wagons, thence down the river in flat boats from Orlean, New York. They landed at Hayport and located at what is now Wheelersburg, Ohio. Dan Young called it Concord, for the capital of his native State. He built a cotton factory there and sent his brother South to buy cotton to manufacture. October 29th, 1824, he preached the funeral of Daniel Corwine, at the Presbyterian Meeting House in Portsmouth, Ohio. In March, 1825, Dan and James Young were engaged in wool carding at Wheelersburg, Ohio. Soon after Dan Young located at Concord, he learned there was iron in the hills northeast of there, and he determined to utilize it. He organized the Ohio Iron Company. It was incorporated by special act of the Legislature, passed February 18th, 1830. Vol. 28, O. L., p. 106. He was President of the Company. The capital stock was $100,000 and shares were $500 each. He built Franklin Furnace in 1827. He, John Young, Jesse Y. Whitcomb, Josiah Merrill, John Hurd, Martin Ruter, all from New Hampshire, were proprietors. It was the first blast furnace in Scioto County. It ceased operation in 1860. Dan Young went to Franklin to reside. He and his Company built Junior Furnace also. In 1828, he was Secretary of the Sunday School Union of the County. In 1832, he was a candidate for State Senator. That year Franklin and Junior Furnaces made $300 worth of iron per day. Franklin Furnace burned in 1836, and the stack at Junior gave away. These two furnaces made from 10 to 20 tons of iron per day; but one would out sell the other and the Company broke up. In 1840, and 1841, he represented the Counties of Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto in the Ohio House of Representatives. In 1809, he was married to Miss Clough of Northfield, New Hampshire. The children of this marriage were: Maria, wife of Doctor George B. Crane; Flora, Jesse and Charles G., who became distinguished as a Railroad President in Texas, and was killed in a railroad accident, leaving a large family; Electa, the wife of Doctor Pryor of Missouri; Dan; Martin became a lawyer and died in Shreveport, Louisiana; John; Eliza, the wife of Joseph Glidden; Augustus, died young of consumption; and Catharine married her cousin, Jefferson W. Glidden. In 1832, Dan Young went back to New Hampshire and married his second wife, a Miss Clough, a sister of his first wife. His daughter Flora, the widow of a Mr. Clough returned with him. She had two sons, nearly grown, and three daughters, two of whom were young women. The canal at that time was only finished to Chillicothe; and Mr. Young hired carriages there and took his party home with him. At Chillicothe on this occasion, he met Doctor George B. Crane, who afterwards married one of his daughters. He married a third wife and raised a half dozen more children. Mrs. Clough had two sons and four daughters when she married Dan Young. Jesse Young married one of them, Mary Clough. Dan Young died March 30th, 1867.

In his pilgrimage to Ohio, he came from Lisbon, New Hampshire in wagons. With the party were Sophia Ely, Ruby Whitcomb and Narcissa Whitcomb. The three girls rode horseback from Wheeling to Wheelersburg landing. It took a week. In the party were Dan Young, his brother John Young, Josiah Merrill, the widow Preston with her two sons, Nathaniel and Ira, Nathaniel Whitcomb and Mrs. Sarah Smith, a widow.

Colonel William Oldfield.

Right at the outset we are called upon to determine which is the highest title Colonel of the Militia, or Associate Judge. As the editor of this work is the Tribunal, he unhesitatingly gives the preference to Colonel over Judge. Our subject was both a Militia Colonel and an Associate Judge, and was entitled to either title. He was born December 30th, 1790, in the State of New York. He came to Portsmouth, in 1814. The first we have on record of him in Portsmouth was in 1816, when he was married to Maria Hempstead, November 16th, 1816.

In 1820, he was a candidate for Sheriff. It was before the day of conventions and the race was free for all. The vote stood John Noel, 229; Elizabeth McInteer, 170; Marcus Bosworth, 128; Elijah Glover, 100; William Oldfield, 96; Joseph Bonser, 9.

In 1823, he was a Trustee of Wayne Township and the same year on July 4th, was elected to the Town Council to fill a vacancy. On the 23rd of October, 1823, he was one of the committee appointed by the Council to go to law about the front of the Town. In 1824, he was one of the committee to print twenty-five copies of the ordinances of the Town. In the same year on August 7th, he was elected a Justice of the Peace of Wayne Township, but resigned October 12th, 1826.

In 1826, he was appointed Associate Judge to fill a vacancy. He was elected by the Legislature on January 22nd, 1827, for seven years. He succeeded David Mitchell, who resigned and was succeeded by Joseph Moore.

In 1829, on February 6th, he was appointed with Kennedy Lodwick as a committee to select a new Cemetery. It was purchased May 6th, following. On July 4th, 1831, he presided at one of the greatest celebrations ever held in the county. October 13th, 1832, he was Marshal on the occasion of the opening of the canal.

In 1839, he was Colonel of the Militia. In 1844, and 1845, he represented Scioto and Lawrence Counties in the Legislature. During the one session he served, the State Bank of Ohio was incorporated and Thomas Corwin was elected U. S. Senator. In 1851, he was a candidate for Mayor, when Benjamin Ramsey was elected. He and Cornelius McCoy were candidates. The vote stood Oldfield, 387; McCoy, 203. In 1857, he was appointed Infirmary Director and served a few months.

He at one time owned three acres of land on the south-west corner of Sixth and Chillicothe streets; and had a distillery there. He then put up a mill near the Salladay place on the Chillicothe road and operated it a long time. Then he built the residence on Sixth street now owned by Robert Richardson, and occupied by John T. Breece. He resided there until his death, September 30th, 1861.

He was a communicant of the Episcopal Church, and in politics was always a Whig.

Colonel John A. Turley was born June 1st, 1816, at Moorefield, Hardy County, Virginia. His father was Doctor Charles A. Turley, and his mother's maiden name was Fannie Harness. For twelve years he attended school and studied Latin under Professor Alexander Wallace. His father was a graduate of William and Mary College. Our subject inherited the Davis farm in Valley Township. He came to Ohio, in 1836, and located near Chillicothe. In 1838, he came to Scioto County and located in Clay Township. From 1840 to 1843, he was a Justice of the Peace in that Township. From December 2nd, 1846 to February 8th, 1847, he represented Scioto and Lawrence Counties in the House, being elected as a Whig over Judge Batterson. He remained on his farm until 1856. He was appointed Assessor of the United States Internal Revenue by President Johnson, but the appointment was not confirmed. He organized the first School Board in Clay Township in 1851. On April 27th, 1861, he enlisted in Company G., 22nd O. V. I., for three months service, and was made Captain of the Company, at the age of forty-five. May 8th, 1861, he had a third Company ready for the war. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel May 23rd, 1861, and mustered out with the regiment August 19th, 1861. He was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the 81st O. V. I. August 19th, 1861; and resigned December 9th, 1861. August 22nd, 1862, he was appointed Colonel of the 91st O. V. I., and was discharged November 4th, 1864, for wounds received June 17th, 1864, in the battle of Lynchburg, Virginia. He was breveted Brigadier General March 13th, 1865, for gallant conduct in battle. He has been a member of the School Board in Portsmouth, a member of the City Council, Assessor of the United States Internal Revenue for seven months. In 1868, he ran as a candidate for Assessor in the Third Ward on the Democratic ticket and was defeated. In 1872, he was a candidate for Sheriff on the Republican ticket, and was defeated by John W. Lewis, by 207 votes, he being the only Republican defeated. From 1871 to 1873, and from 1887 to 1889, he was Mayor of the City of Portsmouth. He was married to Charlotte E. Robinson January 2nd, 1843, by Rev. C. Brooks. He died March 19th, 1900.

His sons were Augustus R. Turley, Hon. Henry Clay Turley and Leslie C. Turley. The two latter have sketches herein. His only daughter, Charlotte, married Hon. A. C. Thompson, Judge of the United States District Court of the Southern District of Ohio. Colonel Turley was born rich; and at one time owned one of the finest farms in the Scioto Valley, but lost all before his death. He was a good friend, but sometimes tried his friends by his ungovernable temper. He was a Whig while that party lasted and after that was a Republican. He was a patriot in the intensest sense of the term. He loved his country and would have sacrificed his all for it. He was a brave man and never knew what fear was. His temperament made him an ideal soldier; but his age was against him; and his wound disqualified him for further service. He was a great sportsman, and dearly loved hunting and fishing. In the last fifteen years of his life, he had retired from all business or employments and took life easy. His wife survives him, the last survivor of the children of Joshua V. Robinson.

Colonel Elias Nigh was born in Lancaster, Ohio, in 1815, and grew up there. His parents were of German ancestry. His grandfather was one of the early settlers of Connecticut. His father was Samuel Nigh. He was raised as a boy with William Tecumseh and John Sherman, and was always on the most intimate terms with them. He was educated in the common schools at Lancaster and studied law with the Hon. Thomas Ewing. He located in Lawrence County in 1845, at Burlington, Ohio, to practice law, and there he married Miss Alice Henshaw. He was a Whig as long as that party was in existence and then became a Republican. In October, 1847, he was elected a member of the 46th General Assembly to represent the Counties of Scioto and Lawrence, and attended the Legislature from December 6th, 1847, to February 25th, 1848. In the fall of 1859, he was elected a member of the 54th General Assembly as representative from Lawrence County, and served from January 2nd, 1860, until May 3rd, 1861. In the fall of 1875, he was elected a member of the 62nd General Assembly to represent Lawrence County and served from January 3rd, 1876, until May 7th, 1877. At the breaking out of the war, he was appointed Captain and Acting Quartermaster, United States Volunteers, August 5th, 1861, and was assigned to the Department of Ohio, Louisville, Kentucky. He was appointed Chief Quartermaster by General Buell, and was afterwards appointed Inspector General, Department of the Army of the Ohio, General Wright Commanding. January 1st, 1863, he was assigned Chief Quartermaster of the 16th Army Corps, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. On March 17th, 1864, he was commissioned Captain and Assistant Quartermaster in the regular army. He resigned both commissions June 28th, 1864. He supplied General Thomas' expedition to Mill Springs by wagons, from Lebanon, Kentucky. He was with Buell in the march to Pittsburg Landing; and had charge of the transportation of his troops from Savannah to Pittsburg Landing. When Buell's army retreated to Louisville, he was in charge of the Quartermaster's Department. He built bridges and removed stores across the Ohio river. After Rosecrans succeeded General Buell, he served as Inspector General of the Army of the Ohio, until January 1st, 1863, when he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and was assigned Chief Quartermaster of the 16th Army Corps. During the time of his last serving in the Legislature, he was greatly interested in the Ohio State University and had a bill introduced and made law to teach civil engineering in that institution. He was always prominent in the General Assembly. He removed to Ironton from Burlington in 1851. After the war, he began, in connection with Colonel Kingsbury, the Sheridan Coal Works in Lawrence County, Ohio. From March 20th, 1867, to May 20th, 1873, he was Assessor of Internal Revenue for the 11th District of Ohio. In all his views and conduct, Colonel Nigh was conservative. He considered every subject carefully and acted only after the gravest consideration. He was a great friend of the colored race and did much for its advancement. After the war, he brought many of the colored families to the North and found them homes and employment. He had seven children: Reese, Samuel H., Julia, Mary, Elizabeth, Alice and William. He died in Ironton, Ohio, February 3rd, 1899, and is buried in Woodland Cemetery, near that city.

Captain Samuel Huston was born at Winchester, Va., on September 2nd, 1801. His father, William Huston, was one of the pioneers of Portsmouth and moved into Wayne Township in 1802. William Huston built the fourth cabin in Portsmouth. When that Township was organized in 1809, he was one of the Trustees. In 1811, our subject saw the first steamboat pass down the Ohio river; and he saw the Aaron Burr expedition go down on bateaux. He also saw the Lewis and Clark expeditions go down in boats. In 1823, he married Elizabeth Leonard, daughter of Adam Leonard.

In 1824, he voted for General Jackson and was always a Democrat. As a youth, he learned the trade of making spinning wheels and worked at it several years.

In 1831, he kept a coffee house and grocery in Portsmouth. In 1832, he began building steamboats at Portsmouth, Ohio, and continued the business till 1848. He built the following steamboats, "Transit," "Sylph," "Eighth of January," "Belvidere," "Drana," "Irene," "Eureka" and "Home." Some he built and sold; and some he built for Dowell and Davis. He also ran a number of years, as Master, on steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers in the "Golden Days" of steamboating. He made a great deal of money in steamboating and kept it. He built the fine home, which stood on the southwest corner of Second and Court streets; and maintained a generous hospitality there for years. The leaders of his party were entertained there, whenever they came to Portsmouth.

In 1833, he was supervisor of the East ward in Portsmouth. In 1838, he was a town Councilman, and in 1841, was elected as Councilman from the Third ward. In 1847, he built and ran a saw mill for some time.

In 1852 to 1854, he was wharfmaster of Portsmouth, and in 1854 to 1856, he represented Scioto County in the State Legislature. In 1856 to 1857, he was City Treasurer of Portsmouth.

In 1840, he was Captain of the crack militia company of Portsmouth. He had it out on the Fourth of July and was Marshal of the procession.

In 1860, he took part in the Union Meeting, and was strong for the war. His wife reared James M. Ashley and was the founder of his fortunes. He was the father of fourteen children. His son, James was a naval cadet, and died in 1864. His son, William S. attained prominence as a lawyer, and at the bar, and died comparatively young.

His daughter, Maria, married Col. S. E. Varner. Mr. Huston was a good citizen, public spirited, upright and the soul of honor.

His daughter, Miss Irene, who cared for him and made his last years comfortable and happy, still resides at the old homestead on the Chillicothe Pike, endeared to all her friends by her most generous hospitality. His wife died January 14th, 1873 and he survived until February 27th, 1893. In his years of activity, he was one of the most active men of Portsmouth. He never feared to make a business venture and his business career was crowned with success. During the war he retired from all business and lived in dignified, honorable retirement the remainder of his life.

Daniel McFarland

was born in Baltimore, Maryland, September 3rd, 1825. His father was Daniel McFarland and his mother Rachel Owen. They emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, in 1832, where our subject was raised. The father was a shoemaker. Our subject had a brother, Albert, and a sister, Mary, who married Jonathan Siler. Albert learned the trade of a printer, and went to Circleville and ran a newspaper there. Daniel served three years in Columbus learning the carpenter's trade, and worked for his board and clothes. A. C. Tyler was his employer. September 9th, 1853, John Hanna sold the Tribune to A. McFarland who continued to publish it up to April 1st, 1854, when he associated with him in business his brother, Daniel McFarland. The Tribune was a Whig paper, and was issued over L. D. Bishop's store on Front street. He represented Scioto County in the Legislature from January 2nd, 1856, to April 17th, 1857. He was elected as a Know Nothing and the paper was a Know Nothing while that party lasted. In 1857, Dan McFarland went to Brown County, Kansas, then a territory, and was there until 1859. He pre-empted lands and built a Court House on a town site. He lost his time and money in trying to secure a county seat at Parsons. Hiawatha finally secured it. He was broken down by sickness and misfortune, and then returned to Ohio. When he came back he went to work for his brother as a printer. Just before the war broke out, Albert, his brother, secured an appointment to Washington as Secretary to Sherman. In 1861, Daniel McFarland bought the entire paper from his brother, who, since the dissolution in 1857, had been sole editor and proprietor of the daily and weekly Tribune. At this time the daily was discontinued. In June, 1867, the office was sold to H. R. W. Smith and David Elick. Our subject was appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue and served all of President Lincoln's term for the 11th Congressional District. It was worth $2,000 per year and McFarland had it for four years. After the death of President Lincoln Mr. McFarland refused to Johnsonize and was succeeded by a man who had no such scruples. November 20th, 1868, W. A. Hutchins, Thomas Dugan and Dan McFarland were appointed a Committee to go to Columbus and lobby for a new penitentiary.

On July 10th, 1872, Dan McFarland was serenaded at his home on East Second street, and declared for Greeley and Gratz Brown. He told the crowd they had not mistaken the place; that he would vote for Greeley if they would vote for the Railroad question under the Boesel law. He was agent for the Portsmouth Dry Dock Company for twenty years. He had 500 acres of land in his charge to attend to and cultivate for twenty years. There was enough sold to satisfy the mortgage by the company; and 100 acres were left after closing the mortgage. Captain Riley was President of the Company and John O'Brien was secretary. Mr. McFarland took charge of the land in 1861. He was Canal Collector at Portsmouth, Ohio, for twenty-one years, commencing in 1861. He again represented Scioto County in the Legislature from January 2nd, 1882, until April 19th, 1883. He was Chairman of the Committee of the Board of Public Works and did much to prevent the canals from being appropriated by private corporations. He was married in Columbus, Ohio, in 1849, to Lydia McCulloch. He died June 1st, 1900. He has one son Charles, a prominent attorney at Los Angeles, California. Mr. McFarland was a philosopher. After he returned from the Legislature in 1883, he lived a life of retirement. He was very fond of fishing, and would spend many days successively in fishing camps. No one ever enjoyed the ease and retirement of old age more than Mr. McFarland. He took all things easy and never permitted anything to worry him. He was just and punctual in all his dealings. As a citizen, he was always in favor of public improvements. He did more to secure the Scioto Valley Railroad than any citizen of Portsmouth. He was active in securing the car shops of that railroad at Portsmouth. He gave a large and liberal subscription to the Portsmouth Hotel Company which built the Washington Hotel and directed its payment in his last illness, when he knew it would never do him any good, and he would not live to see its completion. He was as public spirited and liberal a citizen as ever lived in the city of Portsmouth. He was a good public speaker and in a political campaign could not be excelled. While he was in politics, he seemed to enjoy its excitement, turmoil and clash. While engaged in the political field, among the people, he was known as "Black Dan," on account of his very dark complexion. The name was given to him by one in one of his audiences at Scioto Furnace, in an exciting political campaign. The name stuck to him and was adopted generally. As a promoter of public enterprises or a politician, he could always reach the hearts of the people and without any apparent effort.

Mr. McFarland suffered much in his last illness but as he had always done his best, he met the last enemy without any regrets or repinings. He knew his time had come and submitted to the inevitable like the philosopher he was.

was born June 12th, 1815, in Washington County, Pennsylvania. His father was James Ray and his mother's maiden name was Phebe Johnson. They were both born in Washington County, Pennsylvania. His father, James Ray, was a miller and distiller. Our subject had two brothers and seven sisters. His middle name, Boone is for the redoubtable Daniel. When he was seven years of age, his parents came to Ohio and located near Salem, in Jefferson County. He received his education in the common schools there and then followed the occupation of a country school teacher. He began the study of medicine in that county under Doctor Matthew Crawford. He came first to Jackson, but remained there but two weeks. He visited Portsmouth in 1843, and stopped at the McCoy tavern. He met Doctor Vogel song and declined a partnership. In 1844, he located at Harrisonville and that winter attended lectures at Starling Medical College, in Columbus, Ohio. He practised medicine in Harrisonville for a few years and then retired. He represented Scioto County in the Legislature from January 4th, 1858, to April 6th, 1859. April 30th, 1844, he was married to Hannah Dunlavy, daughter of Andrew Dunlavy in Steubenville, Ohio. They had six children. Doctor James B. Ray, jr., at Harrisonville was the eldest. They lost three in childhood. Their son William, lived to be a young man and died while a law student in Cincinnati, Ohio. Their youngest daughter, Jennie is the wife of J. H. Wyatt of Bell Center, Logan County, Ohio. Doctor Ray is a believer in the Christian religion, but is not a member of any church. He is a Democrat and always has been. He cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren, in 1836, and from that time to the present, has voted for every Democratic candidate for President. He died May 26th, 1901.

John Wesley Collings.

His father, Elijah Collings, was born March 5th, 1786, in Maryland. His father, James Collings came from Maryland in 1794 and located in Adams County, first in the stockade in Manchester, and in about 1796, on a tract of 400 acres of land just south of West Union, where he died in 1802, at the age of 48 years. He served three years in the Revolutionary War from 1777 to 1780. Elijah Collings, his father, died March 16th, 1865. Our subject was born in Monroe Township in Adams County, April 6th, 1824. He was reared on his father's farm and knew all about poverty and hard work. He was at one time, in his youth, a deck hand, on steamboats; and he never got entirely away from the profanity and uncouth manners he learned in that occupation. He had only a common school education and his want of a better one was a draw back to him all his life. He studied law in Adams County, Ohio, under the late Edward P. Evans, from 1851 to 1853, when he was admitted to the bar and came to Portsmouth, Ohio, to practice.

He was reared a Democrat and that was the political faith he fell back on, when he grew tired of others. He was a Democrat, a Whig, a Know Nothing, a Republican, and at last a Democrat. In 1857, he was the candidate for Probate Judge as an American, though the Republicans and Americans ran a fusion ticket.

In 1859, he was elected Representative from Scioto County, as the Republican candidate. He had 1,858 votes to 1,349 for Stephen Smith. He went over to Bell and Everett in 1860. While in the Legislature, Governor Chase was elected to the United States Senate; and his constituents expected Collings to vote for him; but he voted for Thomas Corwin, as did Col. Moore, who was then in the Senate from Scioto County. This was the mistake of his life. In 1862, he appeared in the celebrated Cat Case, an account of which is herein given elsewhere. In 1863, in April, he was elected City Solicitor as a Democrat, defeating Henry A. Towne, who ran as the Union and Republican candidate. The vote stood Collings 583. Towne 433. The salary during his one term was $50.00 per year. In the fall of that year, he supported Vallandigham for Governor and made speeches for him, though in 1859, he had addressed Republican meetings throughout the County and declared his undying hostility to the Democracy. He had an iron constitution and was a man of fine presence. He always wore a black suit, with a dress coat and a silk hat; and presented a fine appearance in public. He was much given to the use of expletives, and was often abrupt and uncouth in his manners. He was not a brilliant lawyer. Judge Martin Crain was fond of telling anecdotes illustrative of his peculiarities of speech. No doubt Crain invented many details of the anecdotes, but they fitted Collings, and were just what Collings would likely have said. Crain was the wit and humorist of the bar. He exercised his humor on all the members of the bar, but Collings was his best subject. The following is told by Crain when Collings was on the Probate Court bench and had jurisdiction of minor criminal offenses. A party named Currie was tried for stealing chickens and was found guilty by the Jury. The moment the verdict was announced, Collings said, "Stand up, chicken thief, and receive your sentence. You have been charged with the meanest offense known to the law, that of stealing your neighbor's chickens, when he was asleep in the peace of God, and entitled to the full protection of the law, in his innocent slumbers; yet you violated the sanctity of his chicken coop, and appropriated his feathered chattels to your own use. This deserves the severest condemnation. You have been tried by a jury of your peers and found guilty. On inquiry by the Court, you have offered nothing in palliation. It is the sentence of this Court that you be taken hence to the County Jail, and there be confined for a period of thirty days, ten of which shall be in the dungeon. While in the dungeon, you shall be fed on bread and water. You shall pay a fine of $5.00 and costs; and may God have mercy on your soul, this Court won't if you are ever brought before this Court again and found guilty of the same offense, it will hang you, G—d d—m you." Here is another. A party had been charged with an assault on Blash Lodwick. The assault consisted in trying to cut him with a knife, in the abdomen. Collings was assisting to prosecute and in arguing to the jury, said, "The defendant's conduct has been most reprehensible. He was trying to carve Blash Lodwick's belly, and only failed because he was prevented; but the evidence shows he intended to do it. Such an offense deserves the highest sentence of the law, and ought to receive it. If his conduct receives the slightest approval, this town will be full of guts from end to end; and the Court should express its disapproval in the strongest terms the law will permit."

Judge Collings was never married. He said he knew that each lawyer had the right to starve one woman to death, but he did not propose to exercise his privilege.

About four years prior to his death, he was in the habit of sleeping in his office in the Massie Block. The windows reached to the floor from the ceiling and he had them open. He was a sleep walker and one summer night, in his sleep, he walked out of a window and fell to the pavement, sixteen feet below. His jaw, his hip and legs were fractured and he was otherwise fearfully injured. Owing to his wonderful constitution, he recovered. But the after result was consumption, of which he died. When he saw death inevitable, he retired to Adams County, and there died July 16th, 1872, at the age of 48. Had he properly taken care of himself, he would have lived to be 90 years old and upwards. He was interred in the Fenton Cemetery in Monroe Township, among his own people. In his will of record in Scioto County, he made a bequest to a sister and it reads about like this, "To my sister, _____, married to an infernal scoundrel by the name of _____, I give and bequeath, etc." Collings knew well enough that this record would be perpetual, but he was willing it should be so. One day when visiting another sister, she was showing him her baby and said, "John don't you think this is the finest baby you ever saw?" Collings replied, "Oh Chrissy, don't bother me about babies, they all look alike to me."

Collings was an agnostic. He said he did not believe a man had any more of a soul than a horse or cow; and that when he died that was the end of him, and he died so professing. He disliked an elective judiciary; and condemned it in the most severe terms. He said the elected judges were all politicians and he did not like to practise before them. Had he made a suitable marriage, and taken due care of his health, he might have lived to a great age; and his career might have been more successful. In politics he was a failure because he changed too often. To make a political success one must stick to one party. His father was a Democrat, but his uncle, the Hon. George Collings, was a Whig and Republican. He had a great admiration for his uncle George, as the latter well deserved. Raised a Democrat, but admiring and believing in his uncle, he might well hesitate in opinion between the two leading parties. There is no doubt that when Judge Collings identified himself with the Republicans, had he remained there, he might have had any political preferment he desired, but he was raised to pro-slavery views and, apparently, could not get away from them. Whatever he professed he was candid about, sometimes brutally so. He died in poverty, and, after his injuries from his fall, life turned to bitterness for him.

The lesson of his life is: that a man had better marry at a suitable age; and that he had best cast his fortunes with one political party and remain with it.

Colonel Martin Crain.

At the outset we are called on again to determine whether the title of Colonel or Judge is the highest. It is our rule to give each subject the title of the highest office he attained, and as in the case of William Oldfield, we gave the military title the preference, we shall do so here. Our subject was born Sept. 22nd, 1822, in Alexandria, of an old family, noted for their integrity and steady habits, and for being the swarthiest family in Scioto County. Martin Crain was as dark as an Indian, with deep set black eyes, and very dark hair. He was a large man, broad shouldered, over average height, and with considerable embonpoint. As a boy, he was active and mischievous. He had only such education as the common schools afforded; but became a teacher of common schools and taught several years. He made a number of trips down the Mississippi River. In 1848, he entered public life as a Constable of Wayne Township. One year of that office satisfied him. He was reared as a Whig, and as such, at thirty years of age, entered the office of Andrew Crichton, Recorder, as a clerk. He remained there until the next year, when he was a candidate for the same office on the Whig ticket. His opponent on the Democratic ticket was B. F. Cunningham. Crain received 1,275, votes to 1,169, for Cunningham.

On May 1st, 1854, he married Ellen Gibbs, sister of Captain Frank C. Gibbs, and she died the following year. On January 8th, 1857, he married Miss Maria Hall, daughter of Octavo Hall, and by her eight children. In May, 1856, he was admitted to the bar and began practicing law in October, following.

In 1854, the Whig party dissolved, and Recorder Crain trimmed his sails for a Democratic breeze. In 1857, he ran on the Democratic ticket for Prosecuting Attorney and was elected. As the election returns for that year have been destroyed, the vote cannot be given. In 1859, he was a candidate for a second term and was elected. The vote stood Henry A. Towne, Republican, 1,423; Crain, 1,611, majority, 188. In 1861, he felt the need of a change in his political associates and went into the Republican camp. The Republicans nominated him for representative and he was elected. The vote stood, Crain, 1,676, Uri Nurse, Democrat, 1,359, majority, 317. In 1862, Colonel Crain received the title of Colonel by reason of being made Commandant at Camp Morrow. He was a great advocate of the war. While a member of the Legislature, he spent much of his time writing to the newspapers for the instruction and amusement of his constituents. In 1863, his war fever had abated, and he was back in the bosom of Democracy. He went over the County and made speeches for the Democracy. In a speech made at Lucasville, in 1863, he said he had been deluded into joining the war party. But Colonel Crain made the great mistake of decrying a popular war. If a young man has political ambition, he must always join the war party. In 1867, the Democrats put him on their ticket for Common Pleas Judge. Hon. W. W. Johnson of Ironton had resigned because he was the only Judge in the State receiving $1,500, while all the others were receiving $2,500. He was a candidate for re-election for the fractional term, expected to be elected and ordinarily would have been. The Democrats put Crain on their ticket, not expecting him, or anyone on their ticket to be elected. He received 2,542 votes in the County and Johnson, 2,312. The Negro Amendment to the State Constitution defeated the Republicans and made the Democrats victorious. In December, 1870, John J. Glidden resigned as City Solicitor and a special election was held. There was no other candidate but Crain and he was elected. He held the office until the April election following. He was a candidate for the full term, but was defeated by N. W. Evans. The vote stood Evans, 970, Crain, 806. This was the last time he was a candidate for a public office. Crain had a great penchant for partners in the practice of law. In 1860, he was a partner of John J. Glidden. The firm was Crain and Glidden. In 1866, it was Crain and Thompson, (Hon. A. C. Thompson, Federal Judge.) In 1870, it was Crain and Pursell, (F. S. Pursell of Logan). In 1874, it was Crain and Fullerton, (H. H. Fullerton). In 1879, it was Crain and Huston, (Samuel J. Huston). In 1870, it was Crain and Haney.

On May 22nd, 1882, he fell dead of apoplexy at his own door. He was a free liver and died poor. He was a good mixer, and could be agreeable with the hoi polloi, to their entire satisfaction. He was a great reader of standard and classic romance, and remembered all he read. He was the greatest wit and humorist ever at the Portsmouth bar. He could tell humorous anecdotes better than any of his cotemporaries. If it lacked details, when it reached him, he always furnished them. He had fancy names for all the members of the bar. The firm of Moore, Johnson and Newman, was "Quirk, Gammon and Snap". Harper and Searl were "Dodson and Fogg." Towne and Farnham, were "Sampson, Brass and Sally." Searl, was "Cockle Burr." N. W. Evans, was "My learned friend" and the "Chancellor." Duncan Livingstone, was "The Scotch Thistle," and the "Duke of Argyle." William H. Reed, was "Hiawatha" and "Mudgekewis."

Once he had a suit before Squire Samuel P. Nicholls and N. W. Evans, was on the other side. Mr. Evans quoted some Latin in his argument to the Justice and Crain complained that he had no show, because Evans and the Squire talked Latin to each other, and he did not understand it. Crain was a man of generous impulse and was popular, but he never understood what the term of political consistency meant. He had an inexhaustible fund of anecdotes, and never tired of telling them. He could always entertain and amuse a jury or an audience. It has been said of him; that, when any county Democratic speaker was to make his first political speech, he was put in charge of Crain, and sent to Brush Creek Township. If the fledgling orator made any mistake, it would not lose any votes in that Township; and, if he failed, Crain always made the closing speech, and when he was through the audience was in such a laughing mood, that it had forgotten the blunders of the fledgling. If any acquaintance of Crain had any peculiarities or eccentricity, Crain could illustrate them in the most humorous manner. The lawyers all liked him, and he was "good friends" with them all.

Elijah Barnes Glover was born May 11th, 1811, in Portsmouth, the son of Elijah Glover and Catharine Jones, his wife. He had only such education as the common schools afforded. From the age of sixteen he was a great reader. At twenty-one he began life, as the editor of the Portsmouth Courier, an organ of the Whig party. He conducted that journal six years. For a few years subsequent he conducted the book business in Portsmouth, Ohio. In 1839, he published an Elementary Spelling-book. On January 17th, 1833, he married Sarah J. Offnere, daughter of George Offnere, and that was the best thing he ever did for himself in all his life, as he often admitted himself. In 1840, he was elected County Auditor on the Whig ticket and was re-elected twice and held the office six years. During this time he read law with Samuel M. Tracy, and in 1847, he was admitted to the bar. In 1849, his practice was assessed at $800.00, in 1850 and 1851, at $1,000.00. In 1853, he was defeated for State Senator by Thomas McCauslen. The vote in the County stood, McCauslen, 1,622, Glover, 708. From 1864 to 1867, he represented Scioto County in the Legislature. While there he obtained the passage of the Acts for free turnpikes in Scioto County, and was chairman of the committee on Finance at one session.

On March 29th, 1867, he was appointed Register in Bankruptcy for the Eleventh Congressional District of Ohio, and served until January, 1870, when he resigned to take his seat in the Legislature. After returning from the Legislature, in 1871, he held no public office.

On March 6th, 1869, he was struck from behind while walking up Second street on his way home in the evening, at a point opposite John P. Terry's home, and was robbed. He never fully recovered from the injury, and the perpetrators were never discovered. If Mr. Glover had one hobby, it was temperance. He was a member of all the temperance societies which were organized, in his time, in Portsmouth. For a time he published a temperance paper, called the "Life Boat." As a public speaker on temperance, he was always in demand and never excelled, and yet owing to a disease of the skin of his face, he would have been taken for the worst toper in the land. He was very fond of telling stories on himself, on account of this peculiarity of his appearance; and some of them will appear under the title of "The Bar of the County." Writing biographical sketches is a serious matter and they cannot appear here.

In 1870 and 1871, he was a member of the 59th General Assembly. The vote at this election stood Glover 2,312, James W. Newman, 2,289, majority, 23. In politics Mr. Glover was first a Whig. He cast his first Presidential vote for Henry Clay, in 1832, and remained a Whig as long as that party lasted. He then became a Republican and continued such all his life. As a campaign speaker, Mr. Glover was in great demand. He could amuse and entertain an audience second only to Thomas Corwine; and the less preparation he had the better speech he made. The reason of this, was that he was a great reader; and when he got on his feet to speak, all he ever read was at his tongue's end; and he had the full command of it. If he attempted to arrange his speech, he failed to do his best. He had an unlimited command of language; and of anecdotes and repartee, he had an unlimited supply. He never indulged in personal abuse, but pleased and instructed his audience. Rev. Dr. Pratt said of him: "He is one of the readiest man for a speech, on any subject, I ever knew. I have heard him called on, on different occasions, in political, moral and literary questions, and I never knew him to make a failure. His stock of knowledge was always at his command." Mr. Glover never made a dollar in the sense of saving it, or accumulated anything, but always lived well, enjoyed himself, and was a highly respected citizen. In his life he always stood for purity and decency. He never compromised with the liquor interest or any form of public vice, but always stood for morality. He was not an eminent or prominent lawyer, but succeeded well in what he undertook. He died September 17th, 1880. He belonged to one of the first families of Portsmouth as did his wife, who survived him until April 12th, 1889. She was born in Winchester, Virginia, in 1816, a daughter of George Offnere, who was a brother of Dr. Jacob Offnere. She was the mother of seven children. They were: Mrs. Laura E. Watkins, wife of J. L. Watkins; Samuel C. Glover, of Grand Haven, Michigan; Mrs. Mary L. Hope; Mrs. Lizzie Ross; Mrs. Harriet Taylor, wife of Rev. Alfred R. Taylor of Marion, Ohio; and Frank C. Glover, who died a young man in South America. The Old Glover homestead stood on the property Mrs. Glover inherited from her father, George Offnere, who died comparatively young; and there a generous hospitality was extended to their friends through a course of many years. It was a delightful place to visit, either for the young or the old. Many of those on the shady side of fifty have pleasant memories of the young people who met there; and Mr. and Mrs. Glover both contributed to the young folks' enjoyment, as they were always young in spirit.

John C. Malone

was born in Vernon Township, Scioto County, Ohio, November 5th, 1832. His father was Isaac Malone, born June 5th, 1802, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Perry, daughter of Samuel Perry. His grand-father, was Richard Malone, born in the year of 1776, in Loudon County, Virginia. He was married in 1797, to Susannah Weaver, of German ancestry. They moved from Loudon County, Virginia, to Greenbriar County, Virginia, where Isaac Malone, the father of our subject was born. Richard Malone's father came from

CAPTAIN JOHN C. MALONE.

Ireland. In 1803, the family of Richard Malone removed to the mouth of Pine Creek. In 1804, they located in Vernon Township.

Our subject received his education in the common schools of his township. His practical education was on the farm, in the ore-banks and coal mines of Scioto County. He was piously disposed; and at the age of eighteen years, became a member of the Vernon Baptist Church. In the Spring following his majority, he was elected Assessor of Vernon Township, and was re-elected again the next year.

In the Fall of 1856, he was married to Eunice Chaffin, daughter of Reuben and Sarah Chaffin. There were seven children of this marriage: Cynthia C., William L., John E., Lency E., of Tacoma, Washington; Charles S., of Otway, Ohio; Eunice A. and Ernest, both deceased.

In the Fall of 1856, our subject moved to Warren County, Iowa, and remained there for five years. In 1857 he was elected Justice of the Peace in Iowa and from 1858 to 1860, he was Township Clerk. He was a member of the militia of the State of Ohio from 1862 to 1864 and was engaged in the pursuit of the rebel General John Morgan when he invaded Ohio, but did not capture him.

In the Spring of 1863, he was elected Justice of the Peace of Vernon Township and was also postmaster at Lyra, Ohio.

On August 5th, 1864, our subject enlisted in Co. D., 173rd O. V. I. and was made a Captain September 17th, 1864. The Company was mustered out on June 26th, 1865.

In the Fall of 1866, he was nominated and elected Sheriff of Scioto County, Ohio, on the Republican ticket, and was re-elected in 1868. In 1866, the vote stood 2,600 for himself and 2,148 for John J. McFarlan, Democrat. His majority was 452. In 1868, the vote was 2,817 for himself to 2,325 for John J. McFarlan, his Democrat opponent. Mr. Malone's majority was 492.

In 1871, he was a candidate on the Republican ticket for Representative and was elected by a vote of 2,518 for himself to 2,407 for Robert N. Spry, Democrat. His majority was 111.

In 1877, Mr. Malone's first wife died, and in 1878, he was married to Mrs. Sarah Ervin, daughter of John C. Stewart, of Lawrence County.

In 1880, our subject removed to Granville, Ohio, where he has since resided. He served as Justice of the Peace in Granville for twelve years.

In 1886, his second wife died, and in 1897, he married Mrs. Inez C. Ellis, daughter of Nathan P. and Mary Caldwell, of Seneca County, Ohio, who survives.

From 1890 to 1894, he was postmaster at Granville. He was the Republican candidate for Sheriff of Licking County, in 1888, but the County was Democratic and he was defeated. He ran 210 votes ahead of his ticket.

Captain Malone began his career as a Republican. His first vote was cast for Salmon P. Chase for Governor in 1855. He voted twice for the immortal Lincoln, twice for Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Blaine and Harrison, and was a McKinley man up to the St. Louis Convention in 1896, when he left the party and voted for Bryan. He also voted for Bryan in 1900. He was a candidate for the nomination as member of the State Board of Equalization before a Democratic convention at Zanesville in 1900, but was defeated. He received 94 votes and 97 was necessary to elect him. Mr. Malone is and always has been a religious man. He has had his ups and downs in business and in politics, but in all of his life he has been a consistent pillar in the Baptist church. He has always been a good citizen.

George Johnson

was born in Washington County, Pa., August 7th, 1815, and died at Portsmouth, Ohio, April 14th, 1875. He graduated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., in 1834. He read law with Russell Marsh at Steubenville, Ohio, and was admitted to practice in 1837. He began first at Steubenville, but went to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1841. He was alone till November 4th, 1855, when he formed a partnership with Col. Moore, which continued during his life. He was a Whig and in 1844, was Secretary of the Clay Club. In 1846 to 1850, he was Mayor of the town. At his first election in 1846, he had 266 votes and Isaac Kirby, 88. In his second election in 1848, he had 372 votes and William P. Camden, 5.

He was taxed as a lawyer in 1844 at $500, and rose to $1,000 in 1849. From 1854 to 1856, he was Prosecuting Attorney. He was a candidate for a second term in 1855 as Independent and the vote stood E. Glover, 1,200; George Johnson, Independent, 1,167; majority 39.

In 1864, 1865 and 1866, he was president of the City Council. In 1874 and 1875, he was a member of the Legislature, as a Republican. He was a Director in the Portsmouth National Bank and its predecessor for over twenty-eight years. He was president of the bank at the time of his death and had been for several years. He was married August 24th, 1847, to Mary R., daughter of Samuel M. Tracy, and had four children. Mrs. Emma Jennings, widow of Sanford B. Jennings, Samuel Miles, a lawyer in Portsmouth, Albert Tracy, manufacturer of fire brick and Tracy Bradford, a member of the firm of C. P. Tracy & Co.

Mr. Johnson was a good business man, a good neighbor and reliable in every respect.

Richard Henry Hayman was born in Newport, Kentucky, June 6th, 1826. His father was Isaiah Tilden Hayman and his mother was Elizabeth (Tarvin) Hayman, the daughter of Richard Tarvin. He attended school in Newport and Covington and finished his course in Covington in 1843. His father had been a dry goods merchant in Newport; and when he was seventeen, his father started him in business in Letart Falls, Meigs County, Ohio. He was there eighteen months, then his father started him a dry goods store in Missouri and he was there eighteen months, but he could not stand the climate and had to come home. He was sick for a year and then he took three flat boats and went to New Orleans. Two of the boats sank on the way. They were loaded with whiskey. In June, 1847, he was married to Elizabeth Fairman, daughter of Doctor Loyal Fairman. He then went into the dry goods business for himself in 1847; and was in it in Newport for eighteen years. His health failed and he sold out and came to Scioto County with his family. He had been very successful in the 18 years in the dry goods business, and made lots of money. He bought the Cole farm and resided on it until 1871, when he removed to Portsmouth. In 1882, he built a commodious residence near Kinney's Lane. His first wife died May 9th, 1863. He married Mrs. Ellen Sharpless. She died June 3rd, 1896. Mrs. William Bierly was her daughter. Mr. Hayman had four children: Mary, the wife of Dr. William D. Tremper; Floyd, who died at the age of twenty-two, and two boys who died in infancy. Our subject was always a Democrat. He is not a member of any church. He was a City Clerk while in Newport; and a member of the City Council there for two years. He was a member of the Legislature of Ohio for Scioto County at the sixty-third session. In the election of 1877, John T. Sellards was on the Republican ticket and our subject on the Democratic. The vote stood as follows: Hayman, 2,923; Sellards, 2,586; Hayman's majority, 337. In 1879, he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by Amos B. Cole. Cole received 3,321 votes to Hayman's 3,071, majority 250. In 1893, he was again the candidate for his party against Charles E. Hard and was defeated. The vote stood 4,253 for Hard and 3,242 for Hayman, majority 1011. Mr. Hayman ran away ahead of all his party associates on the ticket. While he was a member of the Legislature, he procured the passage of the bill for the Portsmouth Library Board. He originated the bill and deserves great credit in connection with the founding of the Library. The acts creating and regulating the Public Library in Portsmouth will be found in the City Legislative Article. Mr. Hayman was the author of the measure creating the Tax Commissioner for Scioto County. He was originally appointed on the board, and has been on it ever since the law passed. The law will be found on another page of this work. Mr. Hayman is highly esteemed for his honor and integrity. He has the confidence of the entire community.

Daniel J. Ryan was born at Cincinnati, January 1st, 1855. His father, John Ryan and his mother, Honora Ryan, were born in Ireland and came to this country about 1850, and settled in Cincinnati. They afterwards removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, where young Ryan received his education in the public schools, passing through all the grades. He was graduated from the high school in 1875. For a year before leaving school he was entered as a law student in the office of Judge James W. Bannon, where he continued his studies after graduating. In February, 1877, he was admitted to the Bar by the Supreme Court at Columbus. He at once commenced practice alone at Portsmouth, and in the following April was elected City Solicitor; was re-elected in 1879, serving until the spring of 1881. In 1883 he was elected a member of the Ohio House of Representatives, and was re-elected in 1885. During this service he was speaker pro tem. and chairman of the committee on public works. At the expiration of his legislative duties he resumed practice. In 1888 he was elected secretary of State of Ohio, and in 1890 was re-elected for a second term. He resigned this office, however, in 1892 to accept the appointment of commissioner in chief for Ohio of the World's Columbian Exposition, the duties of which required his services until May, 1894. While secretary of State he assisted in the compilation of Smith & Benedict's edition of the Revised Statutes of Ohio. He has since been engaged in the practice of law at Columbus. He has always been a Republican; was the first president of the Ohio Republican League, and presided at New York over the first convention of the National League of Republican Clubs which met in 1887. For ten years Mr. Ryan has been one of the trustees of the Ohio Historical Society. He was appointed by the Exhibitors' Association at the World's Fair as one of the commissioners to the Antwerp Exposition in 1894. He was appointed by Governor McKinley as delegate to the National Water Ways Convention which met at Vicksburg in 1894. At the present time he is president of the Ohio Canal Association. Mr. Ryan is well and favorably known throughout the State as a man of high character and a lawyer of ability. He has been identified with many important cases in Ohio which have attracted general attention both in and out of the State, among which might be mentioned the case touching the constitutionality of the abandonment of the Hocking canal, and litigation relating to the food department of the State. On the 10th day of January, 1884, Mr. Ryan was married to Myra L. Kerr, of Portsmouth, and by this union five children were born, two of whom are living, Julia E. and Elinor.

Joseph Pancoast Coates, son of Benjamin F. Coates and Elizabeth (Patterson) Coates, is a native of West Union, Adams County, Ohio. During infancy, together with his parents, he became a resident of Portsmouth, where he has since almost continuously resided. His education was obtained in the public schools of his home city, and at Kenyon College, of which latter institution he is a graduate. He subsequently taught in the High School, at Chillicothe, Ohio. Upon abandoning the profession of teaching and returning to Portsmouth, he was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Ohio. He has served as a member of the Scioto County Board of School Examiners. He was elected as a Republican to represent Scioto County in the 68th and 69th General Assemblies, of Ohio, his last terms as such expiring in 1892. Since that time, he has held no public office and has resided in Portsmouth, engaged in the practice of his profession.

Anselm Tupper Holcomb was born November 19th, 1846, a son of John Ewing and Mary Mathews Holcomb, at Vinton, Gallia County, Ohio. His mother was a daughter of Colonel Phineas Mathews. His paternal grandfather was General Samuel R. Holcomb. His grand-parents on both sides settled in Gallia County as early as 1800. He attended the schools at Vinton and Ewington. He assisted his father in a country store. He entered Ohio University in 1863 and graduated in 1867. While attending the University, he studied law with the Honorable Reed Golden, at Athens, Ohio. Directly after the Civil War, his parents removed to Butler, Bates County, Missouri. After his graduation in 1867, Mr. Holcomb continued the study of law with his uncle, General Anselm Tupper Holcomb. In this period he taught school at Vinton and Rodney, in Gallia County and at Moorefield, Kentucky. In 1870 he went to Bates County, Missouri and was admitted to the bar. He formed a partnership with Hon. William Page and practiced law in Bates County till 1875 when the firm of Page & Holcomb was dissolved and our subject associated himself in the practice of law at the same place with his brother, Phineas with whom he remained until the summer of 1878, when he came to Portsmouth, Ohio, and formed a law partnership with the Hon. Albert C. Thompson as Thompson and Holcomb. This terminated in 1881, when his partner was elected Common Pleas Judge. In September, 1884, Judge Thompson resigned as Common Pleas Judge and the partnership was resumed. James Madison McGillivray was made a third partner in the firm and it had offices both in Ironton and Portsmouth. In about one year Mr. Holcomb resided at Ironton. From 1886 to 1891 Mr. Holcomb practiced alone. In the latter year he formed a partnership with James M. Dawson (who had just retired from the office of Probate Judge) as Holcomb and Dawson which continued until 1894. In 1891 he was elected to represent Scioto County as a member of the Seventieth General Assembly. He was a member of the Judiciary Committee and that on Municipalities and he served with ability and distinction. He declined a second term. In 1893, he became one of the assignees of the Citizen's Savings bank, one of the most complex trusts ever administered in Ohio. In 1894, he became Administrator of the estate of the late George Davis, another intricate trust. On June 1st, 1897, he formed a partnership with Frank B. Finney, as Holcomb and Finney, which continued until just 2 years later since which time he has practiced law alone. He is a man of wonderful energy and activity. While practicing law in Bates County, Missouri, he completed an abstract of title of all the lands and town lots in the county. Since his residence in Portsmouth he has been connected with almost every new business enterprise organized. He has been President of the Portsmouth Board of Trade and while holding that position the Board of Trade addition was made to the city which brought the Portsmouth Stove and Range Works, the Wait Furniture Company and Harsha & Caskey into business in the east end of the city. He induced the building of the Portsmouth Street Railroad and the Portsmouth opera house and is now one of the four owners in the latter. He is President of the Raccoon Coal and Fuel Company which is building a branch railroad of three miles to connect with the Hocking Valley Railroad. He bought the Scioto Furnace Lands and is opening coal mines on the same. He is one of the original stockholders and promoters of the Buckeye Fire Brick Company. He is one of the largest stockholders, a Vice President and Director of the Portsmouth Shoe Company. He is President of the Portsmouth Veneer and Panel Company. He is a stockholder in The Washington Hotel and in the Scioto Fire Brick Company. He is Secretary of the Fluhart Coal and Mining Company of Wellston, Ohio. He is engaged in the coal business in Missouri. He was an original stockholder in the Portsmouth Fire Brick Company and the Portsmouth Wagon Stock Company. He and Mr. Leonidas H. Murphy were more than any other citizens of Portsmouth, instrumental in inducing the Editor of this work to undertake it, and if it should be approved by the public, for whom it is intended, the credit will be largely due to him and Mr. Murphy. Mr. Holcomb not only has a taste for promoting business enterprises, but he is a fraternity man as well. He is one of the charter members of the Portsmouth Commercial Club. For fifteen years he has been a member of Massie Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He is a Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Knights Templar Mason, and an Elk.

When one of his friends persuades himself he is an enemy, Mr. Holcomb can only express himself like Cæsar did when exclaimed, "et tu Brute". There is one part in Mr. Holcomb's character above all praise, persons may cherish enmity to him but he holds none in return. He has a good feeling for those who believe themselves his enemies, as well as for his friends. So far as Mr. Holcomb himself is concerned, he has no enemies, though there are some who regard themselves as such. This quality he possesses, above all men known to the writer, and had he lived in the days of the Early Christian Saints it would have qualified him as one, but living in these days, when all men are sinners, his benign disposition, shines out like a beacon light. Mr. Holcomb is the soul of power in all his dealings. George Washington could not be and Mr. Holcomb could not be guilty of anything dishonorable. To do so he would have to deny the record of a long line of honorable ancestry and violate the intuition of his own soul, which he could not do.

It is commonplace to say that Mr. Holcomb is a good lawyer. He is much more. He is a fluent and able advocate. He is courteous with all with whom he comes in contact and is willing to accord to every man all he is entitled to.

He is kind hearted and sympathetic, and these traits in him are often taken advantage of. He is wonderfully enthusiastic in everything he undertakes. He is ever courageous and hopeful. No more public spirited citizen ever resided in Portsmouth. He favors every project for the public good. He possesses confidence in everything he undertakes, and inspires it in others.

He is a Republican without guile. He is true to his party regardless of himself. He has always taken a prominent position in his party councils. In 1876 in Missouri he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention for his Congressional District. He has been a delegate to the Convention in his district in Ohio almost every year. Twice he has been presented by his County for Congress, but other combinations prevented his nomination. He was married October 14th, 1876, to Miss Grace L. Breare, of Gallia County, Ohio, and has two sons Anselm Tupper, Jr., and Robinson Breare. His eldest son is a student at the University of Virginia and will graduate in 1903.

Charles Ellsworth Hard,

the son of William and Tryphena (McMullen) Hard, was born at Haverhill, Ohio, January 21st, 1864. His parents removed to Portsmouth in 1869. He was educated in the public schools, graduating with one of the honors in the Class of 1882. He engaged in book-keeping under George D. Selby and J. I. Rardin until 1888, when he entered the law office of Judge J. W. Bannon. Admitted to the bar in 1889, he soon after became a partner with Hon. A. C. Thompson, now United States District Judge, in the firm of Thompson and Hard. He served as Secretary of the Board of Trade for two years. In 1892, he was appointed United States Commissioner by Judge Taft. He organized Company "H", Fourteenth (later Fourth) Infantry, O. N. G., serving as First Lieutenant and Captain. He is a member of the Elks and a charter member of Magnolia Lodge, Knights of Pythias. In 1893, he was elected Representative from this County on the Republican ticket, defeating Hon. R. H. Hayman by a majority of 1,011. In 1895, he was re-elected, defeating Edward K. Walsh by a majority of 2,274. He was the author of the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law, Express Company Excise Tax Law, Foreign Corporation Franchise Fee Law, and aided materially in solving the financial and taxation problems, then before the State, by his service on the Finance and Taxation committees. He was the author of many other important measures, one making many needed improvements in the Australian ballot law, giving the franchise practically an educational qualification. He also secured the passage of a resolution declaring for the election of United States Senators, by direct vote of the people. Of Mr. Hard's legislative service, Governor McKinley, among other complimentary things, in the campaign of 1895, in the last speech he ever delivered in Portsmouth, said: "I watched him in his first term in the City of Columbus, and I want to say to his friends and neighbors and constituents that no more earnest, faithful, honest and painstaking legislator was in our legislative councils at Columbus."

He was a member of the Republican State Central Committee in 1895, and its Secretary in 1896. He was Chairman of the Republican County Committee in both the McKinley presidential campaigns of 1896 and 1900 when the record breaking votes in Scioto County of 5,496 and 5,756 were gotten out. In January, 1897, Mr. Hard retired from the legal profession and became editor of the Portsmouth Blade, which underwent a complete reorganization at that time. He has since conducted it with gratifying success, leading in the movement which has resulted in eliminating personal journalism from the local press and placing it upon its high and proper plane. Since the expiration of his legislative terms he has sought no other office for himself, but few men have been more active and successful in politics for the advancement of the welfare of their friends.

Hon. A. Floyd McCormick was born October 5th, 1861, in Nile Township, Scioto County, Ohio. His father was George S. McCormick, and his mother's maiden name was Nancy Fleak. His grandfather, James McCormick, was a native of Pennsylvania. Our subject spent two years at the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and afterwards, four years at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio. After the completion of his college course, he became a law student of the Hon. Thomas E. Powell, of Delaware, Ohio, and graduated from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886. While studying law in Cincinnati, Ohio, he was in the office of Cowen and Ferris, Attorneys, the Ferris being Judge Howard Ferris, of the Probate Court of Hamilton County. Mr. McCormick was admitted to practice in 1886, and removed to Indianapolis, Indiana, where he became manager of the R. G. Dun & Company, Commercial Agency. He continued his employment and resided there seven years. He removed to Portsmouth, Scioto County, Ohio, in January, 1895. He was elected, as a Republican, in 1897, to represent Scioto County in the House of Representatives, and served from January 2nd, 1897 to April 8th, 1898.

HON. CHANDLER J. MOULTON.

He was re-elected in 1899 and served from January 3rd, 1900, to April 27th, 1901. In the House, he served on the Committees on Municipal Affairs, Corporations, Military Affairs, and Public Works. He was married to Miss Anne Corrille Scarlett, daughter of Joseph A. Scarlett, manager of R. G. Dun's Commercial Agency in Cincinnati, on the 31st of December, 1885. They have one daughter, Corrille, now a student in St. Mary's School in Columbus. Mr. McCormick had been a Democrat until 1897, but then became a Republican of the stalwart type. He is a man of liberal views and ideas. He is an excellent lawyer, and his friends think he ought to eschew politics and confine himself to the law. However, as a politician, he has been quite successful, and bids fair to be one of the prominent men of the State. He is one of the handsomest men of the state. He is very active and energetic in anything he undertakes.

Chandler Julius Moulton

was born December 26th, 1839, at Randolph, Orange County, Vermont. His father's name was Norman Moulton, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Belknap. His grandfather's name was John Moulton, who was a Revolutionary Soldier. Our subject came to Scioto County in March, 1848, by way of the Erie Canal. His parents came with him and located at Lucasville, and he has been there ever since. He had a common school education. In 1857 and 1858, he attended the Ohio Wesleyan College at Delaware. He then spent six or seven years in agricultural pursuits. In 1867, he went into the mercantile business, which he has been engaged in ever since. In September 1876, he married Miss Mary Celia Smith, daughter of the late Judge John M. Smith, of West Union, Ohio. They have had the following children: Frank, a graduate of the Ohio University at Athens, and of the Cincinnati Law School; he is now practising law with N. W. Evans, of Portsmouth, Ohio; Arthur, in the mercantile business with his father; Mabel and Jennie at home; John attending school at Kenyon Military Academy; and Earl. Mr. Moulton has always been a Republican. He was Chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee twice; the last time being in 1896. He has been a member of the Republican County Central Committee for six or eight years, at different times. He was elected Representative of the County in the Legislature in 1900, by a vote of 4,352 to 2,405 for Doctor James B. Ray, his opponent. He has been a successful merchant and his integrity, perseverance and industry has secured him a high position in the community of his residence. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, a Mason and Knight Templar. He is a man of commanding influence in business and in politics in his township, and county; and his advice is sought and followed on those subjects. He has no sharp corners, and is liked by all his neighbors. He takes everything easy and does not worry about anything. Job could have taken lessons of him and improved his book.

Jeremiah Morrow

was the first congressman from Ohio. He was born in Gettysburg, Adams County, Pennsylvania, October 6th, 1771. His father was a farmer, and he was brought up on the farm. He attended a private school at Gettysburg, and was especially bright in mathematics and surveying, which were his favorite studies. In 1795, he emigrated to the Northwest Territory, and settled at Columbia, near Cincinnati. At Columbia he taught school, did surveying, and worked on the farm. Having saved some money, he went to Warren County, bought a large farm and erected a log house. In the spring of 1799, he married Miss Mary Packhill of Columbia.

In 1801, he was elected to the territorial legislature. He was a delegate to the Constitutional convention in 1802. In March, 1803, he was elected to the Ohio Senate, and in June, 1803, he was elected to Congress, and re-elected ten times. While in Congress he was chairman of the Committee on Public lands. In 1813, he was elected to the United States Senate, and was made Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. In 1814, he was appointed Indian Commissioner. At the close of his term he retired to his farm.

In early life he became a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and devoted himself to its welfare all his life.

In 1820, he was a candidate for governor, and received 9,476 votes, to 34,836 for Ethan A Brown, who was elected. In 1822, he was elected governor by 26,059 votes, to 22,889 for Allen Trimble and 11,150 for William W. Irvin, and re-elected in 1824 by the following vote: 39,526 for him, and 37,108 for Allen Trimble. During his service as governor, the canal system of Ohio was inaugurated, and Lafayette's visit to the state took place. On the Fourth of July, 1839, he laid the corner stone of the capital at Columbus. In 1840 he was re-elected to congress to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Thomas Corwin, and was re-elected. He was a deep thinker, a delightful social companion, had a wonderful retentive memory, boundless kindness of heart and endowed with much vivacity and cheerfulness of spirit. He died March 22nd, 1853.

Duncan McArthur

As the name indicates, Duncan McArthur was of Scotch descent, but was a native of America, born in Dutchess County, New York, in 1772. When but eight years old his father moved into the frontier wilderness of Pennsylvania, and as the lad grew up he hired out as a laborer to assist in rearing the family. Only the most meagre opportunities offered to secure an education, but these he utilized, until he was able to master the rudiments.

Tiring of his humdrum occupation, he volunteered under General Harmar in 1790, and accompanied him on his Indian campaign of that year. In 1792, he was a private in Captain William Enoch's company of volunteers and in the battle of Captina conducted himself with gallantry and bravery as to win the admiration of his back woods' associates, who saw in him both the present soldier and the future leader.

Drifting to Maysville in 1793, he became a common laborer at the salt works being operated there. Later he assisted General Nathaniel Massie in making a series of surveys in the Scioto Valley and acted as a spy among the Indians, meeting with numerous and exciting adventures. He early determined to make Chillicothe and Ross County his home. The lull which followed the treaty of Greenville, opened an opportunity for him to acquire property. Acting as assistant to General Massie, he surveyed the town of Chillicothe, and being put in charge of the sale of many tracts and bodies of land, he accumulated a handsome fortune.

He was elected to and served as representative in the Third, Sixteenth and Twenty-fifth General Assemblies, and in the Senate in the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-eighth. He was speaker of the senate in 1809-10, and speaker of the house in 1817-18.

He was largely instrumental in the organization of the militia during the early years of the state's history. In 1805, he became a colonel in the local military force, and in 1808 a major general. When war was declared against England in 1812, McArthur raised a regiment of volunteers which was tendered to the government, accepted, and he was commissioned its colonel. With his command he marched at once to the relief of Detroit, arriving there only to find himself and his command prisoners of war, as they had been included by Gen. Hull in the surrender, although not within communicating distance when the protocol was signed.

He came home under a parole, and the Democrats elected him by an overwhelming majority to the Thirteenth Congress from the Third district, composed of Ross, Gallia, Athens, Washington, Pickaway and Scioto Counties, in recognition of his bravery and his soldiery protest against the base surrender of Detroit. He did not take his seat in Congress. In March, 1813, he was regularly exchanged, and at once commissioned a Brigadier-General; he resigned his seat and entered the field on the northern and northwestern frontier. He was placed over the Ohio Volunteers, given command of Ft. Meigs, and directed all the military operations in that quarter, successfully invading Canada, defeating the English forces, capturing prisoners and destroying public stores.

At the close of the war he returned to his home and again entered the arena of politics, being repeatedly elected as above stated to the Legislature. In 1822, he was elected to the Eighteenth Congress from the Sixth District, composed of Ross, Fayette, Pickaway and Hocking. He was a candidate in the twenty-third congress, but was defeated by William Allen, who won by a single vote. Allen subsequently married McArthur's daughter.

General McArthur ceased to act with the Democratic party in 1818, on the issue of the Bank of the United States, he advocating its extension and the other Democratic leaders being in pronounced opposition to the bank under all circumstances. He retired from public life after his defeat for Congress, and enjoyed the felicities which naturally waited upon the fortune which he had so honorably won. He died in 1840, at the age of 68.

William Creighton, Jr.,

was born in Berkley county, Va., Oct. 29th, 1778. He graduated from Dickerson College, Pa., with distinction in 1795, and studied law at Martinsburg, Va. In 1797 he visited the Northwest territory. He emigrated to Chillicothe in 1799 and was admitted to practice the same year. The first office he held here was Secretary of State, of Ohio. He was elected by the general assembly in joint session, March 5th, 1803, and held the office, being re-elected in 1805 until he resigned on December 8th, 1808. He received the salary of $400.00 per year.

He was married at Chaumiere, Jessamine County, Ky., on September 5th, 1805, to Elizabeth Meade, the third and youngest daughter of Col. David Meade. His wife was born in Maycox, Prince George County, Va., on March 29th, 1784; consequently Mr. Creighton was 27 and his wife 21 at the time of their marriage.

Mr. Creighton resigned the office of Secretary of State to accept that of United States Attorney, for the district of Ohio to which he was appointed in 1808, and which he held in 1809, 1810, and a part of 1811, when he was succeeded by Samuel Heinch. In 1813 he was elected to the 13th congress, to succeed McArthur resigned, and was re-elected to the 14th in 1814 serving from May 24th, 1814, to March 3rd, 1817. In 1826 he was elected to the 20th congress receiving a majority of 1,572 over John Thompson and was re-elected as an Adams man to the 21st defeating C. Wallace, Jacksonian, and to the 22nd serving from December 3rd, 1827, to March 3rd, 1833. He was a Whig and one of the great admirers and friends of Henry Clay. The latter reposed especial and great confidence in him. By his marriage he was the brother-in-law of General Nathaniel Massie and of Judge Charles Willing Byrd.

As secretary of the State of Ohio he was the designer of its great seal. As a lawyer he seems to have been eminent, for in all the important cases in the early history of the state, he was counsel on one side or the other. He was counsel for the defendants in the great case of Jackson vs. Clark, 1st Peters, 666. His practice of the law extended over a period of 50 years. He was diligent and industrious and applied himself to the interests of his clients assiduously. He rode the circuit from county to county, when the law was practiced in the old fashioned way. At one time he was considered the first jury lawyer in the country. He had a wonderful knowledge of human nature and knew how to reach it in the jury box. He knew what subject to dwell upon and what to avoid before a jury. He was mild, amiable, and courteous and had a wonderful firmness of purpose. He knew how to keep his temper, an invaluable trait in a lawyer. If a young man wanted a model, Mr. Creighton would have served for one. His popularity was unbounded, the more because he never sought after it. He was held in universal esteem, because his temper was so agreeable and his disposition so obliging. He had a fund of humor much like that of Thomas Corwin.

In social life he made his house the place of elegant hospitality. He gave sumptuous dinners and elegant evening entertainments, where gathered the beauty, fashion and distinction of the state. His manners in his own house were such as to please and charm his guests. His personal appearance was good. He was over six feet in height, large frame, weighed over 200 pounds, and had a slight stoop in his carriage. His eyebrows were dark and his twinkling eye of deep grey.

Until lately their old home was standing on the corner of High and Water streets in Chillicothe, and was built by Mr. Creighton.

He and his wife were members of the Episcopal Church, and many a time Dr. Burr of Portsmouth, Ohio, has been entertained at their pleasant home at Chillicothe. Dr. Burr likes to refer to the delightful qualities of Mrs. Creighton, as a hostess, when he was in Chillicothe on ecclesiastical affairs, and was often her guest.

When Judge Byrd died in August, 1828, John Quincy Adams was President, and he sent the name of Wm. Creighton, jr., to the Senate, and it was not confirmed. He held court from November 1st, 1828, to December 31st, 1828.

The reason Judge Creighton failed to have his appointment as United States District Judge confirmed by the Senate was two fold: the Senate was Democratic and he was a Whig, and the interference of Mr. Douglas, who had been offended by Mr. Creighton's course in curing defective titles it is believed led to his rejection.

It was a singular feature of Mr. Creighton's practice of law, that he would not accept a fee from a woman, especially if that woman was a widow.

Judge Creighton and Col. William Key Bond were law partners in Chillicothe from 1813 to 1841, and all that time were the most devoted friends and the utmost harmony existed between them.

Judge Creighton was an unsuccessful candidate for United States Senator in 1815.

He died at Chillicothe, Ohio, October 8th, 1851.

Hon. Levy Barber

was born in Simsbury, Hartford County, Connecticut, October 16th, 1777. He came to Marietta, Ohio, about 1800. In 1803 he married Elizabeth Rouse of Belpre, who came to that place with her father's family, in the fall of 1788. They lived on the north side of the public square, in Harmar, the house fronting the Muskingum at the mouth, with a beautiful view up the Ohio. Five children were born to them there. The youngest was Captain Levi Barber, born November 1st, 1814. He became a well known citizen of Washington County. He died in 1887, aged seventy-three years. The homestead is still in the family and is occupied by Mrs. Lucy Barber Cole, daughter of the late Levi, and granddaughter of our subject, also known as Colonel Levi Barber. Colonel Barber became a public man soon after reaching Marietta. He was at one time a United States Surveyor of Lands; Clerk of the Courts of Washington County; Aide to Governor R. J. Meigs, jr., in the war of 1812; Receiver of the United States Land Office at Marietta. He was elected a Representative from Ohio in the Fifteenth Congress, serving from December 1st, 1817, to March 3rd, 1819; was defeated as a candidate for the Sixteenth Congress, receiving 1,803 votes against 2,727 for Henry Brush, and 1,954 for Edward Tupper; was again elected to Seventeenth Congress, defeating Henry Brush and serving from December 3rd, 1821, to March 3rd, 1823. Retiring from Congress in 1823, he lived in Harmar during the last ten years of his life. He died April 23rd, 1833 in his fifty-sixth year.

Henry Bond

was born in Dutchess County, New York, in the year 1778. He located in Chillicothe in 1803. He did not acquire practice very rapidly although after 1812 and for twenty years his practice was very good. During this year, one or two partners he had were men of legal ability. Brush himself did not rank very high as a lawyer of learning. He was Prosecuting Attorney of Ross County in 1808 and 1809, and a member of the legislature in 1810. He was also a member of the Ohio Senate in 1814, and of Congress from 1819 to 1821. In August, 1812, he marched in command of a Company of Ross County Volunteers, to re-enforce General Hull's command, then on the northern frontier, and in the presence of the British and Indian Army. Brush and his company reached a point so near Hull's position, as to be included in the terms of that deplorable "surrender"; but having no taste for the role of prisoners of war, his company turned southward and escaped. Anticipating pursuit by the Indians, Brush caused the head of a barrel of whiskey to be knocked out, scattering tin cups on the ground, and left the "fire-water" in his abandoned camp, rightly conjecturing that his pursuers would speedily become so drunk as to be unable to keep up the chase. The stratagem was successful and having destroyed wagons, supplies, and all other impedimenta, the volunteers reached home without the loss of a man, although they endured considerable hardship in the retreat. Colonel Brush, (this rank being afterward attained by him in the militia organization), was tall and thin and of dark complexion; he had a high Roman nose and thin grey hair; he had a catarract which destroyed the sight of his left eye, and was of a nervous temperament. In June, 1831, he tendered the County Commissioners a lot on which to build the court house at Portsmouth. It was lot 380, and he required that the court house be built within three years. The Commissioners bought lot 369 for which they paid $300. Afterward the court was built on lot 380, and the jail on 369. In 1828, he was elected one of the supreme judges of the State of Ohio, and filled the office with distinction, but served less than one year. In 1838, he abandoned the practice of law and for a year or two lived upon a farm he had bought in Union Township, Ross County. He finally sold this farm to George Butler and purchased a large tract of land in Madison County, which he owned until his death. He died in Chillicothe, January 19th, 1855.

Samuel Finley Vinton enjoyed the distinction of having served fourteen years as a member of Congress from Ohio and all of that period Scioto County was one of the Counties of his District. He entered the Eighteenth Congress, March 4th, 1825, and served until March 4th, 1833, when he retired. He re-entered Congress March 4th, 1843, and retired of his own will March 4th, 1847. He might have remained a member all of his life, had he so willed. His ancestors in the sixth generation preceding him, appeared in Lynn, Mass., in 1648. The name is supposed to be French, De Vintonne, and that the original Vinton, who came to England was a Huguenot. His father was Abraham Vinton. He was named for Dr. Samuel Finley Vinton, a grand-uncle, who was "a minute man" at Lexington in April, 1775. His mother was Sarah Day of South Hadley, Mass., and he was the eldest of seven children. He was born September 25th, 1792. He graduated at Williams College, Mass., in 1814, and in 1816, was admitted to the bar in Connecticut. He located in Gallipolis soon after. In 1824, he was nominated for Congress without having solicited, or expected the nomination and was elected. He was re-elected for six more terms, without any solicitation on his part. In all that period, he was an eminent and successful lawyer and traveled the Circuit when not in Congress. Scioto County was one of the Counties of his district, where he was employed in important cases from time to time. In 1838, he was a member of the Ohio Canal Commission. During his latter services in Congress he was on the Committee on ways and means; and his financial ability was of great service during the Mexican War. He was author of the law creating the Department of the Interior. He was a Whig during his entire Congressional service. John Quincy Adams said of him, that very few men were his superiors. Alex. H. Stephens, said he was the most prominent leader on the Whig side. In 1851, he was the Whig Candidate for Governor of Ohio, and was defeated. The vote stood, Reuben Wood, 145,654, Samuel F. Vinton, 119,548, Samuel Lewis, 16,918.

In 1853, he was President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad, and held it one year. In 1854, he took up his residence in the city of Washington, D. C., and continued there until his death, May 11th, 1862. In this period he occasionally presented a case in the Supreme Court and argued it. His success as a lawyer was thought to be due to his habits of patient investigation and clear analysis. He exhausted every subject he discussed. He was remarkably lucid in his statements. He was a master of the English language. He dignified every subject he discussed. His argument on the boundary line between Ohio and Virginia, is a monument of his legal learning; and it placed him at the head of the legal profession. He was married in 1824 to Romaine Madeline Bureau, a daughter of John P. R. Bureau. She left two children, John Bureau and Madeline Vinton Dahlgren.

John Bureau his son, died when quite young. Mrs. Dahlgren is now deceased. She has a daughter, Mrs. Pierce, now residing in Washington, D. C. Mr. Vinton was of a slight frame, but of great dignity of presence. He had a mild clear blue eye, and his thin compressed lips showed the determination of his character. His manner was composed, but sweet and gentle, scarcely indicating his great firmness. Thomas Ewing, the elder, said of him, on being informed of his death, that "for ten or fifteen years he had more influence in Congress than any man in it. He was a wise, sagacious statesman, almost unerring in his perception of right, bold in pursuing and skillful in sustaining his opinions. He had always a large control over the minds of those with whom he acted. Within the range of my acquaintance, he has hardly left a peer behind him."

At his own request, he was interred in the Cemetery at Gallipolis, beside his wife, who died in 1831.

William Allen of Ross County.

William Allen was born in Edenton, N. C. in 1806. He emigrated to Ross County, Ohio, in 1823, and studied law. In 1827, although a minor, he was admitted to the practice of law. In 1832, he was elected a representative as a Jackson Democrat, by a single vote over General Duncan McArthur, Clay Democrat, serving from Dec. 2nd, 1833, to March 3rd, 1835. In 1837, he was elected to the United States Senate in place of Thomas Ewing, Whig; in 1843, he was re-elected to the same position. In 1873, he was elected Governor of Ohio over General Edward F. Noyes, receiving 214,654 votes while his competitor received 213,837. In 1875, he was defeated for governor by General Rutherford Hayes, who received 297,817, while 292,273, were cast for Allen. In 1876, he was candidate for the presidential nomination before the Democratic National convention at St. Louis, which nominated Samuel J. Tilden, of New York. He died at Fruit Hill, his manorial residence, near Chillicothe, in 1879.

His parents died in his infancy, and he became the ward of his aunt, Mrs. Thurman, the mother of Judge Allen G. Thurman, who resided in Virginia. In 1821, the parents of the latter gentleman emigrated from Virginia to Chillicothe. Young Allen was at that time a student in the Lynchburg, Va. academy, where he remained for two years, and then joined the Thurmans in their new home.

His education was finished in a private school in Chillicothe, after which he began the study of law with Thomas Scott, the eminent jurist, who after a long series of years graced the supreme bench of Ohio, being the chief justice of that court during a considerable portion of his judicial services.

In 1827, he was admitted to practice, while still below the legal age, through a special rule, and in recognition of his ability and erudition. He entered at once into partnership with Colonel Edward King, under whose tuition he completed his legal studies. His career in his profession was brilliant and successful.

He entered politics in 1832, rather against his natural bent and inclinations, and was elected to the national house of representatives by a single vote over General Duncan McArthur, whose daughter, Mrs. Effie McArthur Coons, he married in 1845. Mrs. Allen inherited Fruit Hill from her father, and there the distinguished senator and future governor resided during the remainder of his life.

Just preceding the meeting of the legislature in 1837, which chose a successor to Thomas Ewing in the United States Senate, Mr. Allen was the orator of the day at a Democrat banquet at Columbus, and delivered a speech so pregnant with eloquence and so pertinent to the great and exciting issues of the hour, that it won him the support of his friends and the members of his party in the legislature in the close and exciting contest which followed.

The election took place on the 18th of January, 1837, and 13 ballots were taken, 108 votes being cast, and 55 were necessary to elect. On the thirteenth ballot he received the required 55, Thomas Ewing receiving 52, one marked scattering and one not voting, so that he reached the senatorship by a single vote. In 1843 he was re-elected by 63 votes to 44 for Mr. Ewing and one blank.

In the Senate he distinguished himself for his great forensic ability no less than for his strong and aggressive views on all great questions. During the Oregon boundary dispute the American claim extended to 54 degrees 40 minutes of north latitude, which was disputed by the English diplomats and statesmen. In a speech in the senate when this question was under consideration Allen said: "I am here to declare for 54 40 or fight." In the presidential campaign of 1844, this expression became the Democratic battle cry throughout the country. During his whole senatorial career he was the champion of a vigorous foreign policy and the unrelenting foe of the Bank of the United States.

An intense Democrat he took an active part in all the political campaigns from 1832 to 1845. Of gigantic frame and mold, and a voice like Stentor's, he gained the sobriquet of "The Fog Horn", after he had drowned the noise of a steam whistle which was being blown in the vicinity of a Democratic mass meeting to prevent his auditors from hearing him.

In 1845, he retired from public life, and devoted himself to the graces of literature and scientific research. He became an expert in botany and geology, was an enthusiastic patron of art and literature, and nothing so delighted him as to have his friends, old and young, throng his stately mansion and talk with him on his favorite topics.

Many and strenuous efforts were made by his friends to recall him to public life, but he put them all aside until 1873, almost forty years after his retiracy, and then re-entered public life under the most peculiar circumstances.

In that year the leaders of the Democratic party were anxiously scanning the horizon for some one who could retrieve the disastrous defeats of nearly a score of fruitless campaigns. Many distinguished names were canvassed, but Allen's was not on the list because of his many declinations. Then it was that Mr. Murat Halstead, the brilliant editor of the chief Republican Journal in the State, "The Cincinnati Commercial," paraphrased an ancient popular melody as follows, indicative of the sore straits of the Ohio Democracy:

"Come, rise up, William Allen,
And go along with me,
And I will make you governor
Of Ohio's fair countree."

A copy of the Commercial containing this ditty was shown to Senator Allen, by Colonel John A. Cockrill, the afterward renowned journalist, then a young man representing the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The clear, grey blue eye of the sage of Fruit Hill twinkled with merriment as he listened to the jingle of the lines. He stretched himself to his full height, walked to and fro on the broad veranda for a few moments, and then stopping in front of his young friend said:

"John, you will do me the kindness to say in the Enquirer in the morning that I cannot resist Mr. Halstead's kind invitation, and that I will accept the Democratic nomination if it is tendered to me, and more than that I will be elected governor by the people."

That message, when it appeared in the press of the state the next day in a much more elaborate form, electrified the party in the state, and when the Democratic state convention met, it unanimously nominated the Sage of Fruit Hill, in the midst of the wildest enthusiasm. He took the stump with all the ardor of youth, and although the Republican committee, scenting the danger, covered the state with the ablest orators from all parts of the Union, he was elected by a plurality of 817. The remainder of the Democratic state ticket was defeated by pluralities ranging from 176 to 633. President Grant had carried the state on the Republican ticket at the preceding election by over 37,000.

The marble statue of William Allen adorns the rotunda of the National Capital as one of the Ohioans of the nineteenth century deemed worthy of that honor by the general assembly of the state.

William Key Bond

was born in 1792, in St. Mary's, Maryland. He received his education at Litchfield, Connecticut. He went to Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1812, and was admitted to the bar there. He was a partner with William Creighton from 1813 to 1841. He was a Colonel in the Militia. He served in the 24th, 25th and 26th Congresses. He left Chillicothe in 1841, and located in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was appointed Surveyor of that port, by President Fillmore, which office he held for several years. He was also interested in Railways, from 1850 to 1860. He was a business man above all things. Colonel Bond was an active partisan in politics, upon the Whig side. In those days there was as potent a "Virginia Ring" as there is now; but then the Virginians and immediate descendants of Virginians were nearly all Whigs; and it was only when the issues growing out of slavery caused the dissolution of the Whig party, and the organization of the Republican party, that numerous and influential class of our people went over to the Democracy, and the "ring" was transferred. Bond was the favorite of that ring; and it was because neither he nor they would tolerate the election of a born Yankee to Congress, that the nomination of Douglas for that office was nullified, in 1831. Colonel Bond occupied a prominent part in the debates and business in the House of Representatives. "Bond's eight day speech", so styled because its delivery occupied one hour of eight consecutive days, was much commented upon by the political papers of forty years ago. Bond's opponents insisted on calling him an aristocrat and swearing that he wore silk stockings. Yet, with all his suavity, he could and would resent insult with promptitude and spirit. The writer, (Col. W. E. Gilmore,) witnessed an instance of this. Colonel Brush was adversely engaged to Bond in the trial of a cause, and repeatedly interrupted the latter's argument, though repeatedly requested to desist. Finally, a fourth interruption, accompanied by some offensive ennuendo, overcame Bond's self-control and respect for the court. He rushed across the room, seized with his thumb and forefinger the very prominent nose of the offender and wrung it until blood flowed, then spat in Brush's face. Having inflicted this punishment upon the offender, Bond walked back to his place and resumed his argument. He was not further interrupted. But after the conclusion of the case, he was fined fifteen dollars for contempt of court and no more serious result followed, although some anticipated a bloody result from Brush. In 1844, he was severely, almost fatally hurt, by being struck when going aboard a steamboat, by a timber of a hoisting derrick, employed in loading the vessel. This injury, perhaps, and the death of his wife, afterwards, certainly hastened his dissolution. He died greatly respected, as it was proper such a man should be, on February 17th, 1864.

HON. WILLIAM RUSSELL.

William Russell

was born in Ireland, in 1782. He was left an orphan at an early age. He came to the United States alone, in 1796, at the age of fourteen. He remained a short time in Philadelphia, and while there began to learn a trade, that of a hatter. He went from Philadelphia to Maysville, Kentucky, took up hat making and followed it. While there he married Sarah Tribbey. They had one child but she and it died shortly after it was born. He moved to Adams County, Ohio, in 1802. He represented Adams county in the first legislature of the new state which sat at Chillicothe, Ohio, March 1, to April 16, 1803. Thomas Kirker and Joseph Lucas were his colleagues. He was the first clerk of the courts of Scioto County, having been appointed December 1803. It seems that the office did not suit his tastes and he resigned in June, 1804. In the eighth legislative session, December 4, 1809, to February 22, 1810, he was a member from Adams county at the munificent salary of two dollars per day. He had Dr. Alexander Campbell afterwards United States senator as a colleague. On the fifteenth day of February 1810, he was appointed an associate judge for Scioto County, Ohio. This office did not suit his tastes and he resigned it in 1812.

At the tenth legislative session, December 10, 1811, to February 21, 1812, he was a member of the house from Adams county, with John Ellison as a colleague. This legislature sat at Zanesville, Ohio. The house impeached John Thompson, a president judge of the common pleas, but on trial in the senate, he was acquitted. At this session Columbus was made the capital of the state, and the legislature provided for the military equipment of the Ohio militia. It also incorporated a number of libraries in the state. At the eleventh legislative session, December 7th, 1812, to February 9th, 1813, William Russell was a member from Adams county with John Ellison as a colleague. This legislature provided for the care of women who had been abandoned by their husbands (an epidemic in those days), and made the property of the absconder liable for the wife's maintenance. Strong measures were adopted to require every able bodied man to respond to the call to arms, but the legislature, by special resolution, excused Jacob Woodring, of Scioto County, from military duty, because his father was blind, lame, absolutely helpless and had two blind children. No one else was excused. From 1813 to 1819, he dropped out of the legislature, but not out of public employment.

At the eighteenth legislative session from December 5th, 1819, to February 26th, 1820, he was a member of the Senate from Adams County. The House amused itself by impeaching two judges on the grounds of deciding an election contest contrary to the evidence, but the Senate unanimously acquitted them. The Senate spent a great deal of time in discussing the Missouri Compromise and the question of slavery.

At the nineteenth legislative session, December 4, 1820, to February 23, 1821, William Russell again represented Adams County in the Senate. The question of a canal system occupied much attention; also that of attacking branches of the United States bank. This legislature placed the United States Bank without the pale of Ohio laws and forbade the officers of the courts to recognize it in any way. Justices and judges were forbidden to entertain any case for it; sheriffs to arrest any one at its instance, or notaries to protest notes for it, or take any acknowledgement for it. Justices and judges were to be fined $500.00 if they entertained a suit for it, and sheriffs $200.00 for putting any one in jail at its instance. From this time, 1812 to 1829, William Russell was out of public employment. In the fall of 1826, he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and re-elected for two succeeding terms. During all this time he was a resident of Adams County and a merchant at West Union. After his third term in congress expired, March 4, 1833, he removed to near Rushtown, Ohio, in Scioto County and engaged in forging bar iron. In this enterprise he was unsuccessful and is said to have lost $30,000. He was elected to the twenty-seventh Congress in 1841 as a Whig and served one term. At the end of his first term, March 4, 1843, he returned to his farm on Scioto Brush Creek, where he continued to reside until his death, September 28, 1845, at the age of 63. When at Portsmouth in 1803, he was a Presbyterian, but returning to West Union, he became a Methodist. In 1809 to 1820, he was one of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church in West Union, Ohio, and aided in the erection of the first church there, and all his life after, he was a faithful, devoted and devout Methodist. He was a student and self educated. He was a fluent and pleasant speaker and had extensive conversational powers. He was liked and respected by all who knew him. He had a remarkable popularity, largely owing to his even temper. As a merchant he was strict and honorable in all his dealings, and maintained the highest credit.

His public career began at the age of twenty-one, when elected to the first legislature of Ohio. He was a legislator, clerk of court, state senator and congressman and filled each and every office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. In private life he was a successful merchant, an honored member of the Methodist church and an upright citizen. In this case the office sought the man. How many men have crowded into the space of forty years so many activities? Comparing him to the men of his time, we find he held office in two counties, and all he lacked was that he was not made a militia general. Every legislator of prominence, under the constitution of 1802, was either made an associate judge or a major-general of militia. William Russell obtained the judgeship but missed the generalship. However, his career in congress gave him more distinction than the military title could have done.

In 1802, he married Nancy Wood and had seven children, six sons and a daughter. One of the sons lived near Rushtown during his life. Another, Wm. B. married Rebecca Lucas and became the father of six children, three sons and three daughters. A grandson, James Russell, resides near Lucasville, Ohio, and another, George Russell, in Portsmouth, Ohio.

John L. Taylor.

General John L. Taylor, a prominent citizen of Ross County, was elected four times to congress. He was first elected in 1864 from the eighth district, composed of Ross, Pike, Jackson and Scioto Counties; was re-elected to the Thirty-first in 1848; and in 1850 to the Thirty-second in the same district. In 1852 he was elected to the Thirty-third congress from the tenth district, embracing Ross, Scioto, Lawrence, Pike and Jackson.

He was born in Stafford County, Virginia, March 7th, 1805, and came to Chillicothe in 1825, and was for many years a major-general of militia. After his service in congress he was given an important position in the department of interior. He died in Washington, D. C., September 6, 1870.

Colonel Oscar Fitzallen Moore was born January 27th, 1815, near Steubenville, Ohio, the son of James H. Moore and his wife, Sarah Stull. His maternal grandfather, Daniel Stull was a Captain in the Revolutionary war. He graduated at Washington College, Pennsylvania, in the class of 1836. Directly after he began the study of law under D. L. Collier then Mayor of Steubenville. He attended one session of the Cincinnati law school and was admitted to practice by the Supreme Court in session at Steubenville, in October, 1838. In April, 1839, he located at Portsmouth, Ohio, and remained there the remainder of his life. From that date until 1852, there was a law that lawyers should pay taxes on their incomes to the State. They made no returns of income and the Assessor guessed them off.

If he guessed under, as was usually the case, no complaints were made. If he guessed over, it was a good advertisement for the lawyer, worth all the tax as an advertisement and no complaints were made. This is the way the Assessors guessed off Col. Moore, 1839, $100; 1842, $300; 1843, $500; 1845, $800; 1847, $1,000; 1849, $1,500.

In the fall of 1839, he announced himself as a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney against Samuel M. Tracy, but before the election, he withdrew, and Mr. Tracy was elected unanimously.

In 1840, July 4, he delivered the oration at a celebration of the day by the Franklin Institute of which he was a member, and of which he was the Vice-President in 1842. The Franklin Institute had a celebration of its own that day, there being another public one in the town.

In 1843, on September 19, he was married at Chillicothe, Ohio, to Martha B. Scott, daughter of Judge Thomas Scott, of Chillicothe, Ohio, who was the first prosecuting attorney for Scioto County and the father of fifteen children. Three of Judge Scott's daughters were married in Portsmouth, one to Howells, a merchant, one to Col. T. J. Graham and one to Col. O. F. Moore.

Col. Moore was a most ardent and enthusiastic Whig. He was consequently a great admirer of Henry Clay, and when his first child was born, he hoped it would be a boy so he might name it for Henry Clay, whom it might be said he worshiped. The first born proved to be a girl and he named her Clay. She is now the wife of Mr. George O. Newman and a grandmother. His second daughter is Mrs. Kate Newman, the wife of Hon. James W. Newman.

In 1844, he was a candidate for Mayor of Portsmouth and to the lasting disgrace of the town, was defeated. The vote stood Moore, 146; Richard H. Tomlin, 177. Before the term was out, council was trying to rid itself of Tomlin, because of inefficiency. In the same year Mr. Moore served on the Whig Central Committee.

From 1853 to 1855, he was City Solicitor at a salary of $100.00 per year. In 1850, he was elected to the House of Representatives of the State as a Whig, for Scioto and Lawrence Counties. He had 1,326 votes and his opponent Johnston had 430, majority 839. In 1851, he was elected to the State Senate over Francis Cleveland, Democrat. The vote stood in Scioto County, Moore 1,309, Cleveland 888, Moore's majority 421.

In 1854, he was a candidate for Congress and carried the County by 1,200 majority. In 1855, he was a delegate to the Republican State Convention. In 1856, he ran for Congressman on the American ticket. R. C. Hoffman ran on the Republican ticket and Joseph Miller on the Democrat; Miller was elected. The vote of Scioto County was Moore, 1,343; Miller, 1,309; Hoffman, 532. In the whole District the vote stood Joseph Miller, Democratic, 7,403; Richard C. Hoffman, Republican, 5,633; Oscar F. Moore, American, 4,325.

In 1859, in the Spring, he declared he believed he was a Democrat, but in the campaign, he addressed Republican meetings. He professed himself pleased with the nomination of Lincoln for President in 1860, and determined to vote for him, but on July 7th, 1860, he declared himself for Bell and Everett.

On July 31st, 1861, he entered the 33rd O. V. I. as its Lieutenant Colonel. The original Colonel was Joshua Sill and he was promoted to Brigadier-General. Moore was made Colonel July 16, 1862.

At the battle of Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862, he was severely wounded, captured and paroled by the enemy. He was not exchanged till February, 1863. He was really unfit for duty after his wound, but he still remained in the service. He commanded his regiment at the two days battle at Chickamauga, where it lost so heavily in killed and wounded. He served in Court Martials at Nashville Term in 1863 and 1864. July 20th, 1864, he resigned and came home.

In 1864, he supported McClellan for the Presidency and from that date continued to be a Democrat.

In 1866, he was the Democratic nominee for Congress and was defeated. The vote in the District composed of Adams, Gallia, Jackson, Lawrence, Scioto and Vinton was Wilson, 12,783; O. F. Moore, 9,945. In Scioto County the vote was Wilson, 2,621; Moore, 2,120. While he was always at the service of his party for campaign speeches, he was not again a candidate before the people until 1881, when he was a candidate for Common Pleas Judge on the Democratic ticket. The majorities in the District were Moore, 797, A. C. Thompson 2,407, net majority for Thompson, 1,620. In the County the vote stood Thompson, 2,407; Moore, 2,113. Thompson's majority, 284. This was the lowest majority on the ticket, the highest being 1,252. This closed Colonel Moore's political career. He died June 24th, 1885, at Waverly, Ohio, while in attendance on the court there. He practiced law from 1839 until 1885, a period of forty-six years. He acquired great eminence in his profession and was employed in all important suits in his own County and many in the surrounding Counties. He was not a member of any Church, but was a constant attendant on the services of the First Presbyterian Church, at Portsmouth. He had been such a devoted Whig that when that party was dissolved, he knew not where to turn. He was zealous in his support of the American party while it lasted, but his education and training as a Whig, and his conservatism prevented him from being at home in the Republican party. He had never been anti-slavery and believed in the guarantees of the Constitution as to slavery and when such rank abolitionists, as Milton Kennedy, Joseph Ashton and F. C. Searl were in the front ranks of the Republican party, he felt that he was not at home there. He had many warm friends—more of them out of his party than in it. He was liberal in his views and extremely charitable. His ability as a lawyer, whether with the Court or jury was the very highest. He was a great student in his profession and always came out strongest in a close case. As a politician, he was a failure, because of his extreme conservatism, due to his legal training. No great lawyer ever made a successful politician; and Col. Moore was no exception to the rule. His Republican friends thought if, when the Republican party was formed, he had remained in it, he would have made a signal success, and no doubt, if he had, he could have had any offices he desired.

His relations to his professional brethren were very cordial. He will long be remembered as one of the most brilliant lawyers of Southern Ohio.

Joseph Miller

was born in Chillicothe, in September, 1819, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. He was Prosecuting Attorney in 1845-46, and as such prosecuted Henry Thomas for the murder of Frederick Edwards. In 1856, he was elected by the Democratic party, to represent this district in the 35th Congress; and to this day, he has been the only man born in Ross County, who ever represented a district, of which Ross County formed a part, in the Congress of the United States. During his term the contest for and against the extension of slavery into Kansas and Nebraska was raging. Miller voted with the south on this subject; and as a considerable number of his party had, by this time, become heartily tired of pro-slavery pretension and arrogance, his reelection became obviously impossible. But after he had been defeated President Buchanan, in March 1859 appointed him as Chief Justice of Nebraska Territory. In 1861, his successor was appointed by President Lincoln; and Mr. Miller returned to Ohio, in very bad health, and died May 27th, 1862.

Carey A. Trimble was born in Hillsboro, Ohio, April 13, 1813. He was the fourth son of Governor Allen Trimble. He received a classical education and graduated at the Ohio University in 1833, and from the Cincinnati Medical College in 1836, and was demonstrator of anatomy in that institution from 1837 until 1841. His health failing, he retired from his profession and devoted himself to farming. He was elected to the Thirty-sixth Congress in 1858 from the Tenth District, composed of Ross, Pike, Jackson, Scioto and Lawrence Counties. He was re-elected to the Thirty-seventh, in 1860, from the same District. He married Mary, daughter of Governor McArthur. They had one daughter, Nancy, who married W. M. Madeira. His first wife died and he was married the second time to Ann P. Thompson of Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and they went there to reside. The date of his demise is not known.

Hon. Wells A. Hutchins was born October 7, 1818, in Trumbull County, Ohio. His father was Asa Hutchins and his mother was Hannah Bushnell, both from Connecticut. Consequently he was a Yankee. His father was a Colonel in the war of 1812, but died at the early age of forty-five, leaving his widow with eight children to face this cruel world. Our subject was then twelve years of age. In 1831, he worked on a farm for $25.00, for his entire year's services, and from that time was entirely dependent on himself. His mind was quick and active and he never failed to make the best of the situation about him. At eighteen, he had qualified himself for a teacher. He went to Corydon, Ind., and taught in a select school for eight months. With true Yankee thrift he saved $900 from his teaching. He took it home and used it in payment of his expenses while studying law.

He read law at Warren, Ohio, with the Honorables John Hutchins and John Crowell and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In the Spring of 1842, he came to Portsmouth. He had been at Steubenville, and was on a steamboat on his way down the river to go further west. On the steamboat he met L. N. Robinson and his brother J. V. They persuaded him to get off at Portsmouth and he did so. He went into Squire Lorenzo C. Goff's court and liked the way he saw justice administered. The first Sunday he was in Portsmouth, he went to the Methodist Church where Hibbs' Hardware store now stands. He accompanied his friends, L. N. and J. V. Robinson. The men and women sat apart and he noticed a pretty, back eyed, black haired girl in "the amen corner." He asked who she was, but his friends the Robinsons passed the question and when the services were over the Robinsons waited near the door with young Hutchins and as the pretty girl came near, they introduced Hutchins to her as their sister, Cornelia. Mr. Hutchins married her February 23, 1843. The twingia of Mr. Hutchins in Portsmouth are numerous. The first official record we have of him was in the Spring of 1842. The tax assessor guessed off his income at $100.00. He must have risen in public esteem very rapidly for the next year it was guessed off at $500.00. In 1845, it was $800.00, in 1847, $1,000, and in 1849, $1,500.00. In 1842 and 1844, he was on the Whig Central Committee. In 1843, he leased his office of the city for $32.00 per year.

In 1851, he was the Whig candidate for the Legislature and was elected receiving 1,348 votes to 923 for Judge Joseph Moore. He sat in the first General Assembly under the new Constitution. In 1855, he was a delegate to the Republican State Convention from Scioto County. Lucius V. Robinson, George A. Waller and Milton Kennedy were the others. In 1856, he went over to the Democrats. He was elected City Solicitor, in 1857, and served until 1859, at $100, per year. In 1859, he was re-elected and served until 1861, at a salary of $150, per year.

In 1860, he was a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket in the Tenth District and was defeated. The vote stood Carey A. Trimble, Republican, 11,503, Hutchins, Democrat, 11,025, majority, 568. The vote in his County was Trimble, 2,210, Hutchins, 2,148.

In June, 1861, he was one of the committee to buy $5,000.00 in arms for the County. On August 7, 1861, when Company G, came home, he made the welcoming speech. On October 16, 1861, he was one of the Military Committee of the County.

In 1862, in the Spring, he went to Washington with a Committee to secure a government armory at Portsmouth. On June 16, 1862, he was tendered the Colonelcy of the 91st O. V. I., but declined. In the summer of 1862, he declared for a more vigorous prosecution of the war and was nominated for Congress on that issue. The vote in the district stood: Hutchins 8,605, Bundy 6,702, Hutchins plurality 1,903. In Scioto County the vote stood; Bundy, Republican, 1,165; Hutchins, Democrat, 2,004. In September, 1862, he was Provost Marshal of the City, at the time of the expedition to Vanceburg to suppress a suppositious rebel raid.

In 1863, he changed his views about the war; and on July 27, 1863, he made a speech in Jackson, in which he stated that he thought the South could not be subdued; and that the Country was about to become a military despotism. He denounced the arrest of Vallandigham. In 1865, in Congress, he voted for the repeal of slavery in the District of Columbia; and in February of that year, he voted for the thirteenth amendment abolishing slavery. Sam Pike who had a newspaper in Chillicothe denounced him for this, in unmeasured terms. Pike said Hutchins had never been a Democrat and that from 1861, he had been a Republican in disguise. The article was a long one and was published in the Portsmouth Times, without note or comment. In 1864, he ran for a second term for Congress and was defeated by Mr. Bundy by the following vote in the District; Hutchins, Democrat, 7,793; Bundy, Republican, 11,732. In Scioto County the vote stood: Bundy, 1,930; Hutchins, 1,759.

In 1867, the Democrats nominated him for City Solicitor against Robert N. Spry, then a Republican. It was said at the time, that Mr. Hutchins did not know that he was on the ticket until after the election. The vote stood: Spry, 732; Hutchins, 651; a majority of 81 for Spry. In the same year he and W. K. Thompson were the only Democrats in Scioto County who voted for the amendment to the State Constitution, conferring suffrage on the negroes. While Mr. Hutchins acted with the Whig party during its existence, he was in reality always an old time abolitionist. When in Congress, it was therefore no wonder that he voted for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia and for the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In 1868, he was appointed as one of a Committee to go to Columbus and lobby for a new penitentiary to be established at Portsmouth. The City appropriated $1,000.00, for this purpose and asked the County to appropriate as much more.

In 1870, the Council appointed him a Hospital Commisioner, but he declined. In 1875, he was a Trustee of the Portsmouth Young Ladies' Seminary and a Director of the Scioto Valley Railway. In 1887, he was a Director of the Ohio and North Western Railroad. In 1880, he was a candidate for Congress for the last time. Henry S. Neal, Republican, was his opponent. The vote in Scioto County was Neal, 3,287; Hutchins, 3,378; Hutchins' majority was 91 votes.

In the District the vote stood Henry S. Neal, 17,208; Hutchins, 15,080; Republican majority 2,128.

He died January 22, 1895, of a disease of the kidneys. Up to a few weeks prior to his death he had enjoyed excellent health and when taken sick, he expected to recover. When, however, his malady took a fatal character, he faced the inevitable, without a word. He had the most superb courage of any man who ever lived in Portsmouth, but it was not of the boastful kind. No matter what unexpected happened, he never expressed any consciousness of surprise or consternation. He was never perturbed. He was always calm and collected and never lost his equipoise. As a public speaker, he was slow, clear and logical. He had a pleasant voice and agreeable manner. He was employed in all important litigation in southern Ohio. For twenty-one years he carried on the litigation against the furnaces on the Branch road; and it is said the fees in these were $65,000. In the Scioto Valley case, he and Judge Olds had a fee of $40,000, allowed out of the fund, but what they received directly from their clients is not known. The Huntington claim of $750,000, was worthless when the litigation began; but before it closed, they made it good, dollar for dollar, with interest.

In the case of Olive Applegate vs. W. Kinney & Co., where an attempt was made to hold certain citizens as quasi partners, growing out of the failure of the Kinney Bank, in the argument, Col. Moore spoke three days. Mr. Hutchins closed to the jury and spoke one hour. He carried the jury with him and won the case. That case was probably the greatest of his legal victories.

Mr. Hutchins was intuitively a lawyer. While others had to get out their points by long and close study, his came to him intuitively. He could look into a case and say at once what principles would determine it. His plan was to take the governing principle in a case, which would determine it in his favor and urge that strongly to the Court or Jury. But one thing he could not do. When he was on the wrong side of a case, he could not conceal his consciousness of the fact from the Court and his fellow members of the bar. The result of this peculiarity was, that when he was on the right side of a case, he was irresistible.

He was the best illustration of a self composed, self contained, self reliant man ever known to the writer. No matter with what he was confronted, he expressed no surprise and treated it as though he had been studying it and had expected it for ten years. He had his private griefs enough to have crushed many men, but he never gave the slightest indication of their burden to the public. He never preached any philosophy, but his philosophy far exceeded that of any of the ancient schools. He never speculated why he came into the world, nor concerned himself about his going out. He undertook to meet every situation as it came to him and to make the best of it.

He was never known to lose his equipoise. When confronted with death, he met it with the utmost composure; and never undertook to give a single direction on account of it. While his Republican neighbors did not like his political course, they were all his friends. He was a man of great liberality. He would have given away his last dollar in charity. He was always in favor of public improvements and public enterprises.

Socially he was courteous to all and liked by all. Although a very positive man, he was positive in a way which gave no offense. He was a gentleman of the old school. He was always at his best before the world. He scorned an ignoble action. He was not a user of tobacco or liquors. He belonged to a class of gentlemen which has forever passed away,—an admirable type of lawyer, man and citizen; one whose life was an inspiration to those about him.

Hezekiah Sanford Bundy was born August 15, 1817, in Marietta, Ohio. His father was Nathan Bundy, a native of Hartford, Conn. His mother was Ada M. Nicholson, of Dutchess County, New York, where they were married. In 1816, they removed to Marietta, Ohio. Two years later, Mr. Bundy's father settled near Athens where he leased college land and cleared and improved it. His title, however, proved invalid. He was killed in 1832 by the falling of a tree. In 1880, his wife died at the age of eighty-one years. Of their three children, our subject is the only one who reached maturity. In 1834, he located in McArthur, and in 1837, went to Wilkesville, where he married Lucinda, daughter of Zimri Wells. In 1839, he moved back to McArthur, where his wife died in December, 1842, leaving three children; William Sanford, Sarah A., wife of Major B. F. Stearns, of Washington, D. C.; and Lucy, now Mrs. J. C. H. Cobb, of Jackson County.

From 1839 to 1846, Mr. Bundy was engaged in merchandising in McArthur, Ohio. In 1844, he married Caroline, daughter of Judge Payne, of Jackson County, and in 1846, moved to the old home of his father-in-law, which he afterwards purchased and where he continued to reside until his death. His second wife died in 1868, leaving two daughters; Julia P., now the wife of Senator Joseph B. Foraker, of Ohio, and Eliza M., wife of Harvey Wells, the founder of Wellston. Mr. Bundy was again married in 1876 to Mary M. Miller, who survived and still occupies the old home.

In his early life, he attended for a short time a private school under the charge of David Pratt, of Athens, but his schooling ceased when he was fourteen years of age. In 1846, he commenced the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. In the fall of 1848, he was elected to the legislature from Jackson and Gallia Counties and voted to repeal the Black Laws. In 1850, he was elected to represent Jackson, Athens, Gallia and Meigs Counties in the House. In 1855, he was elected to the State Senate to represent the present seventh senatorial district. In 1860, he was a presidential elector from his congressional district and voted for Abraham Lincoln. In 1862, he was the Republican candidate for congress from the eleventh district of Ohio, but was defeated by the Hon. Wells A. Hutchins by 1,900 votes. Two years later he was a candidate against Mr. Hutchins and defeated him by a majority of 4,000. In 1872, he was a candidate for the 43rd congress in the same district and defeated Samuel A. Nash by a large majority. In 1874, he was again a candidate, but was defeated by Hon. John L. Vance, of Gallipolis. In 1893, he was a candidate for congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Gen. Wm. H. Enochs, and was elected. Upon Mr. Bundy's retirement in March, 1895, he was given a banquet and reception at Jackson, Ohio, which was attended by Gov. McKinley, and State officers, Senator Foraker, Ex-Governor Foster, General Keifer, General Grosvenor, and many others of national prominence; and to Mr. Bundy on that occasion was given one of the grandest tributes ever witnessed in Ohio. He represented Scioto County in the State Senate and in his three terms in congress.

In 1843, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was one of the first lay delegates from Ohio to the general conference. In 1848, he bought the farm where he died and since then was largely engaged in the iron and coal interests in Jackson County, Ohio, and owned Latrobe and Keystone Furnaces. He also at one time owned Eliza Furnace.

His son, Wm. S. Bundy, served in the 18th O. V. I. during the first three months of the civil war. He then enlisted in Company G. of the 7th Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and was wounded Sept. 20, 1863, at Beans Station in Tennessee. In January, 1864, he was sent home on account of his disability and on March 22, 1864, discharged for the same reason. After his return from the army he married Kate Thompson, and had one child, the present Wm. E. Bundy, United States Attorney for the Southern District of Ohio. He died from the results of his wound January 27, 1867, and his wife was killed in December 1868, by being thrown from a horse.

Hezekiah S. Bundy was always remarkably popular among the furnace-men of his county and district. They were for Bundy for congress at any time and at all times. He was an excellent campaigner. While he was not trained and never sought to train himself in the arts of oratory, yet he was an entertaining and effective speaker. The people came to hear him and were always pleased and instructed. Mr. Bundy was well informed in every detail of public affairs, and had a good memory. He had a remarkable treasure of illustrative anecdotes from which he could draw at any time. His reminiscences were always delightful. He thoroughly understood human nature, and always kept in close touch with the common people. On the floor of the House, or in committee, he was familiar with the public business, and always performed his duties creditably to himself and acceptably to his constituents. On all public questions in congress while he was a member, he was usually in advance of the march of public sentiment, especially was this true of reconstruction measures. As a business man he did much to develop the iron and coal industries in the region where he lived. He enjoyed to a remarkable extent the confidence and esteem of all who knew him and was universally mourned when he died at his home in Wellston, Ohio, December, 12, 1895.

John T. Wilson.

The words of Miss Edna Dean Proctor's poem are ringing in my ears. She inquires whether the heroes are all dead; whether they lived only in the times of Homer and whether none of the race survive in these times? The refrain of the poem is; "Mother Earth, are the heroes dead?" And then she proceeds to answer it in her own way, and answers it thus:

"Gone? In a grander form they rise.
Dead? We may clasp their hands in awe."

Then comparing our modern heroes with those of Homeric days. Jason, Orpheus, Hercules, Priam, Archilles, Hector, Theseus and Nestor, she continues:

"For their armor rings on a fairer field
Than the Greek and the Trojan fiercely trod:
For freedom's sword is the blade they wield,
And the light above is the smile of God."

We have heroes in these, our days, who will compare more than favorably with those of the Homeric, or any subsequent times; but having known them as neighbors and friends, and having associated with them from day to day, we do not appreciate them until death has sealed their characters, and then as we begin to study them it begins to dawn on us that they too have done things which canonize them heroes.

Till since his death, we believe the public has not fully appreciated the character of Hon. John T. Wilson, a former congressman of the tenth (Ohio) district, though it is his record as a patriot, and not as a congressman that we propose especially to discuss.

He was a hero of native growth. He was born April 16, 1811, in Highland County, Ohio, and lived the most of his life and died within ten miles of his birthplace. His span of life extended until the sixth of October, 1891, eighty-five years, five months, and twenty days, and in that time his manner of life was known to his neighbors as an open book.

In that time, living as a country store-keeper and farmer, and resisting all temptations to be swallowed up in city life, if such temptations ever came to him, he accumulated a fortune of about a half a million of dollars, which, before, his death, was devoted principally to charitable work..

To attempt to sum up his life in the fewest words, it consisted in trying to do the duty nearest him. He was never a resident of a city except when attending to public official duties, and to expect a hero to come from the remote country region about tranquility in Adams county, Ohio, was as preposterous as looking for a prophet from the region of Nazareth in the year one; yet the unexpected happened in this instance.

Until the age of fifty, he had been a quiet unobtrusive citizen of his remote country home, seeking only to follow his vocation as a country merchant and to do his duty as a citizen; but it was when the war broke out that the soul which was in him was disclosed to the world. He showed himself an ardent patriot. When government bonds were first offered, there were great doubts as to whether the war would be successful, and whether the government would ever pay them.

No doubt ever occurred to Mr. Wilson. He invested every dollar he had in them and advised his neighbors to do the same. He said if the country went down, his property would go with it, and he did not care to survive it; and if the war was successful, the bonds would be all right. As fast as he made any money to spare, he continued to invest it in government securities. In the summer of 1861, he heard that Captain E. M. DeBruin now, in Hillsboro, Ohio, was organizing a company for the Thirty-third Ohio Infantry Regiment, and he went over to Winchester and arranged with Rev. I. H. DeBruin, now of Hillsboro, Ohio, that his only son and child, Spencer H. Wilson, then 19 years of age, should enlist in the company, which he did, and was its first sergeant. and died in the service at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1862.

In the summer of 1861, Mr. Wilson determined that Adams County should raise a regiment for the service. He did not want to undertake it himself, but he believed that if Colonel Cockerill, of West Union, Ohio, would lead the movement it could be done and he sent Dr. John Campbell, now of Delhi, Ohio, to secure the co-operation of Col. Cockerill.

This was not difficult to do as Col. Cockerill felt about it as Mr. Wilson. It was determined to ask Brown County to co-operate, and Col. D. W. C. Loudon, of Brown, was taken into the plan, and the Seventieth Ohio Infantry was organized in the fall of 1861. Mr. Wilson undertook to raise a company for the regiment and did so, and it was mustered in as Company E.

The Captain, the Hon. John T. Wilson, was then fifty years of age, and he had in the company three privates, each of the same age, and one of the age of fifty-five, so that the ages of the five members of that company aggregated 225 years. Hugh J. McSurely was the private who was past fifty-five years of age when he enlisted in Capt. Wilson's company. He is the father of Rev. Wm. J. McSurely, D. D. late pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Hillsboro, Ohio.

Capt. Wilson's company was much like Cromwell's troop of Ironsides, it was made up of staid old Scotch and Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, who went in from a sense of duty. Col. Loudon, of the Seventieth O. V. I. says that Capt. Wilson did more to organize the Seventieth Ohio Infantry than anyone else. At the time he went into the service, he was physically unfit, and could not have passed medical examination as an enlisted man. He had an injury to his leg, from the kick of a horse years before, that greatly disabled him, but he wanted to go and felt that he owed it to his friends and his country to go. He would consider his own physical unfitness.

He led his company into the sanguinary battle of Shiloh. His personal coolness and self possession inspired his company, and he held it together during the entire two days battle.

During the march to Corinth, after Shiloh, he was taken down with the fever, and by order of the surgeon was sent north. At, Ripley, Ohio, he was taken much worse, and lay there for weeks, delirious and unconscious, hovering between life and death. Owing to the most careful nursing, he recovered. He was not able to rejoin his regiment until September, 1862, at Memphis, Tenn.

Col. Cockerill was in command of the brigade, and made him brigade quarter-master, so he would not have to walk; but it was apparent that he was not fit for service; and it was imperiling his life for naught. Col. Cockerill and Lieut. Col. Loudon both told him he could serve his country better at home than in the army, and insisted on his resigning and going home. He resigned Nov. 27, 1862. Col. Loudon says his record was without a stain, and none were more loyal than he.

Capt. Wilson was married in 1841, to Miss Hadassah G. Dryden. There was one son of this marriage, Spencer H. Wilson, born Sept. 13, 1842, and whom he gave to his country, as before stated. Captain Wilson's wife died March 23, 1849, and he never re-married.

Capt. Wilson not only invested his fortune in the war securities and sent his only son and child to war, but went himself and served as long as he could. Could any one have done more?

In the summer of 1863, he was nominated by the Republicans of the seventh senatorial district of Ohio, to the State Senate without being a candidate, and without his knowledge or consent he was elected. In 1865, he was re-nominated and re-elected to the same office, and served his constituency with great credit and satisfaction. In 1866, he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh Ohio District for a member of Congress, and was re-nominated and re-elected in 1868 and in 1870; though just before his congressional service, and just after it, the district was carried by the Democracy.

When Mr. Wilson was first nominated for congress, it was not supposed that he was a speaker, or that he could canvass the district, but he made appointments for speaking all over the district, and filled them to the satisfaction of every one. He made a most effective speaker, and moreover, the farmers all over the district believed what he said, and were justified in doing it. He was never present at a convention which nominated or renominated him for office, and never in the slightest way solicited a nomination or a re-nomination.

He was the most satisfactory congressman ever sent from his district. Every constituent who ever wrote him, got an answer in Mr. Wilson's own hand writing, which was as uniform and as plain as copperplate. The letter told the constituent just what he wanted to know, and was a model of perspicuity and brevity. Those letters are now precious relics to any one who has one of them, and they are models of what letters should be.

If a constituent wrote for an office, he was sure to get an answer which would tell him whether he could get an office or not, and if Mr. Wilson told him he could get an office, and that he would assist him, he was sure of it. Mr. Wilson had the confidence of the President and of all the appointing officers, and if he asked for an office inside of the district, he usually obtained it, because he made it a rule never to ask for an office unless he thought he was entitled to it, and that it would be granted him.

Mr. Wilson retired from Congress at the end of his third term with the good will of his entire district, and with the feeling that he had served to their entire satisfaction.

On March 6, 1882, he gave Adams County, Ohio, $46,667.03 toward the erection of a Children's Home. The gift was really $50,000, but was subject to certain reductions, which netted it as the sum first named. As the county built the Home, he issued his own checks in payment for it, until the entire gift was made. That Home is now one of the finest and best built institutions of the kind in the state. By his last will and testament, he gave to the Children's Home an endowment of $35,000 and $15,000 in farming lands. He also gave $5,000 toward the erection of a soldier's monument to the memory of the Adams County soldiers who had died or been killed during the Civil War. This monument has been erected in the grounds of the Wilson Children's Home, and occupies a site overlooking the surrounding country.

Mr. Wilson made many private bequests in his will, which it is not within the scope of this article to mention; but to show his kindly disposition we mention that he gave $1,000 to a church in which he was reared and held his membership, and $1,000 to the church at Tranquility, where he resided. His house keeper, a faithful woman, he made independent for life. As a residuary bequest, he gave to the commissioners of Adams County, $150,000 to be expended in the support of the worthy poor.

It is to the interest of the state that every citizen shall be law abiding; that he shall faithfully follow some occupation and support himself and those dependent upon him; that he shall accumulate and hold property to guarantee his own independence and that of his family, and that he shall be able to contribute to the needs of the state.

It is also to the interest of the state that, in case of war, its citizens shall place their entire property and their personal services fully at its disposal. A citizen who performs all these obligations is said to be patriotic, and the virtues of patriotism are more admired than any other, because what is given in that direction is given for the common good of all the people of the country.

One may take the entire list of patriots, from Leonidas, the Spartan down to Lincoln, the great war president, or in our country, from General Warren down to the last man who fell at Appomattox, and none can be found who did more work for his own country than the Hon. John T. Wilson.

He periled his entire fortune; he gave the life of his only son, and he freely offered his own. What more could he have done?

Patriotism is and must be measured by the station of life which a man occupies when his opportunity comes.

If each man does all he can, and offers and gives all he can, he is as great a patriot as any one can be. Measured by the standard, Capt. John T. Wilson, filled the full measure of patriotism.

When he came to the last of earth, he not only remembered those upon whom the law would have cast his estate, but he devoted the greater part of it to public benefactions and especially to the relief of the innocent unfortunates who were not responsible for their own misfortunes.

In his public duties as captain of the line, as brigade quartermaster, and as a representative in Congress, he performed every duty apparent to him, honestly and conscientiously, and in the very best manner in which it could be done. His entire life consisted in the performance of each and every duty as he saw it at the time. He never did anything for effect or for show, or to be spoken of or praised by his fellow men.

In size, he was like Saul, head and shoulders above his fellows, over six feet high, but with a most kindly disposition. His features were attractive and commanding. He was willing to meet every man, to estimate him according to his manhood, and to bid him God-speed, if he deserved it.

GENERAL JOHN LUTHER VANCE.

He never tried to do anything great, but his punctuality to every duty before him, from day to day, made him known of all men. He simply tried to do right, and this simple devotion to duty in war and peace, in public office and as a private citizen, caused his memory to be revered as a perfect patriot so long as his good deeds shall be remembered.

General John Luther Vance

was born in the City of Gallipolis, Ohio, July 19, 1839, the eldest child of Alexander Vance and Eliza A. Shepard, his wife. He was educated in the public schools of Gallipolis and Gallia Academy. He entered his father's printing office at eleven years of age. At seventeen years of age, he was a teacher in the public schools adjoining Gallipolis. At eighteen, he was Deputy Clerk of the Courts of Gallia County. He entered the Cincinnati Law School in the fall of 1860 and took the course that winter. In 1860, he was appointed on the staff of General Constable of the Ohio Militia. The day after he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, in April, 1861, he was ordered to report at Gallipolis for military duty. He recruited and organized the first troops in Gallia County. On June 3, 1861, he began recruiting a three years' company. He was mustered in as Captain of Company B, 4th Virginia Infantry, on July 5, 1861. On April 28, 1863, he was mustered as Major of the regiment, to date from March 26, 1863; on May 31, 1863, he was mustered as Lieutenant Colonel of the same regiment, to date from May 18, 1863. Through nearly all of the last year of the service of the regiment, Colonel Vance was in command of the regiment, but could not be mustered as Colonel because the regiment was so reduced in number as to prevent it. He was mustered out of the service November 11, 1864, at Wheeling, West Virginia. From muster in until January 1, 1863, he served in West Virginia and Kentucky. He was in the battles of Fayetteville, Cotton Hill, Loup Creek and Charleston, and a number of skirmishes. The regiment started south January 1, 1863, and was made part of "Sherman's Division at Young's Point, La., and later, part of the 15th Corps, Army of Tennessee. He served with that Corps until March, 1864, when the regiment, then under his command, veteranized and he came home with his regiment on 30 days leave. Upon expiration of veteran leave the regiment was reorganized and ordered to join the Army of West Virginia; served in the Shenandoah Valley and adjoining parts of the country under Generals Hunter, Crook and Sheridan until mustered out. Our subject was in the battles of the Vicksburg campaign, Raymond, Champion Hills charges at Vicksburg, and siege, and in battle at Jackson, Mississippi; in battle of Mission Ridge, and in actions in getting there on march from Memphis to Chattanooga, to wit; Cherokee Station, Tuscumbia, at point near Florence, and skirmishes; after Mission Ridge, was with Sherman to relieve Burnside at Knoxville; and, in Virginia, was in the battle of Lynchburg and actions getting there and retreating therefrom: New Hope Church, Salem and many smaller contests; latter, in battles at Winchester, Cedar Creek, Snicker's Ford, Berryville, Hall Town, Monocacy, Bolivar Heights. His regiment as a whole or part of it, participated in forty-seven battles and skirmishes during its service. In the last year of his service he commanded the regiment. He served on various courts martial and other details, but was not detached from his regiment. When stationed at Larkinsville, Alabama, he was Provost Marshal of the Division, but still remained with his regiment. He was tendered an appointment in the regular army at the close of his service in the volunteer army, but declined it. Colonel Vance was severely wounded in one of the charges at Vicksburg, and received five other wounds which were not regarded as serious by him. After retiring from the army, he engaged in steamboating and was blown up on the steamer Cottage on the Kanawha and was severely injured. In 1867, he began publication of the Gallipolis Bulletin, and continued in charge of it until August, 1900, when he sold out to Mr. M. F. Merriman. It was a successful venture and always made money. In 1865, he was a candidate for Representative on the Democratic ticket in Gallia County, but was defeated. When it is stated that the vote for Governor in that year in that county for General Cox was 2,053 and for General Morgan was 1,038, his defeat is sufficiently explained. In 1869, he was a candidate for State Senator in the Eighth District, composed of the Counties of Gallia, Lawrence, Meigs and Vinton. The district was thoroughly Republican. His competitor, Homer C. Jones, received a vote of 8,852 and he received a vote of 6,659. In 1874, he was nominated by his party for Congress in the 11th District, composed then of Gallia, Hocking, Jackson, Lawrence, Scioto and Vinton Counties, and was opposed by the Hon. H. S. Bundy. The vote in his own County stood: 1,847 for Vance and 1,860 for Bundy. The vote in the District was 12,437 for Vance and 10,496 for Bundy. He was a candidate for re-election the second time in 1876 and was defeated, but at that time the vote in the District stood 14,639 for Vance and 15,213 for H. S. Neal,—a very complimentary vote for Colonel Vance.

In 1884, he was constrained to be a candidate for his party in the 14th District, composed of Perry, Morgan, Athens, Meigs and Gallia Counties. His candidacy was at the urgent request of the National and State Committees of his party. He was at that time opposed by the Hon. Charles H. Grosvenor, and the vote stood 17,008 for Grosvenor, 11,281 for Vance, 386 for Thomas Peden and 1,689 for Christopher Evans. In 1872, he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention and has represented his county in nearly every State Convention since the war. He was a member of the Democratic State Central and Executive Committees for years. In 1877, he was urged for Governor by members of his party and received a large vote in the State Convention. In 1889, Governor Campbell appointed him Quartermaster General and Commissary General of Subsistence, with the rank of Brigadier-General. While in Congress he was appointed and served as Chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, and also served on the Committee to investigate Louisiana affairs, and also was a member of the Committee to investigate the so-called de Golyer paving frauds. He was one of the 18 Democrats who voted against the Electoral Commission bill. In 1889, he began the agitation of the question of erecting a Hospital in Ohio for Epileptics. He secured the passage of the bill by the Legislature and was appointed a member of the Commission to select a site and prepare plans in conformity with the provisions of the law. He was elected President of the Commission when it was organized, and secured the location at Gallipolis. One of the greatest public works in which he has ever been engaged is that of providing the Ohio river with a series of locks and dams to secure six feet of water in the channel at low water, the year around. In 1895, he was elected President of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association, at its organization, and has been re-elected every year since. Since the organization of this Association, appropriations reaching twenty million dollars have been made by Congress for the Ohio and its tributaries. The continuous contract system has been adopted by Congress, locks and dams are in process of construction at many points, and it will be but a few years until a six foot stage of water will be had from Pittsburg to Cairo.

General Vance takes a great interest in everything connected with the Civil War and the G. A. R. He is a member of the G. A. R. post of Gallipolis and several times has been its Commandant. He is also a member of the Loyal Legion. While he has never practised law, he was admitted to practise in the Supreme Court of the United States and of the State of New York. He acted as Referee in a case of importance under an appointment from the Supreme Court of New York. For years he has been a member of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. For twelve years he served as President of the Gallipolis Board of Trade. He was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Gallipolis Centennial celebration in 1890, and occupied the same position at the great Soldiers' Reunion in 1888. In 1891-92 he was made President of the Ohio Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and is a life member of the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society. He was one of the charter members of the Order of Elks at Gallipolis. He is a Knight Templar and a 32d degree Mason. He was a Director of the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad Company. He has been a member of the Board of Trustees of Rio Grande College for seven years. He was made a member of the Board of Trustees of the Boys' Industrial Home at Lancaster by Governor Bushnell in 1896, and was re-appointed by Governor Nash, and was one of the founders of the Hocking and Ohio Valley Editorial Association and was for many years its President.

He was married October 4, 1866, to his first cousin, Emily Shepard, a daughter of the late John C. Shepard and his wife, Marie Louise Creuzet Shepard. Mrs. Vance's father was a son of Col. Luther Shepard and Margaret, his wife; and her mother, Marie Louise Creuzet, was a daughter of Charles Creuzet and Genevieve Pistor, his wife—both born in France. By his marriage, General Vance is identified with the old French of Gallipolis. Mr. Creuzet was one of the prominent merchants of Gallipolis in the early days, and later largely engaged in manufacturing. General Vance has three sons, as follows: Creuzet, United States Immigrant Inspector at New York; John L. Vance, jr., President of the First National Bank of Gallipolis, and Secretary and Treasurer of the Ohio Trust Company, of Columbus, Ohio; and Frank R. Vance, engaged in the manufacturing business at Columbus, Ohio. No one had a more brilliant Civil War record than General Vance, and no one has a more patriotic record among his ancestors than he. As a speaker, he is always interesting and instructive, and is constantly in demand to make addresses at public functions, especially those connected with Memorial Day and with the G. A. R. He has always been very active in public matters for the benefit of the people. He is one of the most genial men, and is courteous to all who call on him. He is a gentleman in every sense of the word, and wherever he makes an acquaintance, he makes a friend, and a friend who remains such. He is entitled to be called a public benefactor, for no citizen of Southern Ohio has projected or accomplished more than he for the benefit of his section of the State.

Henry S. Neal.

Henry S. Neal, of Ironton, Lawrence County, was born in Gallipolis, Ohio, August 25, 1828. He graduated from Marietta College in 1847. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1851, and soon came into an extensive practice.

He was elected to the State Senate in 1861, and was re-elected in 1863. He was appointed United States Consul to Lisbon, Portugal, in 1869, and became charge de'affairs upon the resignation of the American minister. In 1870 he returned to the United States. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1873.

In 1876 he was elected to the Forty-fifth congress from the Twelfth district Lawrence, Ross, Scioto, Pike and Jackson counties, and elected from the same district, in 1878, to the Forty-sixth Congress, and in 1880 was elected to the Forty-seventh from the Eleventh district, Lawrence, Adams, Scioto, Gallia, Jackson and Vinton. He was a congressman of marked ability, and was a strong debater and a fluent orator. During his political career he was a Republican, but left that party in 1896 because of the money question, he fav-of Gallipolis, represented in the forty-eighth congress, the district consisting of Adams, Gallia, Jackson, Lawrence, Scioto and Vinton counties. He was born in Gallia County, Ohio, on December 20, 1831. He was brought up on a farm and educated at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and at the Ohio University at Athens, Ohio. On leaving school, he engaged in farming, was elected delegate to the Ohio constitutional convention in 1873 and to the forty-eighth congress as a Republican, receiving 15,288 votes against 13,037 votes for John P. Leedom, Democrat.

Albert C. Thompson

was born in Brookville, Jefferson County, state of Pennsylvania, January 23, 1842. He was two years at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania, his course ending with the freshman year. He was a student at law when the Civil War broke out. On April 23, 1861, he enlisted in the Union Army, and served as second sergeant of Company I of the Eighth Pennsylvania, three months troops. The regiment served in Maryland and Virginia under General Patterson. On the twenty-seventh of August, 1861, he enlisted for three years in Company B, 105th Pennsylvania Infantry. He was made orderly sergeant, of the company, and in October, 1861, was promoted to second lieutenant on the twenty-eighth of November, 1861, he was transferred to Company K, and promoted to the captaincy of that regiment. On the twenty-first of May, 1862, he was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, and was again wounded on the twenty-ninth of August, 1861, at the second battle of Bull Run. The last wound was a serious one. A musket ball entered his right breast, fracturing his second and third ribs, and lodging in the lungs where it remained. He was confined to his bed by this wound for ten months. In June, 1863, he entered the invalid corps, but resigned in December, 1863, and resumed the study of law. He was admitted to practice in Pennsylvania on the thirteenth of December, 1864. In 1865 he removed to Portsmouth, Ohio. In 1869 he was elected probate judge of Scioto County, and served from February 9, 1870, to February 9, 1873, and was not a candidate for re-election. In the fall of 1881 he was elected one of the common pleas judges of the second subdivision of the seventh judicial district of Ohio, and served until September, 1884, when he resigned to accept the nomination of his party as a candidate for congress to which he was elected and served as above stated. After he retired from congress he was appointed by Gov. McKinley, chairman of the Ohio Tax Commission which made its report in December, 1893. He was chosen a delegate to the Republican National Convention at St.

make a reputation as such equal to any who have occupied that position in our state.

He was married December 25, 1867, to Miss Ella A. Turley, daughter of Col. John A. Turley. His eldest daughter Char is the wife of Oscar W. Newman, who has a sketch herein. His daughters Sara and Ruth are unmarried. His daughter Amy is the wife of Raymond D. York, of Portsmouth. His son, Albert Clinton, is a lieutenant in the United States Artillery stationed in Cuba. He has a son Guy, attending the Franklin School in Cincinnati, but who will enter Yale College in September, 1902.

Gen. William H. Enochs is a good example of what the ambitious American boy can make of himself. He was born in Noble County, Ohio, March 29, 1842. His parents were Henry and Jane Miller Enochs. They removed to Lawrence County when he was a child.

He had the advantage of a common school education and was attending the Ohio University at Athens when Fort Sumpter was fired on. He at once enlisted in Co. B, 22nd Ohio Volunteers for three months and was made a sergeant. Col. William F. Gilmore, of Chilli-cothe, was colonel of this regiment. Hon. Thaddeus A. Minshall, now Supreme Judge of Ohio, was its Sergeant-major. Judge Galtire, of Athens, was Captain of the company and W. H. H. Muntz, of Gallipolis, the banker, its First Sergeant. This regiment was mustered in April 27, 1861, and mustered out August 19, 1861. Young Enochs was afraid the war would be over before he could get in again, so he swam the Ohio River and enlisted in the 5th Virginia Infantry. At that time he did not believe that he could get into an Ohio Regiment, so he enlisted in Virginia. In October, he was elected Captain of his company, but owing to his youth, his Colonel refused to issue the commission and made him a First Lieutenant. He was recommended to be Major of the Regiment in 1862, but owing to his youth, was commissioned a Captain. As such, he was in the battles of Moorfield and McDowell, and of Cross Keys. He was in Cedar Mountain and the second Manassas, and at the latter had command of his regiment, although junior Captain. He was also in the battle of Chantilly. In 1863, the regiment was transferred to West Virginia. On August 17, 1863, Captain Enochs was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel. His regiment was in the Lynchburg Raid, which was a campaign of "marching, starving and fighting." In 1864, his regiment was in the battles of Bunker Hill, Carter's Farm and Winchester, Balltown and Berryville. At the battle of Winchester, September 19, 1864, Colonel Enochs was severely wounded by being struck on the head by a musket ball, and was supposed, at first, to have been killed instantly. At Fisher's Hill, September 22nd, 1864, he displayed great bravery in leading his regiment to the attack, and for this, was brevetted

Brigadier-General. His regiment and the Ninth Virginia were consolidated and made the 1st West Virginia Infantry. Near the close of the war, his regiment was sent to Cumberland, Maryland, where he was assigned to the command of the troops in that part of Maryland. In the fall and winter of 1865 and 1866, he studied law in Ironton and was admitted to the bar in April, 1866. He located at Ceredo, West Virginia. After remaining there a year or more he removed to Ironton. He at once acquired a large and lucrative practice. For a long time he was general counsel for the Scioto Valley Railroad Company.

In 1871 and 1872, he represented Lawrence County in the house of representatives of the Ohio Legislature. In 1875, he was married to Miss Annis Hamilton, of Ironton. They had one son, Berkley, who was educated at West Point and is now a First Lieutenant in the 25th U. S. Infantry, and is with his regiment in the Philippines. During the Spanish War, he served with his regiment in Cuba.

Gen. Enochs always had an ambition to represent his district in Congress. This desire was gratified when, in 1890, he was elected to Congress from the twelfth district, composed of Athens, Meigs, Gallia, Lawrence and Scioto. In 1892, he was re-elected to Congress from the tenth district composed of Adams, Pike, Scioto, Jackson, Lawrence and Gallia. On the morning of July 13, 1893, he was found dead in his bed from an attack of apoplexy. A most promising career was cut short. He was the idol of the people of the county and respected, honored and beloved by the people throughout his district.

In the spring of 1893, he was full of projects for the benefit of his district and particularly for the improvement of the Ohio River. Had he lived, he would doubtless have had as many terms in Congress as he desired and would likely have been governor of the state. He had the happy faculty of making all whom he met feel that he was their friend.

He had some subtle unknown charm, of which he was unconscious, but which made him friends everywhere and attached them to him by indissoluble bonds. His patriotism during the war was ardent, and never failed. It was just as strong in peace. All he achieved, all he accomplished in his brief career was his own. He had no rich or powerful family friends; he had no aid or assistance whatever and his friends were all made on his own merits. He was generous beyond all precedents, and any one deserving sympathy received the greatest measure from him. Once your friend, he was always such, and he made you feel he could not do too much for you. He believed in the brotherhood of man. His death at the time was a public calamity. He received a public congressional funeral and persons attended from all parts of the surrounding country. His funeral was the largest ever held in Ironton. He left the memory of a career of which every young American can feel proud and be glad that a countryman of his had so distinguished himself in the Civil War, at the bar and in the National Congress.

Lucien J. Fenton

was born on his father's farm near Winchester, May 7, 1844. The family was of English ancestry. Mr. Fenton's great-grandfather, Jeremiah Fenton, emigrated from Yorkshire, England, in the early part of the eighteenth century. He was a prominent and active patriot during the Revolutionary period. His son, also named Jeremiah Fenton, was born in Frederick County, Virginia, and died in Adams County, in 1841, at the age of seventy-seven years. Benjamin Fenton, the father of our subject, was born near Winchester, August 31, 1810, and died August 13, 1870. His wife, Elizabeth Smith, was born in Pennsylvania, December 19, 1813, and died at Winchester, Ohio, November 4th, 1892.

Mr. Fenton was a student at Winchester when the war broke out. On the eleventh of August, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, 91st Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was with his regiment until September 19, 1864. He was wounded at the battle of Opequan Creek, Virginia, the ball lodging in his shoulder. He was sent to the hospital at York, Pennsylvania, and was not discharged until May, 1865. He returned home in the fall and began a Normal course at the Lebanon school, where he remained for three terms. He taught school for several years. In 1869, he entered the Ohio University at Athens, and took a Latin-Scientific course, leaving that institution one year before he would have graduated, in order to accept the principalship of the Winchester schools, which position he held for two years. He then conducted the West Union schools for one year and the Manchester schools for five years, but he resigned in 1880, and was appointed clerk in the custom house at New Orleans. He was transferred, at his own request, from the Custom House at New Orleans to the treasury department in Washington, D. C., March 15, 1881, to the office of the supervising architect. He remained in government service until October 18, 1884, when he resigned and returned home. The Winchester Bank was organized at that time, and its original officers, were as follows: George Baird, president; J. W. Rothrock, vice president; and L. J. Fenton, cashier. Mr. Fenton is still cashier of the bank.

Mr. Fenton is a trustee of the Ohio University at Athens. In 1892, he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis. In 1894, he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress and in 1896, was re-elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress by over 10,000 plurality. He was a member of the house committee on military affairs during the Spanish-American war.

On May 22, 1872, he was married to Miss Sarah B. Manker. They have three children, Alberta F., Clifton L., who was a captain in the Spanish-American war and Mary E.

He served on the staff of the Ohio Department Commander of the G. A. R. in 1893, and on the staff of the National Commander of the G. A. R. in 1896.

As a soldier and patriot, Mr. Fenton has an honorable record. As a teacher, he won and held the high esteem of all the teachers of this County; as a banker and business man, he has shown a high degree of ability and has the confidence of the community; as a citizen he has the respect of all who know him. He is an excellent example of what the ambitious young American may attain.

Stephen Morgan

was born in Jackson County, Ohio, January 25, 1854, the eldest son of Thomas and Mary Morgan, both natives of Wales. His father settled at Pomeroy, Ohio, where he spent seven years as a coal miner. He then took up the mason's trade and helped to build several furnaces in Jackson County. He died August 18, 1894. Our subject spent his early years working on a farm. He attended the common schools of his neighborhood and prepared himself for the profession of teaching. After passing through the common schools, he attended the University at Worthington, Ohio, and the Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. He taught in the public schools of Jackson County for a number of years. He was principal of the Oak Hill Academy of Jackson County, for fifteen years and was school examiner of Jackson County for nine years. He was a candidate for State Senator of the 7th District in 1891 and lacked but one vote of nomination. He was a candidate for Congress in 1896. He was elected, as a Republican in 1898, to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the Tenth District, composed of the Counties of Adams, Scioto, Lawrence, Gallia, Pike and Jackson. He was re-elected to the Fifty-seventh Congress and received 26,224 votes to 17,369 for his opponent, James K. McClung, Democrat. He is re-nominated for his third term in Congress by his party and will be elected. He is a forcible interesting speaker. His discourse abounds in valuable thoughts. He is plain and simple in all his tastes, and has risen to the position he holds by sheer merit. The people of his district have confidence in him and he represents them to their satisfaction.

CHAPTER VI.

MILITARY HISTORY.

Revolutionary Soldiers who Resided in Scioto County, or who have Descendants Therein, or Whose Descendants are Interested in this Work Scioto County in the War of 1812—In the Mexican War—In the Civil War—Journal of the Civil War—Morgan's Raid—Biographies of Officers and Soldiers who Lost their Lives in the Service—Scioto County in the Spanish War of 1898—Four Young Patriots who Sacrificed their Lives.

Henry Aldred was a native of Germany. The name is sometimes spelled Aldridge. He enlisted as a private in Captain John Smith's Company, 4th Virginia regiment, commanded by Colonel Robert Lawson, Revolutionary War. He enlisted September 7, 1777, to serve three years. He was transferred about October, 1778, to Lieutenant Colonel Robert Ballard's Company, and about May, 1779, to Captain John Steed's Company, same regiment. His name last appears on the muster roll of the last mentioned company, dated December 9, 1779, without special remark as to his service. He was one of the first settlers on Brush Creek, Adams County, before the creation of Scioto County. He died in 1835, and is buried in the McCollm Cemetery on Brush Creek. He has numerous descendants living in Adams County and Mr. Harvey O. Lindsey, of Portsmouth, O., is also a descendant.

Amasiah Ainsworth, was a private in Colonel Wyman's Regiment, New Hampshire, 1776, a private in Colonel Bellow's Regiment in 1777, which went to re-inforce General Gates at Saratoga. He was the great-grandfather of Hon. Chandler J. Moulton, of Lucasville, Ohio.

Major Joseph Ashton was an officer in the Revolutionary War. His Revolutionary record from the archives of Pennsylvania is as follows:

Second Lieutenant, Second Regiment of Artillery, Colonel John Lamb; January 23, 1777, he was promoted to First Lieutenant and Adjutant; May 1, 1778, transferred to the Pennsylvania Artillery Regiment, Colonel Thomas Proctor, April 19, 1781, promoted to Captain-Lieutenant, January 1, 1783, he was pay master. His military services did not cease with the Revolutionary War. He was Sergeant in Captain Lamb's Company and a Lieutenant in the Fourth Continental Corps of Artillery. He was a Captain in the First Infantry, September 29, 1789. He was a Major in the Second Infantry, December 29, 1791, and resigned November 27, 1792. He was with Arnold on his march to Quebec and was taken prisoner. He also served in the Indian War in the Northwest Territory. He was in Harmar's and St. Clair's defeats. He died in 1816.

Joseph Ashton, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was his son; and his descendants known to the editor are Mrs. Pauline McKeown, her son Emmett and Mrs. William Walker of Portsmouth and E. Percy Ashton, of Detroit, Michigan. Other descendants of Major Joseph Ashton are Mrs. Mattie M. Gall, of Sinking Springs, Highland County, Ohio, (a granddaughter) her son, Joseph E. Gall, living on the West Side near Portsmouth, three daughters of Mrs. Gall, Mrs Tillie Swisshelm and Miss Bessie Gall, of No. 305 Gallia street, Portsmouth Ohio, and Mrs. Clara Frost, of Adams County, Ohio.

Uriah Barber enlisted April 1778 for three months as a private in Captain Champlin's Company, Col. Hosterman from Pennsylvania. He enlisted again in 1778, for eight months as a private in Captain Morrow's Company, Col. Hartley from Pennsylvania, again in 1779 for six months as a private in Captain (name not stated), Sol. Hunter, Pennsylvania regiment, again in 1779, he enlisted for six months in Captain Grove's Company, Col. Hunter of Pennsylvania. He was engaged in Indian skirmishes. At the time of his enlistment he resided at North Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. He applied for pension September 7, 1832, then a resident of Scioto County, Ohio, and was 71 years of age when he applied. His pension was granted. The Barbers of Portsmouth and vicinity are his descendants. His descendants interested in this book are William H. Briggs, Mrs. Wellington R. Kinney, Mrs. Ida McColm and Miss Emma Barber, of No. 309 Gallia street.

Rev. William Baldrige was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, February 26, 1761. His parents were natives of Ireland and the year after his birth removed to the banks of the Catawba river in North Carolina. In 1776, he joined a Cavalry company and served as a soldier during the Revolutionary War. After his return from the war, he prepared for college and attended Dickinson College in Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1790. He studied theology and became a minister in 1792. In the same year, he was married to Rebecca Agnew. On October 18, 1793, he became a minister to two churches in Rockbridge County, Virginia. In 1809, he became a minister of the Presbyterian Church in Adams County, and resided there until his death on October 26, 1830. The wife of the Hon. Joseph Riggs, of Portsmouth, Ohio, Rebecca Riggs was his daughter as was the late Mrs. John Waller, well known in Portsmouth.

John Barnes, of Virginia, was a private in a Virginia regiment, February, 1776; an Ensign of the 11th Virginia, December 13, 1776; Regimental Quartermaster from 1777 to 1779. He was Second Lieutenant March 7, 1777, and was transferred to the 7th Virginia September 14, 1778. He was First Lieutenant May 13, 1779, and retired February 12, 1781.

He was the ancestor of John R. T. Barnes, deceased, of T. N. Barnes, of Waverly, Ohio, and of Captain James Q. Barnes of Salem, Oregon.

Thaddeus Bennett was a private in Captain Wm. Blain's Company, Col. John Hathornes' Regiment of Orange County, N. Y., militia. He entered the service October 12, 1777, and served until November 5, 1777. His descendants are Col. Thaddeus Bennett formerly of Scioto County, Ohio, but later of Greenup County, Kentucky, and Col. Frank Bennett of Greenup County, Kentucky, and Henry Lantz, of Scioto, Ohio.

Jonathan Bliss, served in Col. Hale's regiment of New Hampshire Militia, Revolutionary War. His name appears on a receipt roll of that regiment, dated August 10, 1778, under the following heading: "We, the subscribers severally, have received of Jonathan Blanchard by order of the selectmen of Petersborough, in the State of New Hampshire, agreeable to the directions of the Honorable Mars Ware, Esq., President of the Committee of Safety for said State, Ten Pounds sterling, being so much advanced, for our going to Rhode Island to join Gen. Sullivan in the Defense of the American States."

He is an ancestor of Frank B. Enslow, of Huntington, W. Va.

John Briggs served in Captain James Ross' Company, 3rd Pennsylvania Battalion of Lancaster County Militia, Col. Thomas Porter, Revolutionary war. His name was on the rolls from December 12 to the 24, 1776. John Briggs also served in Captain Scull's Company, 4th Pennsylvania regiment commanded by Major Lamar, Revolutionary War. He was on the roll from March 1, to April 1, 1777. John Briggs was a Sergeant in Captain John Churties Company, Col. Thomas Craig. His name was on the roll December 10, 1778, showing his enlistment to have been for the war. This John Briggs is the ancestor of the Briggs family in Scioto County, descendants of Samuel C. Briggs, who will be found in the pioneer sketches herein.

John Brison or Bryson, (spelled both ways,) was 1st Lieutenant in the 7th Pennsylvania regiment, Revolutionary War. His name appears on the list of Pennsylvania officers appointed by council of safety pursuant to a resolution of Congress dated September 16, 1776. His commission was dated April 10, 1777. He was a prisoner of war on Long Island, August 15, 1778. It is noted he was taken at Palamos. He is an ancestor of Mrs. George N. Biggs, of Huntington, West Virginia.

Asa Boynton, of Rowley, Essex Company, was a private in Capt. Richard Peabody's Company, Col. Edward Wrigglesworth's regiment, pay abstract for travel allowance from Ticonderoga home in 1776. He is an ancestor of A. W. Boynton of the French Grant, who located there in 1810.

Benjamin Burt who was buried at the east end of the bridge over the Little Scioto, was a Revolutionary Soldier. He enlisted May, 1777, and served nearly three years as an artificer under Colonel Baldwin, Captain Peter Mills in the Massachusetts Artillery. He enlisted again in May, 1810, and served nearly two years as an artificer in Captain Thomas Patton's company, Col. Lamb, 2nd New York Artillery. He was discharged in 1782 at West Point, N. Y. He was at Yorktown at the surrender of Cornwallis. When he enlisted he was a resident of Sussex County, N. J. He applied for a pension Nov. 17, 1824, then a resident of Scioto County, Ohio. He was then at the age of 63 years. He died at Wheelersburg, Ohio, March 1, 1849. His surviving children at that time were Benjamin, Samuel B. and Munsell Burt and Mehitabel Bonser. He is the ancestor of Benjamin Burt, of Portsmouth, Ohio, and of Dr. George M. Marshall, of Ashland, Kentucky.

Lawrence Byrn enlisted in 1776, a private in Captain Alexander Graydon's Company, Third Regiment of Pennsylvania troops and served until 1777. He enlisted again in that year as a private of Colonel John Shay's Regiment. He was in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, Jamestown and Yorktown. He was captured at Fort Mifflin, November 16, 1776. He received a wound in a fight with the Indians near Savannah. He resided at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania at the time of enlistment. He secured a Revolutionary pension. He made his application May 27, 1819, aged sixty-three years. His claim was allowed. His residence was in Clermont County, Ohio. He married Elizabeth Baker about 1788 at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died in Clermont County, Ohio, July 15, 1832. He is the ancestor of Mr C. C. Brown, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

John Clark, 1st Lieutenant of the 2nd Battalion of Miles' Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment, March 15, 1776; appointed aide-de-camp to General Greene, January 14, 1777; Captain of the Pennsylvania State Regiment, February 20, 1777; Regiment was designated the 13th Pennsylvania, November 12, 1777; transferred to 8th Pennsylvania, July 1st, 1778; transferred to 1st Pennsylvania, January 17, 1781; transferred to 3rd Pennsylvania, January 1st, 1783, and served until June 3, 1783. He died December 27, 1783. He is an ancestor of Mrs. Laura Jane Bentley Lloyd, wife of Charles Perry Lloyd, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

John Michael Clingman was born in October, 1734. He was a Captain in a Pennsylvania Company in 1778 and it is said he served during the remainder of the war. Nothing further is known of his service. He died in Ohio, January 26, 1716, and is buried in the Kinney Cemetery on the Aaron Kinney homestead. He was the father of Mary Clingman, wife of Aaron Kinney and ancestor of the well known Kinney family of Portsmouth.

Jeremiah Clough, of Canterbury, N. H., was Captain in the Second New Hampshire Regiment, Col. Enoch Poor, from May 24th, 1775 to December, 1775. He was Captain in the 8th Continental Infantry from January 1, 1776, to December 1, 1776. He is an ancestor of Mrs. Suttie Williams and the late Jacob Clough of Portsmouth.

Samuel Cross, a Revolutionary Soldier, enlisted July 1, 1776, for six months as a private in Captain Wm. Huston's Company, Colonel not stated, from the State of Pennsylvania. He enlisted again August 1, 1777, for two months as a private in Captain Rogers Company, Colonel not stated, from Pennsylvania. He enlisted a third time June 1, 1779, as a private, time of service not stated in Captain Johnstone's Company, Colonel not stated, from Pennsylvania. He was engaged in the battle of Brandywine and Germantown. He enlisted as a soldier from Franklin County, Pennsylvania. He made application for pension when he was 77 years old. His pension was allowed. He has descendants in both Adams and Scioto County.

Ephriam Cole, father of James M., Leonard, and Allaniah Cole, and grandfather of George D., Alfred E., and Allaniah B. Cole, was born in Maryland. He enlisted November 16, 1777, in Captain Jonathan Drown's Company, Col. Wm. Lee's regiment of Maryland troops, for three years. During his service he undertook to act as a spy, and got inside the British lines. He accomplished his errand and was leaving, when he was arrested. He managed to create doubt in the minds of his captors as to his real character, and showed up his masonry. There being Free Masons among his captors, he was given the benefit of the doubt, and he was released and sent out of the lines. So we are spared a Captain Nathan Hale's story, which, but for his Masonry, Ephriam Cole's would have been. He was buried in the Colling's Cemetery, south of West Union. He is the ancestor of the late James Madison Cole and the late Allaniah Cole of Scioto County, Mrs. Val Simmons and the late Mrs. John H. Simmons were his granddaughters. Hon. Henry Collings of Manchester, is a great grandson.

James Collings, was a private in Captain John Lynch's Company, 5th Maryland regiment, commanded by Col. Richardson. He served from January 18, 1777, until August 16, 1780. He removed to Adams County in 1794, died in 1802, and is buried in the Colling's Cemetery, east of West Union. He is the grandfather of Hon. Henry Collings of Manchester, Ohio.

Joseph Conklin made a declaration to be placed on the Pension List, under the act of Congress, March 18, 1818. He enlisted in October, 1775, in a company commanded by Captain William Shute, Colonel Maxwell, Lieutenant Colonel Shreve, and Major Ray, State of New Jersey. He afterwards enlisted in the 14th Massachusetts. He was in the battle of Three Rivers, Lower Canada, June 8, 1776. The regiment retreated from there to Crown Point and Saratoga. He was discharged at Albany, New York. The following statements are taken from his declaration for pension. In pursuance of the act of May 1, 1820, he swears he was a resident of the United States, March 1, 1818. That he has not disposed of his property, etc. He has sixty acres of land, worth about $2.00, two old horses worth $10.00 each, three head of cattle, $20.00, four sheep worth $14.00, farming utensils, $10.00, household furniture, $26.00, total $209.00. His family, himself aged seventy-seven years, a wife aged seventy years are all infirm and unable to labor. Sworn March 11, 1830.

Manasseh Cutler, Chaplain in the 11th Massachusetts, 1st of January, 1777, to June, 1779. Died the 28th of July, 1823. He is the ancestor of Margaret Cutler Fulton, M. D., and Edith Holman Fulton. His life, journals and correspondence were published in 1888, by Robert Clarke & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, in two volumes, edited by the late Hon. Wm. Parker Cutler and Julia Parker. He was one of the most distinguished men of his time or any other time, and retained the right to be styled the founder of the States created from the Northwest Territory.

Daniel Deming, appears on a list of names of members of Colonel Robert Van Rensselaer's Regiment of New York Militia. He served one month from January 1, 1778, in a Company from Massachusetts, from May, 1779 for four months in Capt. Noble's Company, Col. Vrooman, from New York. From October, 1779 for three months in Capt. Cady's Company, Col. Waterman from New York. In June, 1780, he served three weeks in Capt. Gilbert's Company, colonel not stated from New York. At his first enlistment he resided at Sandisfield, Mass., at his second at New Lebanon, New York. He applied for a pension October 21, 1832, at which time he resided at Stockton, N.Y. He was born March 28, 1762, at Worthington, Conn. He was granted a pension. He is a grandfather of George W. Rhodes, and Mrs. James A. Maxwell, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

Ebenezer Dean, was a private in the 7th Massachusetts Regiment commanded by Col. Ichabod Allen, Revolutionary War. He enlisted February 8, 1777, to serve three years and was killed in battle Oct. 7, 1777. He was of the same family of the Deans who formerly resided in the vicinity of Wheelersburg.

There was another Ebenezer Dean, who was a Lieutenant Colonel in William Heath's regiment, at Cambridge, Mass., in 1775. He was also in the 36th Continental Regiment of foot, commanded by Joel John Groaton.

The first named Ebenezer Dean, was an ancestor of Judge Frank Powers of Grayson, Ky., and of Frank B. Enslow, of Huntington, W. Va.

Jacob Drake, Member of Committee of Observation, Morris County, New Jersey, January 23, 1775; Delegate for said County to raise men, money and arms for the common defense, May 1, 1775; Deputy in the Provincial Congress of New Jersey, held at New Brunswick, January 31, 1776; Deputy in the Convention of New Jersey, begun at Burlington, June 10, 1776; Colonel "Western Battalion," New Jersey Militia, 1776; Member State Council of Safety, 1778. Richard Douglas, served as Second Lieutenant, First Lieutenant, Captain-Lieutenant and Captain of a Company of the First Connecticut Regiment. He was commissioned Second Lieutenant, January 1, 1777; First Lieutenant, July 1, 1780; Captain, August 22, 1780. He was transferred as follows:—January, 1781, to the Fifth Connecticut Regiment, and in May or June, 1783, to the Fifth Company of Col. Swift's Connecticut Regiment. He was the great-grandfather of Hon. Albert Douglas and Judge J. C. Douglas, of Chillicothe, Ohio.

Edward Evans was a private in Capt. Samuel Dawson's company, 11th Pennsylvania Regiment, commanded by Colonel Richard Humpton. He was in the Battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, Paoli, September 20, 1777, and Germantown, October 4, 1777. He was near the battle of Monmouth on that memorable hot Sunday, June 28, 1778. He was on the sick list, but wanted to go into the fight. His Captain refused him permission, and detailed him as a guard to the wagon train. He was one of a detail of twelve who threw the debris off the bridge under the British musketry fire and the Continentals immediately charged over it. After the Revolutionary War he located in Brown County, Ohio, where he died November 3, 1843, and was buried in the public cemetery at Russellville, Brown County, O. He was the great-grandfather of the Editor of this work.

Hugh Evans, served as a private in Captain Nathaniel Vansandt's Company, 5th Pennsylvania Battalion, Continental forces, commanded by Colonel Robert Magan. He enlisted January 26, 1776, and served two months and 6 days. He was a school teacher and taught school in Chester County, Pennsylvania and while there "Mad Anthony Wayne," who was twelve years of age, was one of his pupils and was the worst boy in school for pranks and mischief. Hugh Evans was the great-great-grandfather of the Editor of this work.

John Elmore was a Corporal in Captain Charles West's Company, 3rd Virginia Regiment, commanded by Col. Thomas Marshall, the father of the Chief Justice Marshall. He enlisted Dec. 1, 1776, to serve three years, was promoted to Sergeant in December, 1777, and his name appears on the role for November, 1779.

There was another John Elmore who enlisted in the Revolutionary War in 1776, for two years service, as a private in Charles West's Company and in Col. Weedon's Regiment, from the State of Virginia. He engaged in the battles at Harden, Brandywine, Germantown, Trenton and Monmouth. At the time of his enlistment, he resided in Loudon Co., Virginia. He made an application for pension Sept. 4, 1818 and his pension was allowed. He is an ancestor of Captain Mahlon Urton of Adams County, also of the Elmores who formerly resided on the west side of the Scioto near Dry Run.

Major Joseph L. Finley, was born February 20, 1753, near Greensburg, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. He was a graduate of Princeton College in the class of 1775. He entered the Revolutionary War on the first day of April, 1776, as a Second Lieutenant in Captain Moorehead's Company, of Miles' Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment, organized under a resolution of Congress on July 15, 1776. He was made Captain on the twentieth day of October, 1777, and his regiment was designated as the 13th Pennsylvania. He was transferred to the 8th Pennsylvania, July 1, 1778, and was made a Major July 20, 1780. He served until November, 1783, more than two years after the surrender of Cornwallis, and he was seven years and seven months in service in defense of his country. He was in the battle of Long Island on the twenty-seventh of August, 1776, and that of White Plains, the September following. He was at the battle of Brandywine in September, 1777; at Germantown, in October of the same year, and he was in the battle of Monmouth on that memorable hot Sunday, June 28, 1778. After that, he was sent with Gen. Broadhead to the western part of Pennsylvania in his expedition against the Indians. He subsequently saw much hard fighting. He lost his eye in the service and was otherwise much disabled.

He emigrated to Adams County in 1815 and settled, first on Gift Ridge, and afterwards moved to the foot of the hill west of West Union, and died there. His wife was a daughter of Rev. Samuel Blair, a noted Presbyterian minister in the early part of the history of that church in this country. She was a woman of much beauty of person and nobility of character, and their daughters were likewise well educated and handsome. She was an aunt of Francis P.

Blair, the famous editor of the Globe, of Washington, D. C. She was a sprightly woman, full of energy, and while small was considered very handsome. She had the blackest of black eyes; she wrote poetry for the newspapers, and wrote several touching tributes to the memory of deceased friends. She has been particularly described to me and if I were to choose one of her descendants who resembled her as a young woman, I would choose Mrs. Dudley B. Hutchins, of Portsmouth, Ohio, her great-granddaughter. Major Finley and his wife were both members of the Presbyterian Church of West Union. He was a man of small stature, and in his old age his hair was silvery white. When he and his wife attended church at West Union, during the sermon he always sat on the pulpit steps, as he was somewhat deaf.

He had three daughters and two sons. His daughter, Hannah Finley, was the second wife of Col. John Lodwick, and the mother of a numerous family. Among her sons were Captain John P. Joseph, Pressley and Lyle Lodwick, and among her daughters were Mrs. Nancy McCabe, Mrs. Eli Kinney and Mrs. J. Scott Peebles. She died in 1827, twelve years before her father. He is an ancestor of Mrs. Dudley B. Hutchins, Mrs. Jennie Corson of Portsmouth and Mr. C. Ross Lodwick, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Adam Fisher, enlisted near Hagarstown, Maryland, and fought in the Revolutionary War, eighteen months, about 1775, 1776 or 1777. He was the ancestor of C. C. Brown of Portsmouth, Ohio.

Job Foster, was residing, November, 1819, in Scioto County, Ohio, at which date he applied for pension. His age was stated in July, 1824, as sixty-four years; in May, 1827, as seventy-one years; and in September, 1832, as seventy-six years, then living in Scioto County. About the 1st of October, 1780, he enlisted for eighteen months under Captain Simeon Morgan in the 9th Virginia Regiment, commanded by Col. Richard Campbell. The regiment assembled and passed the winter at Winchester, Frederick County, Va. In March, 1781, it proceeded to Fredericksburg, Spottylvania County, Va.; thence to Petersburg, Chesterfield, C. H. and to Guilford, Guilford County, N. C. He joined the army commanded by General Greene, two days after the battle, (March 15th, 1781,) and was in pursuit of the enemy under Lord Cornwallis as far as Deep River, from thence going to Camden, S. C. at which place he was in the battle (April 15, 1781) and was driven back twelve miles. The British, however, evacuated Camden (May 10th, 1781) and he was ordered to the high hills of the Santee in South Carolina, where he remained three months; then he went to Fort Thompson for a short time, from thence going to the Fort "96" in South Carolina, where he became engaged in a number of skirmishes and was discharged at Salisbury, North Carolina in January, 1782. He is an ancestor of Mrs. Agnes Roe, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

Nathaniel Foster enlisted July or August, 1776 for one month as a private in Captain Ten Brook's Company, Colonel not stated, from New Jersey. In 1777 he enlisted for two months as a private in Captain Duloan's Company, Colonel Moore from Pennsylvania. April, 1781, he enlisted for two months in Captain Thomas Anderson's Company, Colonel not stated, from Virginia. The same year he served two months in Captain McCarly's Company, Col. not stated, from Virginia. The same year he served two months in Captain Isaac Parson's Company, Col. not stated, from Virginia. He was not in any battles. He resided at his enlistment, in Hudson County, New Jersey, Bucks County, Pennsylvania and Hampshire County, Virginia. He applied for a pension Oct. 25, 1832, while a resident of Adams County, at 72 years of age. He was born in Morris County, New Jersey, Feb. 9, 1760, removed to Bucks County, Pennsylvania in 1776 and to Hampshire County, Virginia in 1780. He is an ancestor of Dr. Ezekiel M. Foster, of Portsmouth, who has a sketch herein.

Martin Funk enlisted June, 1776, for two months as a private in Captain Williams' Company, Colonel not stated, Pennsylvania regiment. He enlisted September 1776, as a private for two months in Captain Alexander Barr's Company, Pennsylvania Regiment, Colonel not stated. In December, 1776, he enlisted as a private for four months in Captain John Pomeroy's Company, Colonel Loughry, Pennsylvania Regiment. In September, 1777, he enlisted for one year as a private in Captain John Hopkins' Company, Pennsylvania Regiment, Colonel not stated. Battles engaged in, skirmishes with the Indians near Pittsburg, Pa. Residence at enlistment, Westmoreland County, Pa. He received a pension. He was the ancestor of Mrs. Frank Hills (nee Mary Timmonds) of Mt.

Vermon, New York, of Eugene Melvin Flock and Decey William Dever Micklethwait of Portsmouth, Ohio.

Charles Gildin was born in Maine May 19, 1744, and died in New Hampshire August 1, 1801. He was a sergeant in Captain Jeremiah Gildin's Company, the Green's Platoon's regiment. He enlisted July 17, 1775, and served two months and eleven days. His wife was Abner Mink and they had a daughter, Mary, who married Jonathan Smith. They had a son, Joseph Smith. He married Charlotte Maria Harg and their children were Joseph Warren, Mrs. Mary H. Bannon and Mrs. Josephine Murfin, widow of James O. Murfin.

Samuel Gould, was in the Lexington Alarm Battalion of Captain Reuben Butterfield's Company, Col. David Brown's Middlesex Regiment, which marched on the alarm of April 19th, 1775, from Concord to Cambridge. He served seven days. He appears with grade of private in Captain Zachariah Wright's Company, Col. Brook's Regiment dated "Camp at White Plains," October 31, 1776, residence Dunstable, reported as having lost articles in battle. He is an ancestor of the late Orin B. Gould of Scioto County.

Thomas Grosvenor enlisted May 4, 1775, and Lieutenant and Connecticut, wounded at Bunker Hill, June 17, 1775. Captain with Continental Infantry, January 1, 1776. Major and Connecticut, January 7, 1777. Lieutenant-Colonel, March 16, 1778, transferred to 1st Connecticut, January 1, 1780. Lieutenant-Colonel Connecticut, May 19, 1882, period 1st of January, 1780. Mrs. Lucius Grosvenor, nee, wife of Phelps Chapman, 1st of Portsmouth, is a descendant of this soldier.

Samuel Goddard served as a Sergeant in a Light Infantry Company in Colonel Henry Jackson's Regiment from May 21, 1777, to May 21, 1780, from the town of Berlin, Captain Gideon Brown's Company. He also was in Lieutenant Thomas Turner's Company and Captain William Sears' Company of the same regiment. It is recorded that he is charged his arms as a private soldier and had not been absent without permission. He was promoted to Sergeant, July 19, 1777. His age is given as 29 years on July 8, 1778, stating I feel a much complexion light. He had a son, Samuel Goddard, Junior, who was born in Sutton, Massachusetts, about 1774 and died at Norwich, Vermont, in 1844. Isaac Smith was born near the village of Redstone, Pennsylvania, in the year 1751. This village was built about the year 1761, on the Monongahela river, at the mouth of Redstone Creek. It consisted of a few blacksmiths and a tannery, and was built to protect the settlers against the Indians. "Old Red stone" was built an important place in those days, when settlements were few and far between. It was then in Westmoreland County. The county was afterwards divided, and the village, now called Brownsville, is now in Fayette County. In the summer of 1776, Captain Smith enlisted in Shawmut County, Virginia, for a term of six or seven months in the Patriot army, in a regiment commanded by Colonel Buford. During the following winter, the regiment lay at Petersburg, Virginia, and in the spring of 1780, before his term had expired, he reenlisted for "during the war." He served in Colonel Buford's Regiment until his defeat at the battle of Hanging Rock, South Carolina, August 9, 1780. He was also in the battle of Camden, S. C., August 16, 1780. He then returned to Petersburg and was placed in Captain Timpson's Company, of Colonel Hawes' Regiment. From this regiment he was transferred to Major Lee's Corps of Light Infantry, commonly called Lee's Legion, and was in Captain Rudolph's Company. He was with the Legion at the battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C., in 1789, and continued in this branch of the service until the end of the war. He served in all about five years in the Continental army and was not disabled. When the Legion was disbanded at Georgetown, South Carolina, he was sick with measles. As soon as he was able to travel, however, about four weeks later, he returned to his home in Pennsylvania. Soon after the war he married Margaret Weaver. Six sons and three daughters were born to them, of whom James, the eldest, was born in the year 1786. They lived in Pennsylvania until probably about the year 1804, when they moved to Greenup County, Kentucky, going down the Ohio river in flatboats. In October, 1804, Gadsden Smith, "being a resident of Greenup County, Kentucky," applied for a Revolutionary soldier's pension, and the following year he was granted a pension of eight dollars per month, beginning October 27, 1813, and continuing to his death. He was then 55 years of age. He drew his pension while a resident of Scioto County.

Nathan Wheeler was born at Royalstown, New Hampshire, in 1751. He was reared a farmer. In April, 1775, he entered the first Massachusetts Infantry as a private and served eight months. He was then made a sergeant.

After eighteen month's service, he re-enlisted for three years. In May, 1799 he was made Ensign. He participated in the Battles of Bunker Hill, Trenton, Princeton and Woodbridge. He served five years continuously and was discharged at Tappan, New York, September, 1780. After that he located at Bethlehem, New York, and while there applied for a pension and obtained the same. His application for pension was made at Grafton, New York on the 16th of August, 1819, before Ezra Bartlett, Justice of the Peace. He says that he enlisted April, 1775, for eight months in Captain Abel Wilder's Co. Colonel Dolittle's regiment and served that time. Immediately after the expiration of his time, and before he returned home, he enlisted again in the Revolutionary army as a Sergeant in Captain Gleason's Company, in Col. John Dixon's Regiment, 6th Massachusetts, which time he faithfully served. Immediately on the expiration of his time, he enlisted as a Quartermaster Sergeant for three years in Colonel John Nixon's regiment, which regiment for three years he served faithfully, and from January 1780, a period before his first three years expired he continued to serve and do duty until the 5th day of October 1780, when he was discharged at Tappan, New York. He further says that during the last three years' service, he was appointed and received an Ensign's commission in November, 1779, but it bore date six months previous to that date; that he did the duty of Ensign for eighteen months or more previous to October 1780, when he was discharged. He says that in the first six months service he was in the battle of Bunker Hill and that in the other service he was in the battles of Trenton, Princeton and Woodbridge. He states that he was in indigent circumstances and needed the assistance of his country for support. It appears that he was transferred from New Hampshire to Ohio on the 20th of March, 1822. He only lived in Scioto County until the 15th day of July, 1823. The place of his burial is not known. His children were Nathan Wheeler, Jr., Levi, Luther and Elmira Chaffin.

Among his descendants in Scioto County are: Mrs. William H. McCurdy, Sr., of Wheelersburg; Mrs. Lillian C. Finney, wife of Prof. J. H. Finney, of Portsmouth, Ohio; Mrs. Nettie Davis of Sciotoville and Mrs. Ida Friel, wife of G. Frank Friel of Ashland, Kentucky; and George Wheeler of American P. O., Wheeler's Mills, Ohio.

Amos Wheeler enlisted January, 1776, for one year as a musician under Captain Winship, Col. John Nixon, from Massachusetts. January, 1777, he enlisted for three years as a musician under Captain Adam Wheeler, Col. Thomas Nixon, from Massachusetts. In January 1780 he enlisted for nine months as a musician under Captain Chambers, Col. Thomas Nixon from Massachusetts. He was engaged in the battle of Saratoga, and applied for a pension July 17, 1818, from Scioto County, Ohio. He enlisted at Acton, Mass. He was 59 years of age, when he applied for a pension. His claim was allowed. He married Elizabeth Snow, November 11, 1788 at Bath New Hampshire, and died March 4, 1827. She was pensioned as his widow.

Henry Williamson enlisted on September 2, 1775, for eighteen months. He was a private in Captain Polhemus' Company, Col. Winds' Regiment from New Jersey. He was engaged in the battles of Three Rivers, Germantown, Morristown, Trenton and Princeton. He was a resident of Scioto County. On July 15, 1818, he made an application for pension under the law of 1818. His age at that date was 67 years. His pension was allowed. He died in Jasper County, Illinois, May 4, 1832, and Anna his widow was pensioned.

James Williams was born on the twenty-second day of February, 1759, in Chester County, Pennsylvania. At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war he resided in Washington County, Maryland. In the fall of 1777 he enlisted in Captain Jacob Louder's company of the state of Maryland, for a term of four months. The colonel of this regiment is not stated. In the term of 1778 he removed to Washington County, Pennsylvania, and in October, 1780, he enlisted as a private for two months in Captain Eleazer Williamson's Company; Col. David Williamson, from Pennsylvania. He enlisted a third time May, 1781, for four months as a private in Captain Timothy Downing's company; Col. William Crawford, state of Pennsylvania. He was with Crawford against the Indians on the Sandusky River. This is the same Col. Crawford who was burned by the Indians at the stake, June, 1782. He lived in Washington County, Pennsylvania, for three years, when he removed to Ohio County, West Virginia, and resided there until 1793, when he removed to Adams County, Ohio. He applied for pension on the twenty-fifth of October, 1832, and it was granted the following year.

William Williamson was born September 23, 1762, near Greenville, North Carolina. He enlisted in the army and served under General Gates in the hard campaign in the summer of 1780. He was forced to undergo long marches in the great heat and was often half starved. After the war was over, he studied for the ministry and moved to Ohio in 1805, and located in Adams County, where he died November 29, 1839, aged 77 years. He is buried in the old cemetery near the Presbyterian church in Manchester, Ohio. He is the grandfather of Mrs. Hugh Means of Ashland, Kentucky, and of Mrs. Ironton Kelley, of Ironton, Ohio, and of Mrs. Margaret Bedwell of No. 1234 Bryden Road, Columbus, Ohio.

Richard Woodworth served in Captain Wm. Gray's Company, 4th Pennsylvania Regiment for the month of March, 1777, as shown by a roll dated at Morristown, April 20, 1777, which also shows that he received 2 pounds 10 shillings. His name appears on the same roll, dated at Pine Town, March 25, cash at Princetown, 1 pound, 17 shillings, 6 pence, cash by Lient. Gray, 2 pounds 10 shillings, total 6 pounds, 17 shillings and 6 pence. His name appears in a book with the rank of Corporal, compiled from the rolls of the same regiment under the head of "State of Pennsylvania against the United States for depreciation in pay of the army" which book bears sum charged, 86 pounds, 15 shillings, 9 pence, February 13, 1777. This information as to Richard Woodworth was obtained from Gen. Ainsworth. The following additional information appears from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Richard Woodworth enlisted February, 1777, and served four years as a private in Captain William Gray's Company, Col. William Butler from the state of Pennsylvania. He was in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown and Monmouth. He applied for pension May 9, 1818, then residing in Adams County, Ohio, and was then 63 years of age. His claim was allowed. He was born in Ireland in 1758. He married in Adams County in 1802, Sarah Ann Robinson. His children were: Laban, Mary, wife of J. N. Timmonds; Wheeler; Nellie, wife of William Gilges; William, James, Richard, Sarah, wife of Samuel Shaw; Rebecca, wife of John Sparks. He has a grandson, George Sparks, at Rome, two granddaughters at Little, Ky., Mrs. Harriet A. Little and Mrs. H. C. McCoy, and others in Kansas and Illinois. He died in 1841 or 1842 and is buried on Blue Creek.

Andrew Yingling was a private in Captain Gameline's Company, Col. Moses Hazens Regiment, Continental Troops. He enlisted October 14, 1782, but the date of his discharge from the service is not shown. This regiment was known as "Hazen's Regiment of Canadians," "The Independent Canadian Regiment" and as "Congress's own Regiment." It was composed of men from Pennsylvania, New York and the New England States. Mr. Yingling was a resident of Pennsylvania, and came to Ohio and settled just below Hanging Rock in 1798. He is the grandfather of James H. Yingling of the French Grant.

Jesse Young was born January 14, 1751 and died September 2, 1804. He was in Col. Timothy Bedel's Company of rangers from the colony of New Hampshire. He enlisted June 19, 1775. In the expedition against Canada in 1777 and 1778 he was a Lieutenant. He entered this service December 15, 1777 in Captain Wm. Tarlton's Company, Col. Timothy Bedel. The regiment was raised by resolution of Congress. As a war commissioned officer, he served five months and two days. He was discharged as Lieutenant March 31, 1778. He served in Captain Luther Richardson's Company, Col. Timothy Bedel, from April 4, 1778, for eleven months and 27 days. He had a daughter Mary who married John Hurd and a daughter Charlotte Maria, who married Joseph Mills Glidden Smith. Mrs. Mary H. Bannon, wife of Hon. James W. Bannon, Mrs. Josephine Murfin of Ann Arbor, Michigan. Joseph Warren Smith of Los Angeles, Cal., and Gen. Jacob H. Smith of the Regular Army are descendants of this soldier.

George Yost served for three years in Lieutenant William Beatty's Company, the 7th Maryland regiment, commanded by Colonel John Gunby, in the Revolutionary War. He is the great great-grandfather of Mrs. Frank L. Brown of Youngstown, Ohio, J. Huston Varner and Mrs. Anna Varner Sanford of Cincinnati, Ohio, on the Varner side.

As to Revolutionary pensions. The act of September 29, 1789, gave to the wounded and disabled soldiers the pensions granted by the several states, for a period of one year.

On July 16, 1790, Congress provided that the pensions paid by the states to wounded and disabled soldiers should be paid by the United States for one year.

The act of March 23, 1792, required the soldiers to go before a court and produce a certificate from an officer of the regiment or company in which he served, that he was disabled, or he had to produce two witnesses to that effect. Also he had to have the evidence of two free holders of his vicinity as to his mode of life and employment and means of support of the twelve months preceding. The court was required to examine and report his disability to the preceding. The court was required to examine and report his disability to the secretary of the war.

The act of February 28, 1793, required two surgeons to examine and report the disability. The judge of the court was required to make a recommendation in each case.

The act of March 3, 1803, gave pensions to officers, soldiers, and sailors, disabled by wounds, and also to those who did not desert the service. The district judge took the evidence and forwarded it. The act was enlarged March 3, 1805. April 10, 1806, another act was passed for those wounded in the service. The procedure was the same as under the former acts, but expired in six years. The pension was $5.00 per month to a private and half pay to an officer.

The act of March 18, 1818, gave to every officer and soldier who served nine months or longer and who was in need of assistance from his county, $8.00 per month for a private and $20.00 for an officer for life. So many claims were made under this act that on May 1, 1820, Congress passed "the Alarm Act" (a standing disgrace to our country), by which each person receiving a pension under its provisions was required to go before a court and take an oath as to his estate and income, and that he had not given away his property to bring himself within the act of 1818, and the pension was to be dropped, if this was not done. After the pensioner forwarded his evidence, the Secretary of War was required to revise the lists and drop all he did not deem indigent. This did not apply to any who had been wounded.

The act of June 7, 1832, granted pensions to all the officers and soldiers who had served for one or more terms, a period of two years, whether in the continental line or militia. In the list herein given all whose pension certificates were dated prior to June 7, 1832, were pensioned under the act of March 18, 1818, and those who were placed on the pension roll at a date subsequent to June 7, 1832, received pensions under the law of that date.

The celebrations of Independence Day for the first twenty-five years after the Revolutionary war were solemn and imposing affairs. At these the survivors of the Revolutionary war were honored by important places in the parades, processions, and in the seats at the public dinners.

Whenever it was practicable, the soldiers of the Revolution were buried with military honors conducted by the nearest militia organization. The last surviving Revolutionary soldier of Scioto County passed away November 2, 1856. The last surviving in the whole country died in 1869.

The generations which knew them hardly appreciated their service. Now that the last of them has been dead for forty-six years, and that we begin to understand the greatness of our country, we appreciate their services. It is to be hoped that the people of Scioto County will see that the grave of every one of them is properly marked, preserved, and honored, once a year, on Memorial Day, so long as our Republic shall continue.

There were no newspapers published in Scioto County during the war and no public record of any matters connected. At that time the total population of the County was only about 3,500. The city of Portsmouth was only a locality, having no legal existence until March 1, 1815, after the war was over. The total population of Wayne Township, at the outbreak of the war, was about but 400. The men of military age in the County were not, all told, over 649; so Scioto County did not figure much in the war. Of the general call for the militia no record whatever has been preserved. The men rendezvoused at Martin Funk's home in the latter part of July, 1813, and went to Sandusky and returned. There was a general call in August, 1812, the year before but no record has been preserved. All that has been preserved as to the war of 1812, is the muster roll of Captain David Roop's Company of 42 persons who were in the service from May 1, 1812, until May 7, 1813. The Company went to Detroit, but does not appear to have been in any battles. It was in Hall's Surrender, August 15, 1812 and was paroled. It was in some skirmishes with the Indians but no one was killed. There were seven Noels in the Company. Daniel Noel was Fourth Sergeant of the Company. He survived until 1852, when he died and was buried in Greenlawn. His wife put up a monument to him which reads, "My husband Daniel Noel," and has a marble coffin figured on top of it. She survived until December 13, 1893 and died in her ninety-sixth year. She drew a pension under the act of March, 1878, as his widow until her death.

John Noel was a fifer in this Company. Jacob P. Noel, the best of the Noels, was in this Company.

The roll of the Company is given on page 218.

In August, 1813, General William Kendall was Captain of a Troop of Horse which entered the service July 28, 1813, and served until August 28, 1813. Each man was paid 40 cents per day for his horse and most of them were paid for more than one month and one day. Some never paid for 17, 22, 25, 29 and 30 days respectively. Of those whose names are found on the roll, William Kendall, William Jones, the first school teacher, Nathan Glover, Samuel G. Jones, John Brown, Elijah Glover, David Gharky, and Benjamin Feurt, have sketches herein. James Munn of this Company, was the Revolutionary soldier, Henry Sheely and Uriah White are well known to the columns of this work. The pay per month of the Company was Captain, $50.00; Lieutenants, $33.33; Cornets, $26.66; Sergeants, $10.00; Corporals, $10.00; Musicians, $2.00; Farrier, $10.00; Privates, $8.00.

THE MEXICAN WAR.

In the times of the Whig party, Scioto County was Whig, and did not take much interest in the Mexican War. Edward Hamilton, a popular young lawyer and a Whig, undertook to raise a Company for the Mexican War, and did so. He raised Company D of the First Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Alexander W. Mitchell was Colonel, John B. Weller was Lieutenant Colonel, and Thomas L. Hamer, Major, succeeded by Luther Giddings. The Company was mustered in, June 1, 1846, to serve one year. Edward Hamilton was Captain, John K. Kidd was First Lieutenant, and John W. Maben Second Lieutenant. Charles Boyle and Cassander Hall were also Second Lieutenants. The men were mostly recruited from the furnaces and their names would now sound strange to the people of Scioto County. The Company was in two battles, Monterey, Mexico, September 21, 1846, and Cerralvo, Mexico, March 7, 1847. The regiment had 24 killed, 42 died of disease, total loss 66. Of Company D, Timothy Boyle was killed, September 6, 1846, in battle, James Davids was killed November 25, 1846, by accidental discharge of a gun. John W. Hewlett was killed September 21, 1846, at the battle of Monterey. William H. H. Canley, John Estes, Alexander McHenry, William E. Stephens, Robert Walters and Hiram Wilson, died in the service. Andrew J. Canley, Alfred Donaghue, Daniel Estes, Thomas Fought, David Fuller, Martin Hickie, Edward Reed, Henry Rice, Lawrence Rowley, John H. Slater, George D. Smith, Griffin Soward, Burrill Stephens, Thomas W. Sullivan and George W. Wooten were discharged for disability during the year for which the Company was enlisted. The roster of the Company will be found on pages 394 and 395 of Vol. 11, Ohio Roster. The regiment was organized June 23, 1846, at Cincinnati, Ohio. Captain Hamilton's Company was organized June 1, 1846, the second completed in the regiment. He marched his men about Portsmouth after rendezvous and they were laughed at for their awkwardness. On June 11, 1846, the Scioto and Lawrence County Volunteers were encamped on the "common" near the town. On Wednesday, June 10, the Ross County Volunteers, 86 in number, left on the steamer, Ashland, for Fort Washington. On June 18, 1846, the Stark County Rangers were in Portsmouth. They came down by canal from Massilon. James Allen was then Captain.

The Portsmouth Company was to leave June 18. Five companies went away from Portsmouth on the steamboat, New World. They stopped near Henderson, Ky., and went into a grove and celebrated the Fourth of July. At the celebration, Major Hamer and Captain Hamilton were two of the orators. After the celebration was over, the soldiers bathed in the Ohio River. On July 18, 1846, the Portsmouth Company of the First Regiment was on the Mexican soil. On the 12th of November, 1846, they were at Monterey, Mexico. After the battle of Monterey, during the war there was a Company of Portsmouth Guards organized. Colonel Peter Kinney was captain, John Cook was First Lieutenant, L. N. Robinson was Second Lieutenant, Colonel O. F. Moore was Third Lieutenant, John Fryer and Colonel J. J. Appler were both Lieutenants at different times. Colonel S. E. Varner, John L. Ward, Charles C. Row, Uriah McCloud, John Barker, L. C. Damarin, George W. White, A. W. Buskirk, Martin Molster, Leonard C. Heaton, Joseph C. Gilbert and George W. Brown were also members of the company. It paraded 80 men. The men had dark blue swallow tail coats faced with white, with stars, on the tails and face, of the coats. Their trousers were dark blue, with white stripes down the seams. They had white waist and shoulder belts, bell crowned caps, with metal plates in front with white cord behind, looped under the chin, and with a drooping white plume. They were drilled by Captain John Scott, a West Point graduate and afterwards by Lieutenant Ernst, then stationed in Portsmouth as a recruiting officer. L. P. N. Smith was ensign and carried the banner. Lieutenant William Peck and Frank McCoy were fifers. Alexander Weatherwax was drummer.

During the Mexican War the total population of Wayne Township was not much over 2,000 and the County about 15,000. The males of military age in Scioto County, during the Mexican War were not over 1,200, consequently the amount of enthusiasm, can be figured from the above statements. General Edward Hamilton, for he was general of the militia, was the central figure in Portsmouth during this war. In July, 1846, he resigned as a member of the Town Council on account of going to war. The town presented him the flag for his Company, at the time he went into the war, President Zachary Taylor, who made his acquaintance during the Mexican War, appointed him Secretary of the Territory of Oregon and on October 19, 1849, he resigned as Town Clerk on account of his intended removal. He left with the council the flag his Company carried through the Mexican War. He also resigned as Examiner of the public schools. E. W. Jordan was elected Town Clerk. Mr. Currie introduced a resolution to the effect that the Council would with pleasure accept the trust of the flag, which waved over the battlefield of Monterey. Peter Kinney, John L. Ward and James Malcomb were appointed to receive the flag. They reported they had received it, and placed it on the armory of the Portsmouth Guards. The editor of this work was unable to learn what finally became of this flag.

CIVIL WAR.

Company G, 1st O. V. I.—Three Months' Service.

At the opening of the War of 1861, there existed in Portsmouth an organization known as Company A of the 15th Ohio Volunteer Militia. The Captain was George B. Bailey, the First Lieutenant, William H. Raynor. There was a vacancy in the Second Lieutenantcy, and the Third Lieutenant was George W. Brown. The first Sergeant was George O. Newman, the Fourth, Henry E. Jones; the First Corporal was Thomas E. Sikes. Among the members of this Company were: Charles A. Barton, Silas G. Losee, H. C. Doddridge, Thomas Lawson, J. J. Musser, Thomas Yeager, Alfred Kinney, Henry W. Long, Thomas B. Lawson, John Micklethwait, Charles Soule, jr., Samuel Baird, Pat Pendergast, F. C. Gibbs, John J. Glidden, John F. Molster and John Kaps. This Company became Company G, First Ohio Volunteer Infantry, three months men.

On the 17th day of April, 1861, this Company was ordered to Washington, D. C., and left on the "Bostona." The Colonel of this First O. V. I. was Alexander McDowell McCook. On muster into service, the officers of Company G were George Bailey, Captain; William H. Raynor, First Lieutenant; Alfred Kinney, Second Lieutenant; George O. Newman, First Sergeant; and the other sergeants were Charles A. Barton, Henry E. Jones and Henry S. Cox. The Corporals were Thomas Sikes, Pat Pendergast, William S. Withrow, John J. Glidden, John F. Molster and John Kaps. Thomas J. Cochran, David C. Gates, Frank C. Gibbs, Van B. Hibbs, John Kaps, Pat Kendrick, William Keer, David B. Lodwick, Daniel R. Shriver, William Stokely, Timothy Sullivan and Thomas Yeager were among the privates.

C., March 19-21, 1865, Sherman's March to the Sea.

To speak of the 81st Regiment, O. V. I. thirty-six years after the War is to call to mind Dr. Peter J. Kline, one of the most prominent physicians in the state. He is well known for his high professional standing and love for the soldiers of the Civil War and devotion to their interests. His record as a soldier was of the best. He never failed in a single duty and was always at the front. The same as to his qualities as a soldier may be said of Captain David A. Murphy.

The following has been furnished in regard to the 81st Ohio by one who was with it through its entire service. "The 81st Ohio Regiment had its first experience on the firing line when it carried its colors into the smoke of battle at Pittsburg Landing on that memorable and bloody Sabbath morning, April, 1862."

"Amid the crash and din of this fight it was given a position in the Army of Tennessee, remaining ever afterward in this gallant and historic army until the close of the war, three years later, when, with thinned ranks and those colors, so bright and new on that Sabbath morning, now tattered and battle scarred, it stood at the battle of Bentonville, N. C., more than one thousand miles from the scene of its first action. By its gallantry in action and patient endurance on the march, it had added in no small degree to the brilliant history of General Sherman's favorite army corps, led by his most beloved Lieutenant, General, James B. McPherson, who fell while gallantly leading his men on the 22nd of July, 1864, in front of Atlanta and only a short distance from the line of the 81st Ohio. On the afternoon of the same day, together with the rest of the Brigade to which it belonged, it took part on a charge on the left of the Fifteenth Army Corps, retaking the works out of which Gen. Morgan L. Smith's division had been driven, and at the same time recapturing the famous De Grasses Battery of four twenty pound Parrots which had fallen into the hands of the enemy. On this charge they were led by Dr. C. P. Dennis of Portsmouth, then a member of General Morgan L. Smith's staff. Early in May, 1864, this regiment marched across the little wooden bridge which spans Chickamauga Creek at Lee and Gordon's Mills, with nine hundred bright muskets in its ranks."

"Three months later only three hundred guns were stacked by this command in the streets in Atlanta. This was the mute eloquence of the gallantry of this regiment from Resaca to the Gate City of the South. By a strange coincidence, it furnished the first man killed in the army of Tennessee, Thomas D. Crossby, at Resaca; and also the last one killed in the campaign at Atlanta, John M. Cowman. After the capture of Atlanta, together with its brigade, it was transferred to the Fourth Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, and became a part of General John M. Corse's command, of Altoona fame. It participated in Sherman's March to the Sea and was present at the capture of Savannah, Georgia, December 21, 1864."

"Turning northward, unflinchingly and uncomplainingly, it took up that terrible five hundred miles march; through swamps, across rivers, and over all obstacles a determined and desperate enemy could place in its way. Together with the rest of Sherman's army, it joined in the Union cheer, carried the last earth works and for the last time met armed resistance to the Union cause at Gouldsborough, N. C., March 21, 1865. From here it marched three hundred and fifty miles, reaching Washington City; and together with the rest of Sherman's army passed in review May 24, 1865."

The writer of this work has very precious recollections of the Regiment. General Robert N. Adams was the second Colonel. He was a student of Miami University and known to the writer as a schoolmate. Frank Evans, second Major and William H. Chamberlain, third Major were known to the writer as Miami students. This was also true of John R. Hunt, Adjutant of the Regiment and O. A. Dodds, the original Captain of Company F. A history of this regiment was furnished by Major William H. Chamberlain who for so many years was connected with the Cincinnati Gazette. The book was published in 1865 and from the stand point of a soldier of the Civil War is wonderfully interesting.

THE MORGAN RAID.

July 13, 1863, a dispatch was received by Colonel Kinney that Morgan was ten miles back of Cincinnati and coming east. Tuesday's dispatches announced that he had crossed the Little Miami below Lebanon with 4,000 men. Tuesday evening a public meeting was held to prepare for defenses. Scouts were sent out and Militia Companies were stationed near the city. On Wednesday Morgan was reported to be near Georgetown, Ohio. It was reported that he was pursued by 8,000 cavalry. Thursday evening five gunboats arrived at Portsmouth. A force of twenty-four transports, with three regiments of cavalry went out Thursday evening on the Gallipolis road. The Infantry remained at Portsmouth. Wednesday noon Morgan was at Georgetown and that night camped near Jacktown. Thursday his force moved to Jasper and thence to Jackson.

The militia was under Captain Varner. Three Companies, Captain Hope's, Reiley's and Terry's moved out on the Galena road Thursday noon and were stationed at night above the Buck Horn tannery. This force returned at nine a. m. Friday. Thursday morning Colonel Kinney declared martial law. All business was suspended and those not bearing arms were ordered to work on the entrenchments near the city. A large number of Militia Companies came Wednesday and Thursday and were in Camp Portsmouth, many of them were armed and equipped. A party came down from Gallipolis on "Victor Number Three" and scuttled all river craft.

Governor Todd appointed Colonel Peter Kinney commandant at Portsmouth. The Rifle Company met at the Court Street Engine House. E. W. Hope was Captain, William Kinney was First Lieutenant and John Faun, Second Lieutenant.

Captain W. W. Reiley's Company met at the Third Ward Engine House. Benjamin L. Fryer was First Lieutenant and William Wilson, Second Lieutenant.

Wednesday at six p. m. Captain Hope's Company was sent to the West Side and divided. Part went on the Union mill road and part to Turkey Creek. Captain Reiley's Company was sent out on the Chillicothe turnpike and Gilbert's Battery was sent to the bridge. Another Company was organized under Captain Carson and went Thursday night to Pond Creek. About one a. m. the Federal Cavalry from the gunboats and transports went up the road past Buckhorn tannery. All roads to the city were blockaded by parties sent out for that purpose. At three p. m. the gunboats and transports arrived. The cavalry landed and started in pursuit of Morgan. The Infantry under General Mason remained waiting orders. The force was about 12,000. For three days and nights the women of Portsmouth fed the soldiers. All kinds of rumors were abroad and the Provost guard patrolled everywhere. Morgan had 5,000 men and five pieces of artillery. At Dunkinsville they robbed Thompson and Collier's store of $1,500 and Phillips store at Dunbarton of the same amount. At Jasper they burned the bridge over the Canal, several houses, a saw mill, and rifled two stores. The loss was estimated at $20,000. A Lieutenant and Private were captured and brought to Portsmouth on the canal packet. The bridge over the Scioto at Piketon was burned, loss $15,000. At Jackson the railroad track was torn up for three miles and seven railroad bridges were burned between Berlin and Jackson. They robbed the stores and put ribbons on their horses' manes and tails. On Monday martial law was declared off. Colonel Sontag with five hundred militia surrendered to Morgan at Ewington, Gallia County, Ohio. This was unnecessary. If they had stood firm they could have captured their captors. Fifty-four of Morgan's men surrendered to John T. Miller and were brought to Portsmouth.

BIOGRAPHIES OF OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS WHO LOST THEIR LIVES IN THE SERVICE.

General Joshua W. Sill was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, December 6, 1831. His father, Joseph Sill, a lawyer of distinction, was an early settler of that place, and died there some years after the war. His mother died while he was very young, and he was reared and educated at home under the eye of his father. He had a taste for literature and science, which was fostered and developed. In 1850, he was appointed a cadet at West Point, graduating third in his class, in 1853, and being at once appointed second lieutenant of ordnance of Watervliet arsenal. Ordered back to the academy as instructor, he remained there until the next year, when he was sent to Oregon to superintend the construction of magazines and fortifications. During the Indian war in Oregon, he was chief of ordnance to General Harney, and performed his duties with energy and efficiency. Obtaining an exchange, in the fall of 1859, he was again at Watervliet. Ordered from there to Fort Leavenworth, he remained at that point until the spring of 1860, when he resigned his commission to accept the professorship of mathematics and engineering in the Polytechnic College, at Brooklyn, New York.. At the opening of the war he was offered the colonelcy of several New York regiments, but chose to return to his native state, where he entered the adjutant general's office, and assisted in organizing and equipping Ohio regiments until the summer of 1861, when he took command of the Thirty-third Infantry, and accompanied McClellan to the Kanawha Valley, in West Virginia. From this time until his death in the field, he was constantly in active service; under Nelson and Thomas, in eastern Kentucky; Mitchell in Alabama; and Buel and Rosecrans in Tennessee and Kentucky. In every sphere of military duty he proved himself a skillful soldier and an honorable gentleman. Although but a Colonel in rank, at the outset he commanded a brigade, and he was made a Brigadier-general in the winter of 1861. This promotion was for "gallant and meritorious conduct in the field." On the organization of Buell's army at Bardstown, he was placed in command of a division in McCook's corps, which he held until death relieved him. He fell at the battle of Stone River, December 31, 1862, while leading a brilliant charge upon the enemy, under an order from General Sheridan. In appearance, General Sill was of light build, with a mild and pleasing address. He was a man of scholarship and refinement, and of great simplicity and kindness of manner. Such was the charm and magnetism of his pure and spotless life, that he was loved by all who knew him, and especially was he idolized by his soldiers. The State of Ohio has been honored by men more known to fame, but she never sent forth a braver man to battle for his country. But his memory and his fame rest not alone in the hearts of those whose privilege it was to know and to love him, nor with the great state, to whose galaxy of heroes his name has added a new luster; but, in a peculiar sense, does all that is pure and lofty in the character of those she delights to call her sons, belong to the city of their birth. Chillicothe claims as a sacred heritage the name and fame of Joshua W. Sill; cut off, as he was, in his early manhood, that he might with the greater power teach the lesson which the young men of our times need so much to learn.

Col. George Bartlett Bailey was born June 29, 1821, at Bridgewater, the first county seat of Brown County, Ohio, on Straight Creek, about four miles east of Georgetown, the present county seat of Brown County. His father, George Bartlett Bailey, was from Pennsylvania, and a physician by profession. He removed to Georgetown, Ohio, in the year 1823, and there began the practice of medicine and continued it at the same place until his death, in 1867. He acquired a great reputation in his profession and was known as an eminent physician in all the counties near his own.

The subject of our sketch attended school in Georgetown in his childhood and boyhood, and later on studied under a private tutor. In 1837 he received the appointment of Cadet at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, accepted it and was admitted there. In 1838, becoming satisfied that the life of a regular army officer would not be suitable to his taste, he resigned and returned to his father's home at Georgetown. He was succeeded at West Point by Ulysses S. Grant.

After his return to Georgetown he studied medicine with his father and attended medical lectures at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, where he received his degree of M. D. in 1844. He practiced medicine for a short time with his father, and then removed to Aberdeen, Ohio, where he began and continued the practice of his profession, until his removal to Portsmouth, Ohio.

While a resident of Aberdeen, he married Miss Margaret Davidson of that place. Seven children were born of this marriage, six of whom died in infancy or childhood, and but one, a daughter, grew to maturity. She is now Mrs. Charles Scheisch, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

While Doctor Bailey had, in leaving West Point, abandoned the idea of military life as a profession, yet he always had considerable taste for some of its features, and while in Aberdeen organized a Militia Company there and called it the "Aberdeen Rangers." He removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1857, and continued the practice of his profession. He also engaged in the drug business in the building formerly occupied by the First National Bank. In 1860 he organized the "Kinney Light Guards," a State Militia Company.

When the first gun was fired on Fort Sumpter, April 12, 1861, he sought to organize the "Kinney Light Guards" into a company to respond to the call for 75,000 for ninety days. Thirty-five members of the Kinney Light Guards went into a company organized at Portsmouth, Ohio, under this call, which afterwards became Company G., 1st Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Doctor Bailey was commissioned as Captain of this company, which was enrolled on April 16, 1861. With this company he participated in the engagement at Vienna, Va., June 17, 1861, and the battle of Bull Run July 21, 1861. The time of the company expired July 31, 1861, and it was then mustered out.

Captain Bailey returned to Portsmouth. He was still determined to serve his country and accepted the appointment of Major of the Ninth Virginia Infantry, which was to be recruited at Guyandotte, Va. Captain Bailey accepted his appointment and went to Guyandotte to recruit and organize this regiment. While engaged in this work, the position of Lieutenant-Colonel of the same regiment fell vacant and it was tendered to Major Bailey, who accepted it, but was never mustered.

On November 10, 1861, Lieutenant-Colonel Bailey had with him three hundred men of his regiment at Guyandotte.

The Rebel General Jenkins made a raid on the place with twelve hundred cavalry on the night of November 10, 1861. In the fight Colonel Bailey was on the bridge over Guyandotte river, and in the darkness was shot or struck and fell into the water below, where his body was found the next morning. His remains were taken to Aberdeen, Ohio, where he was interred with military honors.

He was among the first of the citizens of Portsmouth, Ohio, to give his life for his country, and when the G. A. R. Post at Portsmouth, Ohio, was organized in 1881, it was named in his honor. He was a kind husband and father, a quiet and unobtrusive citizen and a man of fine sensibilities. His widow was granted a pension as of his rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, by a special act of Congress, but has long since joined her husband on the other shore.

Those who knew Colonel Bailey, say that the language of Marc Anthony in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar might be well applied to him.

"His life was gentle and the elements so mixed in him
That Nature might stand up and say to all the world,
This was a man."

Lieutenant-Colonel William Henry Eifort was a son of Sebastian Eifort, Esq., and Rachel Jackson Eifort, of Hunnewell, Kentucky. He was born at Jackson Furnace, Jackson County, Ohio, December 26, 1842. He was brought up in Scioto County, Ohio, where his father was engaged in the manufacture of iron. In his thirteenth year, his father moved to Carter County, Kentucky, where he built Boone Furnace. Here his son Henry was engaged as clerk and storekeeper, with the exception of the time spent in school. In the Spring of 1859, he came to Marietta, and entered the Preparatory Department. He was distinguished there for a peculiarly bold and generous spirit, impulsive and frank in a degree. At the breaking out of the war, he found himself in a state which assumed the attitude of neutrality, but he was too straight-forward and too spirited a youth to be beguiled into any imaginary path between loyalty and disloyalty. He promptly espoused the cause of the government, and with two or three friends of like spirit, attempted to raise volunteers for the Union Army. It was a perilous undertaking; they found that "neutrality" meant war upon all who should dare to rally men to the old flag on the soil of Kentucky. Their lives were threatened, and they were targets for the rifle and revolver as they rode through the country. But Eifort was one of those bold spirits who seem insensible to fear. Danger only roused him to his best. He and his friend raised a Company, which, on its organization, chose him First Lieutenant, his friend Thomas being made Captain. At this time Lieutenant Eifort was but eighteen years of age. The company could not camp on neutral soil, but crossed to Indiana to Camp Joe Holt, where they were mustered into the United States service, July 18, 1861. Enlisting first as Infantry, they were invited to change their organization, which they did, forming a company of the Second Kentucky Cavalry. The Regiment was under Sherman in his first campaign in Kentucky, in the Fall of 1861, and served in the Army of the Cumberland through the war. It fought many battles, and almost numberless skirmishes. Everywhere Eifort was conspicuous for his courage, continually getting in advance of his men when there was an enemy in front. He attempted exploits which were almost unheard of even in cavalry charges; not from vanity or ambition, nor as the result of stimulants, being strictly temperate in his habits. He never seemed to appreciate his own personal danger, but fixing his eye on the end to be reached, forgot himself till success was assured. An instance of this courage occurred just before the battle of Shiloh, in the Spring of 1862. He with a detachment of thirty men was sent forward on the pike near Franklin, Tennessee, when the rebels in their retreat were burning bridges behind them. Coming in sight of a bridge which they had just fired and fled from, Eifort spurred on ahead of his men, blind to danger or impossibility, plunged into the smoke and flames with his thirty men after him, crossed it as by a miracle, and suddenly appeared among the astonished rebel pickets, whom he made prisoners. In a few moments after crossing, the bridge was a mass of fire. Eifort rose steadily through the grades of promotion, being made Captain, April 26, 1862; Major, December 14, 1863; and Lieutenant-Colonel, June 22, 1864, when he was but twenty-two years old. His extreme daring cost him his life. This occurred in a skirmish at Triune, a small village between Murfreesboro and Franklin, Tenn., September 4, 1864. In this engagement his zeal and daring led him many yards in advance of his men, when he was mortally wounded, living a few hours, and sending home a message that "he had died as a soldier ought", that "he was the first man in, and the last man out of the charge." His body is buried at Portsmouth, Ohio, by the side of his grandfather, who was for fifteen years a commissioned officer in the French and German wars of Napoleon.

Major Joshua Vanzandt Robinson, Jr.

was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 18, 1820. He was the second son of Joshua Vanzandt Robinson, Sr. His mother's maiden name was Hannah Cooper. Two or three years later, his parents removed to Portsmouth, Ohio. There, young Robinson attended the public schools, until he was twelve years of age. At that time, his father, took him with his older brother, Lucien Newton, to Marietta College, where he remained until his graduation, eight years later. When he returned from college, he chose Law as a profession, and entered the office of Hon. William V. Peck, as a student. After his admission to the bar, Mr. Peck retained him as a junior partner. He gave promise of becoming a fine lawyer in time, but a serious failure in health occurred in his third year in the office work, and his physician recommended an open air life, as necessary to his restoration. His father owned a steamboat, the Resort, which plied between Portsmouth and the up-river towns, and he was given the post of Master. This he held for two years, until his health was completely restored. Our subject was married to Malvina M. Scott, October 17, 1843. They had four children: Louis Allen, died January 22, 1848; Estelle, died January 8, 1876; Joshua Vanzandt, died October, 1874; Malvina, died May 17, 1851. His wife died January 1, 1851. He married Martha Riggs March 10, 1853. He had two children by this marriage: Allen, who died September 4, 1855 and Genevieve Hamilton, who is still living with her mother in Florida. After Robinson was restored to health, his father offered to make him a partner in the firm of J. V. Robinson & Sons, which he accepted. The firm consisted of J. V. Robinson, Sr., L. N. Robinson, J. V. Robinson, Jr., and L. C. Robinson. J. V. Robinson, Jr. was given the work of business traveler and remained in the firm until his death in 1862. In the summer of 1861, when President Lincoln issued the call for the first three hundred thousand soldiers, Robinson united with Oscar F. Moore in raising a regiment in Scioto County. Realizing their own ignorance of military tactics and wishing to place a well prepared regiment in the field, they asked Lieutenant Sill of Chillicothe to accept the office of Colonel, which he did. They drew lots for the two remaining field offices. O. F. Moore drew the lucky straw, and the Majorship went to Robinson, who was mustered in August 1, 1861. This regiment was mustered in as the 33rd, O. V. I., and was the first regiment raised in that part of Ohio. Unfortunately for active work it was united to Gen. Buell's command and the 33rd with others was compelled to lie for months on the notoriously malarious Green River, Kentucky, awaiting transportation. The men of the regiment became ill of malaria fever--all but two hundred and fifty men at one time, being in the hospitals--Major Robinson among the number. He was impatient and unwilling to take sufficient time to recover. He applied to the Brigade Surgeon stationed at Louisville, for an order to go to the front, as the army had been ordered to move toward Murfreesboro, but the Surgeon refused him on the score of want of strength, and instead, he was given charge of the convalescent camp at Elizabeth, Kentucky. Drilling was almost impossible on account of the heavy and continuous rains, but he with the Lieutenant, did all that could be done to get his half-sick men ready for the field again. He contracted a heavy cold from exposure to rain and returned home February 26, 1862, where he died March 23, 1862. He was brave and generous; a warm friend, kind husband and father, and his country lost a patriotic citizen, when he died. He was a warm Republican. He had been sent as a delegate from his district to the National Convention, which nominated President Lincoln for his first term and he served on the committee of the party in his District in that Campaign. He did active work in politics in every canvass. As a business man, he was prompt and diligent and in every respect, honorable.

Captain John Cook

was born Sept. 13, 1811, in Wheeling, West Virginia. He was the oldest son of Hugh Cook. In 1822, he fell in the Public Well one Sunday, and dropped about forty feet, but was rescued uninjured. His business in Portsmouth was shipping produce to New Orleans; and one winter he shipped as high as one-hundred flat boats of flour, whiskey, and country produce to New Orleans. He made the last run in seventeen days, which was the quickest run ever known by flat boats. He was elected Sheriff of Scioto County on the Democratic ticket in 1843. The vote stood: John H. Thornton, 880, John Cook, 920. He was the only Democrat elected at that time, and his election was a surprise to everybody. He was a candidate for re-election in 1844, but was defeated. The vote stood Isaac H. Wheeler, 1,384, Cook, 1,147. He was a candidate for Treasurer on the Democratic ticket in 1851, and was elected. His opponent on the Whig ticket was George H. Gharky. The vote stood: John Cook, 1,238 and George H. Gharky, 973, Cook's majority 365. At the same election, John R. Turner beat George W. Flanders as Clerk by one vote; Turner, 1,034, Flanders, 1,033. At the same election O. F. Moore on the Whig ticket, defeated Francis Cleveland on the Democratic ticket, for State Senator. At this election, W. A. Hutchins on the Whig ticket for Representative defeated Judge Joseph Moore on the Democratic ticket. Hutchins, 1,348, Joseph Moore, 928. Mr. Cook was the Democratic candidate for Treasurer in 1853, and had two opponents, Hurd and John McDowell. The vote stood: John Cook, 1,586, Hurd, 712, John McDowell, 114. Mr. Cook's popularity may be judged from that vote. He was re-elected Sheriff of Scioto County in October, 1856 on the Democratic ticket by the following vote: John Cook, 1,616, George W. Crawford, 1,571. John Cook learned the carpenter's trade, and traveled on the Mississippi River as ship carpenter. He was built for strength, and weighed 190 pounds. He was all muscle, and could pick up a barrel of flour by the edges. There was never a more popular man lived in the county; and when the Civil War broke out he organized Company "K" of the 56th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and went out as its Captain on November 9, 1861. He was with the Regiment right along until May 16, 1863, when he was wounded in the ankle in the charge at Champion Hill, and his leg was amputated immediately. He lived until May 22, 1863, when he died in the ambulance on the way to the hospital. A braver man never lived, a true friend, liberal and warm hearted. He was married first to Miss Lydia Critzer. They had two daughters. His first wife died, and he married Sarah McCoy, daughter of Cornelius McCoy. By this marriage they had two daughters and a son.

Captain Thomas Hayes was born in Ireland in 1839, the youngest of eight children. He attended the schools of Ireland and came to the United States with his parents when he was fourteen years of age. The family located near Delaware, Ohio, where he worked on a farm for three years, attending school in the evenings and in the winter. He then came to Portsmouth and engaged in contracting with Philip Kelley, who married one of his sisters. When the War broke out, he was preparing to enter College at St. Louis. His patriotism and sense of duty overcame the desire for an education, and he decided to enlist and did so in Company "A", 30th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was then being organized by Capt. Wm. W. Reilley, who had been a soldier in the Mexican War. Capt. Thos. Hayes was one of the very first to enlist and to use his influence to induce others. The company left Portsmouth on Capt. A. W. Williamson's steam canal packet and went to Columbus to Camp Chase. It was mustered in on the 14th of August, 1861 and, at the organization, young Hayes was made First Lieutenant. The regiment was sent at once to West Virginia, and its first battle was Carnifax Ferry, Sept. 10, 1861. Young Hayes was made Captain, March 17, 1862, and on September 14, and 17, 1862 at the bloody battles of South Mountain and Antietam, he led his company to victory and proved his valor on the hotly contested fields.

In the winter following he and his men were working to construct a canal across Young's Point not far from Vicksburg. In these arduous labors Capt. Hayes showed his genial disposition and kind consideration for the men under his care. Spring came and with it new plans for the capture of Vicksburg. We do not repeat the details up to the 19th of May, but several assaults were made on the works in front of Vicksburg prior to the 22nd. On the 22nd of May, 1863, a general attack was planned to be simultaneous, and, by one grand effort, possibly succeed. Ten o'clock was the hour named. The 30th Ohio was placed in the head of a ravine near where the "Graveyard Road" passes into the City, and across which a strong earth works was built, with a deep ditch, heavy abatis and all conceivable obstructions were placed in the most scientific manner. A storming party of fifty men, with scaling ladders, planks and other helps were to be used in making an entrance. Following these, the Thirtieth Ohio was to advance in column down the road with Company A in the lead. A few moments before the attack, General Ewing came up and informed the Captain and those about him that they had just ten minutes to pray.

Captain Hayes turning to his men, encouraged every one to do his duty and if successful in entering the city, that no soldier of his company should do an act unbecoming a gentleman. These were about his last words, for a signal was soon given, the terrible onslaught commenced and Captain Hayes fell pierced with several balls. The storming party finding it impossible to get through the abatis, and over the ditch, the road became blockaded, no further advance could be made, the troops fell back as best they could from the enfilading and flank fires which were fast decimating the ranks, as more than one-third of the company were killed in the attack.

The death of Captain Hayes was sincerely mourned. He was genial in his disposition, kind as a commander, a true gentleman and christian, loyal and brave. He had endeared himself to all. He fell at his post with his face to the enemy, and a grateful, country attests his worth, by annually decorating the mound at Greenlawn where he so peacefully sleeps.

"Rest Soldier, rest, thy race is run,
Thy welcome plaudit is well done;
Peaceful sleep the true and brave,
We'll crown with flowers the Soldier's grave."

Captain Samuel A. Currie

was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1841. He was educated in the Portsmouth schools, and assisted his father, Thomas S. Currie in business until he entered the service. He was a very popular young man, and raised a Company in the summer of 1861, which afterwards became Company A, of the thirty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in as Captain of the Company, August 5, 1861, and died April 16, 1862, at Shelbyville, Tennessee. He was as popular in his Company as he was at his home. His remains were brought home. He was given a public funeral, befitting a soldier, and was buried in Greenlawn.

Lieutenant Henry McIntyre was the oldest son of Daniel and Mary McIntyre. He was born on the 27th day of August, 1841, in the city of Portsmouth. He received a common school education in the Portsmouth schools, and fitted himself for clerical work, for which he had talent. When the general call to Arms came in '61, after the defeat of "Bull Run", young McIntyre was the first to enlist. He joined the Company being raised by Captain W. W. Rielley, which afterwards became Company A, of the 30th O. V. I. When the Company was organized at Camp Chase, he was made First Sergeant, and promoted to Second Lieutenant, Sept. 27, 1862. He proved himself capable and energetic, and was made First Lieutenant and Adjutant, April 27, 1863. He served in the Army of W. Va., under General Cox, until the defeat of General McClellan in the Peninsula, and when the Kanawha Division was called to the Army of the Potomac, where the great battles of "South Mountain" and "Antietam" were fought, in which Lieutenant McIntyre was conspicuous for his bravery. After this campaign closed, his Division was returned to W. Va., and later it was transferred to the South, and joined the 15th Army Corps under General Sherman. In the terrible assaults on Vicksburg on May 19, and 22, 1863, Lieutenant McIntyre was mentioned in the official reports for gallantry by his Commanding General. The Army of the Tennessee was afterwards sent to the relief of Chattanooga, and took part in the battle of Missionary Ridge. In the following spring, his regiment followed General Sherman on the way to Atlanta taking part in most of the skirmishes and battles, until at the storming of Kenesaw Mountain on the 27th day of June, he received a mortal wound through his chest and one arm which terminated fatally on the 5th of July, 1864. He bore his sufferings like a hero. He was a true patriot and knew no fear in the face of the enemy. He was buried at Altoona Pass, Ga.

Lieutenant Thomas Kipp Coles,

the eldest son of Capt. Samuel Coles of Hanging Rock, Ohio, was born Dec. 25, 1844, near Portsmouth, Scioto County, Ohio, where he spent the first ten years of his life. He enlisted as a private in Company "H", 91st Regiment, O. V. I., August 22, 1862. He was made a Sergeant of that Company, and was promoted to Second Lieutenant Feb. 19, 1863. He was transferred to Company "G", July 6, 1864, and was transferred to Company "C", First Lieutenant, Oct. 12, 1864. He was killed Nov. 18, 1864 in the battle of Myerstown, Virginia, before his muster as First Lieutenant. This is his Official Record in the Civil War. He went through the severe campaign with the Army of "West Virginia", under Gen. Crook. He was at the battle of Cloyd Mountain, and in the desperate charge near Lynchburg in which Col. Turley fell dangerously wounded, bravely fighting at the head of his Regiment. He went through the severe battles and shared in the glorious victories under Gen. Sheridan in the Valley of Virginia, from the 19th of September to the 19th of October, everywhere in the thickest of the fight, the "bravest of the brave." Amid all these perils and dangers, and through some six or seven battles he passed unscratched. A short time before his death he volunteered and was selected to join a Company of scouts under Capt. Blazer to fight against Mosby and his gang of guerillas and outlaws, who were constantly interrupting our lines of communication, and committing unheard of cruelties upon peaceable Union citizens and Union soldiers who fell into their hands. He met his death by a rebel bullet, which entered his left side and came out under his right shoulder. He also received another wound in the neck after he fell, and lived but a few minutes after he was shot. His body was buried by some Union family who lived near by, and who were personally acquainted with him and had seen him fall. By the aid of Rev. Joseph, Chaplain of the 5th Virginia Infantry, and Col. Charles Kingsbury, A. A. G., under Gen. Sheridan, the body was recovered, and afterwards embalmed, and restored to his friends where it received a Christian burial. The funeral took place on the 30th of November 1864, from the Presbyterian Church at Hanging Rock, Ohio. The day was one of those sweetly sad autumn days, clear, but mild and hazy, so entirely in harmony with the occasion. A large concourse of sympathizing friends attended his funeral, among whom were several soldiers and officers of the Civil War. Brig. Gen. Powell, commander of one of the divisions of cavalry under General Sheridan, was present. Lieutenant Coles was borne to his grave by his companions in arms, with some of whom he had fought on many a bloody field, and under the starry flag which he so dearly loved, and which he laid down his young life to defend. Afterwards his body was disinterred and re-interred in the family lot in Greenlawn cemetery in Portsmouth, where it was left to its final resting place.

Lieutenant Coles was of a noble character. He was always ready to go where duty called, regardless of danger or consequences. He was of a most courteous, affectionate disposition; and his memory will long be cherished in the heart of hearts of all who knew him. He was as brave and chivalrous a soldier as ever wore the blue. It seems a pity that his generous young life should be extinguished under such painful circumstances.

Thomas Waller Terry was born at Portsmouth, Ohio, February 9, 1841, and died at Camp Burnside, Kentucky, March 3, 1864. At the breaking out of the Rebellion, he was a student at Marietta College. He was under age, but felt that call of patriotism which stirred in the breasts of so many of our noble sons, to serve his country in her hour of need. Like a dutiful son, he telegraphed to his father, "The boys are going; may I go too?" The answer flashed back instantly, "Go, but don't get shot in the back." He volunteered in Company G, First O. V. Infantry, April 16, 1861. After serving till June 11, 1861, he was discharged to receive an appointment as Cadet in the Military Academy at West Point, and entered at once upon the duties that he might the better be fitted to serve his country.

After having been there nearly two years, he wrote to his father asking his consent to resign, and return to active service in the army. He was urged to remain and graduate, but he still insisted on resigning.

In one of his letters to his father, he says: "Father, I wish you to give me your consent to resign, as I cannot study here while I know my country needs my services in the field, and I think it is my duty to go, as it is every other young man's. While I write, our very Capitol is being threatened by rebels, and I wish to be one who can say in after years with pride, 'I helped to defend it.' I must go."

He left West Point in June, 1863, and came home. There not being any new regiment forming in this state at the time, he enlisted in Co. I the First Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, as a private October 20, 1863. He was, on November 23, 1863, made Second Lieutenant. The command was ordered in January, 1864, to move from Camp Nelson, Ky., to Camp Burnside, Ky., immediately. The commanding General S. S. Fry appointed him Acting Assistant Quartermaster, and placed him upon his staff. He drew his mules, some five hundred, part of which had been broken and the remainder young and unbroken. The drivers too were about as green as the mules. He loaded up and left the second day after receiving the order. The weather was cold and wet, but he put his command through much sooner than was expected, and was highly complimented by the General commanding. The supplies being very short, he was compelled to return for more. He made three trips through the mud, rain and snow, on the last of which he was sick all the way with a very severe cold. Typhoid fever set in, and he breathed his last in a neat cedar cabin, built by the officers and the men expressly for him, on the banks of the Cumberland River, March 3, 1864. His last words were: "Forward, March!" showing that he thought he was at the post of duty, and ready to go forward in the service of his country. He loved his country more than he loved his life. His remains were sent home and interred in the family lot in Portsmouth's Greenlawn. The regiment of which he had been a member passed resolutions highly honorable to him as a soldier and an officer. So did the officers of the Division with which he was connected. They say: "His efficiency and energy as an officer, his social and genial disposition, his honorable deportment, integrity and patriotism, made him a much-loved favorite in this command. The patriotism which caused him to leave West Point before graduating, to enter the service of his country and die thus early in life, affords an example of disinterested patriotism worthy of emulation." This was signed by Brigadier-General S. S. Fry. His classmates at West Point passed complimentary resolutions. They say that by his "gentlemanly bearing, and many social qualities, he had won the respect of all his companions;" and that "had he lived, he would have made one of the brightest ornaments of his profession." His classmate and roommate at West Point, in sending the resolutions of the class, and their determination to erect a monument to his memory, thus expresses himself: "I was his roommate and intimate friend for a year, and during the whole of that time, I always found him high toned, honorable, and generous to a fault. I could not have loved a brother better than I loved him." Much more might be quoted from resolutions and letters, testifying to his high and honorable character, his integrity and patriotism, and fidelity to duty. We will close this imperfect sketch by a brief quotation from a letter written by his bereaved father to his classmate at West Point, soon after his death. "Thus passed from earth, and I hope and trust to heaven, a true patriot, a true friend, and a beloved son, one that thought more of his country than he did of his own life."

John R. T. Barnes

was born near Waverly, Ohio, May 17, 1830. His father was William Barnes and his mother's maiden name was Nancy Ann Talbott. His father was an Adjutant in the war of 1812 and at the time of his death in 1846 was a Major-General of the Ohio Militia, appointed by the Legislature. His grand-father, John Barnes, was a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and held a Lieutenant's commission in the 7th Virginia. The family lived on a farm one mile south of Waverly at the time of John R.'s birth, and till he was fourteen years of age, when his parents took up their residence in that village. As a boy, he worked on a farm, hunted or fished as boys of the time did. He had a common school education only. His parents were devout members of the Methodist Church and he was a member of the same, from boyhood. His mother died January 5, 1846, and his father the day following. John entered the store of his elder brother, William T. Barnes as a clerk. He became a partner in 1842 and remained in the business ten years when he sold out to his brother, William, and went to Chillicothe, where he clerked for William Carson for some six years.

In 1858, he went to Portsmouth and became a clerk for William Elden. Here he formed many fast friendships among the men of his own age. In Portsmouth, he had connected with the Presbyterian church and lived up to his profession. When the war broke out, he was fired with the war fever and on April 16, 1861, enlisted in Company G First Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three months. He wanted some of his young friends to go with him and went to Waverly and secured as volunteers with him Abisha Downing who afterwards became Major in the 73rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry; Asa F. Couch who afterwards became a Captain in the 73rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry; Gordon F. Lauman, severely wounded at Vienna, Virginia. With these young men he followed the Company to Cincinnati where he and they joined it. They were sent to Alexandria, Va., and by oversight, or a blunder, of the commanding officers, a train was sent forward on the Orange & Alexandria Railroad instead of having the country scoured by scouts to develop the enemy. Near Vienna, the train of flat cars loaded with soldiers, moving in advance of skirmishers, in rounding a curve, was shot into by a rebel battery, in ambush. In Company G alone, six were killed besides those killed from other companies. Barnes was mortally wounded. His left elbow was shot away and he received internal injuries. He was sent back on a flat car and died in one half hour after reaching camp. His life was needlessly sacrificed, as were those of the others killed in the same encounter. He and his companions who lost their lives at the same time, were first buried in a field by the roadside between Washington and Alexandria, near a little bay just where the Orange and Alexandria Railroad bears away from the Potomac, toward Orange C. H. The official record says he was interred at Camp Lincoln, on the Loudon and Hampshire Railroad. He was buried in a coffin, the only one which could be obtained in Alexandria. The others were buried in their blankets. His brother, James Q. Barnes, after the death of his brother, went on and joined Company G and served with it, until it was mustered out, in place of his brother, without being enlisted, or mustered, and without pay. He was in the Battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861. This same brother became First Lieutenant of Company D, 73rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry and was made Captain of Company I same regiment, September 25, 1862. He was wounded October 29, 1863, in the battle of Lookout Valley and was mustered out December 31, 1864.

Thus perished in his youth, one of the most noble hearted of the young men of our country. He was of honorable ancestry, of pure morals, and led a correct, upright life. He was a model among young men. The figure of the soldier on the top of the Soldiers' Monument in Tracy Square, Portsmouth, Ohio, was intended to represent him. His life was lost by the want of military knowledge, on the part of his commander, like thousands of others in the same war, and in other wars, but it cannot be said to have been wasted, because his noble example and those of his companions who met a like fate will be remembered while the Republic lasts.

Walter P. Stewart

was one of the young men of Portsmouth, Ohio, whose life was sacrificed for his country. He was the son of William Stewart and Jeannette Bryden, his wife, born in 1845, near Raven Rock in Washington Township. He spent his whole life in the vicinity of Portsmouth. He enlisted in Battery L, First Ohio Light Artillery, August 21, 1863, at the age of eighteen. He was in all the battles in which that battery participated until October 8, 1864, when he was captured near Harrisonburg, Virginia, and taken to Libby Prison. He was exchanged April 11, 1865, but his confinement in prison ruined his health, and his father procured his discharge June 26, 1865, at New Creek, West Virginia, and took him home, but only to die there. The whole battery was discharged and mustered out July 4, 1865. He died July 9, 1865, only five days after the battery was mustered out. He was, at enlistment, a handsome youth, fair, florid and pleasant to look upon, and his life and character were as attractive as his personal appearance. The grief of his aged father at his untimely death, when all were rejoicing on the return of the soldiers, was pathetic. He visited his grave daily and kept it in order as long as he lived. The memory of this handsome and brave young soldier is precious to all who remember him, and to the coming generation who will read this work. The writer, who was a soldier of the civil war, himself, commends the example of this noble youth who gave his life, a sacrifice to his country. John R. T. Barnes was the first man to die in the service of his country from Scioto County June 17, 1861 and Walter P. Stewart was the last. The memory of his life will be cherished while the Republic endures.

Schriver, Corporal; William P. Reed, Corporal; Charles S. Noel, Corporal; Floyd E. Thurman, Corporal; Roy N. Matthews, Artificer; Fred M. Armstrong, Musician; William D. McMonagle, Wagoner. Those who died in the service were: Daniel H. Dodge, Elbert L. Patterson, Henry M. Morrison, Kurt Sparks and Forrest Briggs.

Daniel Hezekiah Dodge, the son of George Lyons Dodge and Sarah Louise (Tibbs) Dodge, was born December 24, 1875, on the Dodge homestead farm in Madison Township, Scioto County, Ohio. He grew up in the County and attended the common schools. He entered the employ of Peter Brushart as Assistant Manager of his company store in Pike County, Kentucky and remained there until the fall of 1897, when he came to Portsmouth and entered a local business college and left his studies there to respond to his country's call.

He enlisted in the 4th O. V. I. Spanish War and died in Guyama, Porto Rico, August 10, 1898. His remains were brought home and interred in Greenlawn October 31, 1898.

Elbert Lee Patterson was born near McConnelsville, Morgan County, Ohio, January 15, 1881. His father was James L. Patterson, at one time "Editor of the Times" at Portsmouth, Ohio. His mother died when he was three years old. He came to Portsmouth in 1893, when his father took charge of the "Portsmouth Times." He graduated from the Portsmouth High School at the age of 16, and for one year was an efficient reporter on his father's paper, "The Daily Times." Elbert Patterson was a member of Co. H 14th Regiment "Ohio National Guard" and when the Company was called into the Spanish War, he left Portsmouth with it April 26, 1898. He went with the regiment to Camp Chickamauga, and afterward embarked with it from Newport News for Porto Rico, where his regiment arrived August 1, 1898. He was taken sick and it was apparent that he would not live to return home. His father was notified, left at once for Puerto Rico, and reached Ponce, the morning of his death, just 40 miles from Guyama where he was lying. His father did not arrive until after his death, but brought his body home. Elbert Patterson was a young man of excellent morals and beloved and respected by all who knew him. He died October 16, 1898, at Guyama, Puerto Rico.

Henry McCall Morrison was born January 19, 1879, on the Morrison farm in Nile Township. He was the eldest child of James Hiner Morrison and Ara McCall, his wife. He obtained his education at the Elm Tree school. His parents moved to Portsmouth in March, 1895. He worked awhile in one of the shoe factories and then sold merchandise for a Cincinnati house. He enlisted in Company H, 14th O. N. G., in February, 1896. When the Spanish-American War broke out, he with his Company enlisted in Company H, 4th O. V. I. for two years. He left Portsmouth, April 26, 1898. The regiment went first to Chickamauga and then to Puerto Rico. He was in excellent health until September 17, when he was taken with typhoid fever and went to the hospital. He left Puerto Rico October 21, 1898, on the hospital ship, Missouri, and died at two o'clock p. m. on the 26th of October, 1898, and was buried at sea, at 8 p. m. His physician informed him he would die. He took the announcement most calmly and heroically and gave the physician the address of his parents and friends and passed away. He was a youth of great promise, admired and loved by all who knew him.

Forrest Cecil Briggs,

the son of Joseph and Ermina (Thurman) Briggs, was born in Clay Township, Scioto County, Ohio, July 21, 1872. He was the eldest child, and had two sisters, Cora and Aletha. He was reared on the Briggs home farm, attended school in the country until he was eleven years of age and worked with his father on the farm during vacation. He then attended the Portsmouth schools for five years. He did not complete the High School course, but entered the River City Business College in 1885, and completed a course in bookkeeping and stenography, after which he was employed in the Norfolk and Western Railway Office. He became a member of Company "H", 14th Ohio National Guards July 2 and served five years. He was with the Regiment as First Sergeant during the Logan County Riots. At the breaking out of the Spanish-American War he was mustered in the United States service with his Company as First Sergeant. He was promoted to Second Lieutenant August 2, 1898, on merits. His Company was transferred at once to Chickamauga, where his health began failing. It was soon ordered to Puerto Rico where the service and climate bore heavily upon his weak constitution. He was taken sick October 27, with typhoid fever, and was transferred to Fort Hamilton, New York, where he died November 10, 1898. His father reached him three days before his death, and in his delirium he was performing his duties as an officer. His commission as Second Lieutenant was sent him on the 2nd of August, but was never presented to him. His body was brought to Portsmouth, and he was buried with military honors on Sunday afternoon November 13, 1898, in Greenlawn Cemetery. He seemed to have an inborn taste for a soldier's life, for when a boy he took great interest in the Portsmouth High School Cadets. He had been a member of the Sixth Street Methodist Church since the age of fourteen, and attended the Sabbath School of that Church regularly.

He was a young man with a most kindly and generous disposition, always seeking to do something for others. He was a model youth in every respect, and died a Christian soldier. He had the affection and respect of all of his comrades. His funeral was one of the largest ever held in Scioto County.

Tax Duplicates of the Town of Portsmouth Between the Years 1815 and 1840.

It is believed in the first years of the town it had its own duplicate, or was represented in the Tax Duplicate of Wayne township.

In 1825 the town taxes collected were $205.48. The only information bearing on this subject will be the Budgets of the town and city of Portsmouth, to which reference is had.

Tax Duplicates of Scioto County Prior to 1840.

No copies of the Tax Duplicates of Scioto county prior to 1840 can be found. There are none in the State Auditor's office, and none in the office of the County Auditor. Doubtless they were sold for waste paper. We can now learn nothing in regard to them except what can be found in the Commissioners' Journals.

In 1816 the amount of the County Tax Duplicate collected was $1,600.

In 1817 the Tax Duplicate was $1,012, of which $892.50 was collected. General Kendall, as Treasurer, collected $1,417.50. Part of it was no doubt special taxes.

In 1819 the County Duplicate was $394.54, of which $375.34 was collected.

In 1820 the Duplicate was $1,085.52½, of which amount $962.58½ was collected.

The Duplicate of 1821 has not been preserved.

In 1822 the Tax Duplicate was $3,560.93.

In 1823 it was $2,783.86.

In 1824 the total Duplicate is not given, but State tax was $842.90, and Road tax $349.76.

In 1825 the County levies were $1,374.61, of which $1,264.52 was collected. In 1825 the total duplicate was $4,193.11.

In 1826 the Duplicate is stated at $2,352.25, but that must have included nothing but County levies. The Duplicate collected was $1,792.02. The county expenditures that year were $1,878.92.

In 1826 the total Duplicate was $4,344.61, and Moses Gregory, the Collector, collected every dollar of it.

In 1827 the county expenditures were $1,706.57½. The Tax Duplicate was $4,406.25.

In 1828 the Tax Duplicate was $4,701.45.

In 1829 it was $5,449.61.

The Duplicate of 1830 was not found, but the Treasurer collected on it $3,741.52.

In 1831 the Duplicate is not given, but the Treasurer collected $10,690.94.

In 1832 the Duplicate is not given, but the Treasurer collected $10,974.07.

In 1833 the Duplicate is not given, but the Treasurer collected $10,784.15.

HISTORY OF SCIOTO COUNTY.

The Duplicates between 1838 and 1837 were not found, but in 1837 Conrad Overturf, Treasurer, accounted for $13,123.44.

For 1839 the Treasurer settled $21,627.49.

The foregoing is all that can now be obtained in regard to the Tax Duplicates of Scioto county between 1803 and 1840.

Free Turnpikes.—Vol. 66, page 387. April 30, 1869, was an amendment of the act of 1866 and provided for a levy of four mills on the dollar for free turnpikes. The people could not get them fast enough.

Deficiencies.—Vol. 68, page 194. May 11, 1871, was an act to provide for a deficiency of $20,000 in the County Current fund of Scioto County. The act provided for an extra mill on the dollar for 1871 and 1872 to make up the deficiency. The law also provided for a re-imbursement of the County Current from other funds.

Turnpike Bonds.—$200,000.00. Vol. 69, page 254. April 19, 1872. The people of the county demanded that the county go into debt and complete all the turnpikes at once, instead of building from an annual levy each year. This law was passed to satisfy that demand. It was supplemental to the act of 1866, and provided for the issue of $200,000 in bonds at eight per cent semi-annually. The commissioners were to determine the amount to be issued and they were to be issued 1-8 payable in four years, 1-8 in seven years, 1-4 in twelve years, 1-4 in sixteen years, 1-4 in twenty years. Two mills on the dollar per year was to be levied to pay the bonds and interest. The Commissioners determined to issue the full $200,000 and it was submitted to a vote of the electors of the County at the fall election. The measure carried. There were 4,721 votes for the loan and 181 against it. It was one of the best measures ever adopted. The turnpikes were built and the loan has been paid off.

CHAPTER IX.

THE BAR OF SCIOTO COUNTY.

General Observations Table of the Attorneys now Practising Law in Portsmouth Resolutions as to Judge Samuel Crull-Bar Meeting of November 21, 1885-Biographies of Members of the Bar who were not Congressmen, Judges or Legislators, from 1810 to the Present Time.

The first lawyers who practiced in the county were Thomas Scott of Chillicothe, and John S. Wills. Judge Scott has a sketch elsewhere. He practiced in Scioto County as late as 1840 although he never resided in the county. Thomas Scott and son maintained an office in Scioto County for several years. Judge Scott had four daughters out of his fifteen children residents of Portsmouth, Mrs. Howells, the first Mrs. Col. Graham, Mrs. O. F. Moore and a Miss Kate Scott, who never married. He attended the courts in Adams county and in fact traveled the circuit. He practised before the Supreme Court in Washington and traveled back and forth on horse back.

John S. Wills was also one of the first lawyers. He was Prosecuting Attorney in 1804. He was born in Virginia in 1793 and admitted to the bar in 1804. He located first in Cincinnati, then practised in Adams County under the Territorial Government. He never lived in Scioto County though he attended its terms of court. He was living in Ross County in 1798. He was clerk of the Territorial Court in Adams County a short time. In 1809 he removed to Franklinton in Franklin County, and resided there until Brown County was organized in 1817, and he moved first into Ripley and afterwards to Georgetown where he died in 1829. He was prosecutor of Ross County in 1807-1808.

Jessup N. Couch, of Ross County, was prosecutor of Scioto County in 1805. He acted as prosecutor of Scioto County as late as 1810 at the August term, and at the December term resigned. He was born August 3, 1778, at Reading, Conn., and graduated at Yale in 1802. He was admitted to practice in 1805. He was of literary tastes. He was appointed Supreme Judge in 1816 and served until 1821 when he died in office, at the age of 43, a bachelor. He was an uncle of Mrs. Dr. Burr, of Portsmouth, Ohio. His law library he bequeathed to his friend Judge John Thompson, of Chillicothe, and his general library to Mrs. Burr, of Portsmouth.

Nathan K. Clough, located in Portsmouth in 1808. He was Prosecuting Attorney from 1810 to 1821. He has a separate sketch.

February 19, 1819, Samuel M. Tracy hung his banner on the outer walls. He announced that he had succeeded to the business of Judge Osborn, who had at that time begun a seven years term as President Common Pleas Judge. Samuel Miles Tracy practised at the Portsmouth bar thirty-seven years and in that period enjoyed the confidence of the public to a greater extent than any other lawyer who has ever practiced in Portsmouth. For years no public business was transacted by the city or county except under his advice. The juries in Scioto County believed in him implicitly. Whatever bore his stamp went as law, both with courts and juries. No important case was ever presented to the courts at Portsmouth while he was at the bar unless he was on one side or the other. Yet he never aspired to any office higher than that of Prosecuting Attorney. He never sought any legislative office, although his ability would have suggested it. He was a high toned gentleman, reserved and dignified. His manner warded people away from him and yet he was the most successful lawyer in the county, in his time, or at any time subsequent.

Ezra Osborn came to Portsmouth about 1813. He was from Vermont. He was a good man, a good citizen and a good Christian, but a very indifferent lawyer. After being the President Common Pleas Judge for seven years he accepted the office of Justice of the Peace and held it for a number of years, and seemed to be more at home in that office than on the bench. He died in 1840 and left no descendants.

Joseph Sill of Chillicothe, practised in Portsmouth in 1821. It is not known whether he had an office in Portsmouth, but he never resided in the town.

In 1824, Clough & Osborn were partners. Henry Brush of Chillicothe, practised in Portsmouth but never resided in the town. On May 9, 1826, Ezra Osborn announced in the "Western Times" that he had recommenced the practice of law and that he would attend to the business of N. K. Clough when the latter was absent in the circuit.

June 18, 1826, Edward Hamilton made his bow to the public. As we have told all the good things about him in his sketch, we will not repeat them here. He was a high toned gentleman above all things. He was too sensitive for the contests of the court room. His fine nature shrunk from it and he followed the quieter walks of the profession, but he knew the law.

The lawyers were, when he came, inclined to under estimate his ability. They had him elected Justice of the Peace and made up a fictitious case—one of them sued Peck in trover and conversion for the value of a pocket knife. All the lawyers were in the case, either as counsel or witnesses. An effort was made to turn the case into ridicule, but Justice Hamilton would not permit it. He conducted the case with the utmost decorum and gravest dignity, and at the conclusion of the trial found Peck guilty, and fixed the value of the property at $1.50. The lawyers were in high glee and had lots of fun. Ten days after the trial the Justice presented Peck with a formidable bill of costs. Peck pleaded it was all in fun, but the Justice was in earnest and made him pay the whole bill, damages and costs. Whether the bar called for their witness fees is not related, they probably did not, but Hamilton collected them. After that, the bar tried no more experiments on Hamilton.

In 1827, Theodore H. Burrows was a lawyer in Portsmouth, but he seems to have been a bird of passage and did not remain long.

August 30, 1828 was when William V. Peck first appeared in Portsmouth. He was only at the bar 19 years, but was as able a lawyer as was ever in Portsmouth. While he resided in Portsmouth 50 years, the remainder of his time, over 19 years, was spent on the Common Pleas or Supreme Court Bench, or in retirement. Peck taught the public in Portsmouth that there were other lawyers of equal ability to Sam Tracy. When the commissioners sued David Gharky, ex-auditor, for overcharges, they employed Sam Tracy, and thought the case won. Gharky, the shrewd old German, employed Peck, who lost in the lower court but won out in the Supreme Court and got his client off free. Then the county officers for the first time appreciated the fact that there were other lawyers than Sam Tracy.

In 1829, Ezra Osborn gave public notice in the newspapers that he had been appointed by the court to audit administrators, executors and guardians accounts, and that no accounts would be considered unless they had been audited by him.

February 25, 1830, N. K. Clough published that he had removed to Front street and that he had $2,000 to $3,000 standing out and wanted the money. At that time he was building the residence lately occupied by Dr. Arthur Moore on Fourth street.

In 1832 both Peck and Hamilton advertised lots for sale. In the same year Joseph W. McCormick hung out his shingle in Portsmouth but did not remain over six months. His father was Adam McCormick of Adams County, an Irishman, and his mother was Margaret Ellison, daughter of Andrew Ellison, one of the pioneers of Adams County. He was a magnificent specimen of physical manhood, an Apollo Belvidere. He left Portsmouth and went to Cincinnati and from there to West Union. He was the second Attorney General of Ohio, serving a few months by appointment in May 1831. He was prosecuting attorney for Adams County after he left Portsmouth and was a member of the Constitutional convention of 1851. In 1857 he left Adams County and went to California where he died in 1879.

Benjamin Ramsey came to Scioto County in 1838. He was a bachelor and so remained while in Portsmouth. He has a sketch herein. He was a lazy man and left Portsmouth in 1858 to rest on a farm in Pennsylvania.

In 1838 McCormick was back in the county for a few months.

In 1838 Col. O. F. Moore came to Portsmouth.

In 1842 Wells A. Hutchins came and formed a partnership with one Blinn. On June 3, 1842, the partnership was dissolved by Hutchins, instanter, and so announced in the papers, and then Ramsey and Hutchins were partners.

October 21, 1842, George Johnson advertised as a lawyer.

In 1846 Hamilton and Jordan advertised as partners. Hamilton afterwards became Secretary of the Territory of Oregon, and Jordan solicitor of the Treasury.

In 1846 Ramsey and Barr were partners. This was Sterret Barr, son of John T. Barr.

In 1852, John T. Flint advertised as a lawyer in Portsmouth. He was a northern man by birth, but went to Texas, where he became a southerner, and a Confederate and died there after the Civil War. He married Lavinia Feurt, daughter of Gabriel Feurt of Scioto County.

In 1853 James W. Davis was a lawyer in Portsmouth. He afterwards removed to Greenbrier County, Virginia, and is living there.

January 4, 1854, Elijah Glover began his career as a lawyer in Portsmouth.

On February 28, 1854, George Fitzgerald came as a lawyer to Portsmouth. he remained but a short time, and so far as Portsmouth is concerned, oblivion has claimed him for his own.

On April 5, 1854, John W. Collings came to Portsmouth. He advertised as Collings and Collings, Attorney. The senior Collings was his uncle, George, former Common Pleas Judge in Scioto County, but whose connection with the business was merely nominal.

On November 14, 1855, Whitney and Whitney advertised as attorneys-at-law. They were brothers, George and John R.; George only remained a few months, John R. remained several years and then went to Warren County, where he has since resided.

In 1858 Jordan and McCauslen advertised as attorneys; McCauslen had removed from Adams County in 1857. He removed to Steubenville in 1865 where he resided until his death in 1876.

Edward F. Jordan, his partner located in Portsmouth about 1847. In 1861 he was appointed Solicitor of the Treasury and held the office eight years. He then located in New York City where he remained until his death.

In 1858 John Vanmeter was an attorney-at-law in Portsmouth. He remained long enough to be Mayor of the town and then left. He is now living at Salt Lake City, Utah.

In 1859, Hutchins and Guffey were in partnership. Guffey was in Portsmouth a number of years. He was its Town Clerk a number of times. He left Portsmouth during the war and came back afterwards, but did not remain long.

In 1859 Joseph M. Glidden advertised as an attorney-at-law. He had his office at the corner of the Gallia turnpike by the B. & O. Ry.

On April 25, 1860, John J. Harper became a lawyer in Portsmouth.

On August 6, 1860, Geo. O. Newman became a lawyer in Portsmouth.

The foregoing is taken from the several newspapers published in Portsmouth. It is published merely to show when lawyers located or first advertised in Portsmouth. Every lawyer of the slightest consequence dead, or living, has a notice or a sketch in the part of this chapter following.

The Portsmouth Bar never had any permanent association and never maintained a library till 1901, both of which facts are to be much regretted. The bar of Scioto County has furnished three Congressmen, one secretary of a territory, one Territorial Judge, one Solicitor of the Treasury, one Solicitor General of the United States, one Supreme Judge, seven Common Pleas judges, and one U. S. District Judge (Thompson) and its capacity for this is only limited by the number of the members.

NATHAN K. CLOUGH.

MEMBER OF THE FIRST TOWN COUNCIL. PROSECUTING
ATTORNEY, 1814-1821. BORN 1778—DIED 1852.

Resolutions of the Bar of Scioto County, Ohio, at the Last Court Under the Old Constitution, September, 1851.

S. M. Tracy moved the Court that the following be entered upon the Journal of the Court as the last act of the Court.

To the Honorable William V. Peck, President Judge, Samuel Crull, Edward Cranston and Jacob P. Noel, associate Judges of the Court of Common Pleas of Scioto County.

The undersigned members of the Bar and officers of said Court, respectfully request, in view of the final adjournment of this Court and of the termination of the present Judicial system, to put upon your Records an expression of our sentiments.

Judge Crull has with short intervals been upon the Bench for forty-three years. He has served with every President Judge except one. His early brethren are all gone. Few of the lawyers who first practiced before him are now alive. Not one of them is here. When he looks at the present Bar, he sees a majority who do not number as many years of life as he does of official service. The other members of the Bench have served comparatively a short time.

With each of you the most friendly relations have ever existed. The Bench under your administration has enjoyed our full confidence, and that confidence has enabled us to discharge harmoniously and satisfactorily the various and complicated duties growing out of our official and professional relations and each individual member of the Court retires from the Bench with our hearty approbation of his judicious course and our warmest wish for his welfare and happiness.

Charles Oscar Tracy,	R. Ramsey,	J. R. Turner, Clerk,
S. M. Tracy,	E. Glover,	C. P. Chandler, Ex-Sheriff.
W. A. Hutchins,	E. W. Jordan,	Enos Gunn, Sheriff,
A. Crichton, Jr.,	George Johnson,	George O. Newman.
George Turner,	O. F. Moore,

And thereupon the foregoing is by the Court ordered to be entered upon the Journal Record. And it is further ordered that this Court adjourn without day.

On November 21, 1885, at a bar meeting on account of the death of Col. O. F. Moore, Mr. Hutchins said, "I located in Portsmouth December 21, 1841. At that time John E. Hanna was presiding judge, Richard Tomlin, Samuel Crull, Abijah Batterson were Associate Judges. The members of the bar were Samuel M. and Charles O. Tracy, Wm. V. Peck, Edward Hamilton, Archibald Hamilton, Richard H. Tomlin, Major D. F. Heaton, H. Goodwin Blinn, Benjamin Ramsey, Oscar F. Moore, and myself. Since that time there became members of the bar, Geo. Johnson, El. B. Cone, Cyrill H. Bracket, J. M. Nelson, B. F. Conway, J. V. Robinson, Jr., Joseph M. Glidden, Elijah Glover, J. M. Whitney, John W. Collings, Wm. H. Reed, Wm. S. Huston, Martin Crain, Henry E. Jones, George H. Gaffey, E. Jeffords, George Turner, Robert N. Spry and James S. Pollitt, none of whom are now living. Those who became members of the bar but removed from Portsmouth and are still living are: Edward F. Jordan, Thos. McCauslen, James W. Davis, Joseph McDowell, W. A. Whitney, John W. Glidden, James T. Douglas, Perry J. Dunham, J. C. Hughes, James Culbertson, John E. Harper, George H. Jones and A. T. Holcomb."

"When I made my first speech in court twenty-two of the present members of the bar had not been born, and the judge on the bench was but three years old."

BIOGRAPHIES OF MEMBERS OF THE BAR.

Nathan Kimball Clough was born in 1778 in Francistown, N. H. The name was originally Cluffe. The first one of the family to emigrate was John Cluffe, who came over in the ship "Elizabeth" in 1635. He settled in Salisbury, Mass. He had two brothers who came over soon after. The family is Welsh and can be traced to the Twelfth Century, to a Knight, from whom the title descended. Their coats of arms was a lion rampant, a lion couchant with a sword in the right paw, with a Latin motto, which translated reads, "Purity without spot or blemish," and the family lived up to it. The Cloughs were well known in New England for their integrity. Nathan K. Clough attended Dartmouth College and graduated in 1806. His diploma of graduation is in the possession of his grand-daughter, Mrs. H. P. Pursell, of Portsmouth, Ohio. He studied law after his graduation and was admitted to the bar in New England. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1810, at the age of 32 years. He soon married Clarissa Hempstead, daughter of Hallam Hempstead, Sr., and sister of Mrs. James Lodwick and Mrs. William Oldfield. He was the Prosecuting Attorney of the county from December, 1814 to July, 1821, when he was succeeded by Samuel M. Tracy.

On March 15th, 1815, he was elected one of the nine first councilmen of Portsmouth. The nine were elected without reference to terms and then they were to draw for classes, three for one year, three for two years and three for three years. He drew one of the three years' terms and was re-elected in 1818 and 1821. On March 14, 1823, he resigned from the Council. He was elected the first Recorder of the town and re-elected annually until February 4, 1820, when he resigned and was succeeded by Jacob Clingman. While Prosecuting Attorney, he received allowances to the amount of $100.00 per year. In 1830, his professional income was estimated at $500, per year and his tax on it was $4.00.

His first residence in Portsmouth was on Second street where Steindam's three story brick building now stands and his office stood on the site of the Zoellner building now occupied by A. M. Glockner. In 1830, he moved his office to Front street. In 1820, he had a partner in the law business by the name of Wilkinson. In 1818 he was a School Trustee in Portsmouth. The school was conducted in the Methodist Church and seems to have been a private enterprise. In 1830, he built the residence on Fourth street recently occupied by Dr. Arthur Moore as an office. At that time he advertised he had out $2,000 to $3,000, and wanted payment.

In 1826, the county allowed him $8.00 for defending the defendant in State vs. David Vaughn. The services had been rendered in 1824, and he waited two years to obtain payment of his bill. As to his history in the town Council, we have a few traces. In 1815, he was on a Committee to lease school lands. In 1816, he was on a Committee to report regulations for the wagoners for using the streets and alleys with their wagons. On August 20th, he was fined for leaving Council without permission. At the same meeting John R. Turnier and David Gharky were fined for being late. On September 17, 1822, he and Daniel Corwine were on a Committee to buy a town bull of John H. Thornton. In 1825, he was one of the health officers of the town.

In 1831, he was one of the Commissioners to organize the Portsmouth and Columbus turnpike. In the fall of 1833, he removed to Piketon, Ohio, where he continued to reside until his death in June 1853. He made the Portsmouth Town duplicate in 1817, and received $4.00 for his service.

He was a Presbyterian in his religious faith and was at the meeting, when that church was organized in Portsmouth. Mrs. Mary Barrow Clough, wife of our subject, died in 1869 in Piketon. She was a cousin of Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead and traced her ancestry to Sir Robert Hempstead, who came to this Country in 1820, and was one of the founders of New London, Connecticut.

Our subject had five children, three of whom lived to maturity. Dr. G. W. A. Clough of Chillicothe; Jane who married John Wesley Dunham, long a citizen of Portsmouth, and a daughter Mary, who died at the age of twenty-three years, unmarried.

In his political views, Mr. Clough was a Whig. As a lawyer, he was well read and did a great amount of business, but was prolix and tedious in his arguments. He was a safe and good counselor and possessed the confidence of the community.

Richard Douglas

was born at New London, Connecticut, in September, 1785, and came to Ohio in the winter of 1808-9, on an intended voyage to New Orleans. On reaching Chillicothe he came to the conclusion to remain there and he finished a course of law reading, which he had begun in Connecticut, in the office of Colonel Henry Brush. He was admitted to the bar in 1809, and immediately published his professional card in the Scioto Gazette, of December 23, 1809, as follows:

DOUGLAS

"Intends practicing law in Chillicothe, if he can get anything to do.
He intends to be honest, likewise."

He got something to do. In fact, he did a great deal before he ceased to practice law. Mr. Douglas stuck closely to his professional work. We know of only two or three times in his life in which his practice was in any degree interrupted. In 1812, he went for a few months into the military service under General McArthur, and held the rank of Lieutenant, performing the duties of quartermaster and chaplain of the First Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. He was a member of the Eleventh Legislature, which met December 7, 1812, and adjourned February 19, 1813. He represented Ross and Pickaway Counties. While a member of this Legislature he participated in the election of Jeremiah Morrow to the United States Senate. In 1831, he was nominated by the Whigs for Congress, but William Key Bond and his personal friends claimed that Douglas' nomination was unfairly and irregularly made, and Bond announced himself as a candidate also. As this would mean defeat to the Whigs, Bond and Douglas withdrew, and Governor McArthur was adopted as a Whig candidate, and was defeated by William Allen, who afterwards was his father-in-law. During his youth Mr. Douglas spent six years as a sailor in the whaling trade, and studied law one year before he came to Chillicothe. Colonel Wm. E. Gilmore says that he possessed such an extraordinary gift of seeming to know anything and everything, that no mortal man was able to gauge his real attainments. He was a great reader and had a wonderful memory, and was able to quote from all current literature and all the classics, both English and Latin. Colonel Gilmore relates having heard him in a temperance address to a hill-top audience, quote a page and a half of the seventh book of "Paradise Lost," beginning with the first of the book, to reach the lines:

"But drive far off the barbarous dissonance
Of Bacchus and his revellers."

He had a wonderful fund of humor, and could assume the style of most any of the well known poets or essayists; and in making addresses could use long paragraphs apparently quoted from English classics. His wonderful knowledge of the titles of real estate in the Virginia Military district gave vast trouble to many a land owner among his contemporaries. It is reported that some timid ones would not purchase any land unless the conveyances included a quit-claim deed from Douglas. He was a life long member of the Episcopal Church. In his personal appearance, he was short and stout. His eyes were gray, small and deep set in his fleshy face; and always twinkled with merriment. His brow and upper head were large, well arched and suggestive of intellect.

He died in February, 1852.

Joseph Sill

was born in Grandville, New York, in 1784. He graduated from Middlebury College, Vermont, and entered upon the study of law, which he completed by graduating from the Philadelphia law school.

He came to Chillicothe in 1810 and after the completion of one year's residence in Ohio, began the practice of law which he continued for half a century, although he survived a number of years after having relinquished his business.

Mr. Sill was an accomplished scholar. He ranked second to B. G. Leonard, of all the men who have practiced at Chillicothe, in his attainments in history, mathematics and the classics; although in law-learning a number have equalled and some excelled him. It was his habit throughout his very long life, to review daily some parts of his Latin and Greek literature, and work some of the propositions in higher mathematics.

A marked deficiency in Mr. Sill's make up was his want of confidence in his own powers. He would scarcely ever try a case unless forced to do so and then would seek the assistance of other lawyers much inferior to himself in learning and ability.

His conversation was often strikingly brilliant with genuine wit, and his frankness in the expression of his opinions was in marked contrast to his timidity in his practice in the courts.

Mr. Sill was very frequently appointed prosecuting attorney by the court, under the old constitution, and was elected prosecutor once after the adoption of the present constitution. He declined a re-nomination. He practiced law in Portsmouth, Ohio in 1821.

He was elected to the legislature in 1818 and in January 1819, offered a series of resolutions, which were adopted by the general assembly, and were the real initiative of the system of canals afterwards constructed in Ohio. He was an enthusiastic Whig in politics, and a zealous Republican and Union man after the Whig party became disorganized; but we believe he never sought political preferment from either party.

He saved a small competence only from his large practice; and when he became very old he exhibited a little, but only a little, of the avarice which is said to be the "vice of age." A notorious old dead beat who never paid any body anything, but was unknown to Mr. Sill, applied to him to rent one of his little tenements, and inquired what the rent would be. "Four dollars and a half per month in advance," said Mr. Sill. Dead Beat reflected for a while and replied, "I can't afford it sir. I will give you four dollars and a shilling, sir, and no more."

"Sir, you shall have the house," responded Mr. Sill; and he afterwards told his wife, he certainly was an honest tenant, whom he could depend on; for he counted so accurately what he could and could not afford to pay as rent. That shilling did the business. Dead Beat got in and staid six months, for which Mr. Sill, of course did not get one cent, besides having the expense of a "forcible detainer" case to incur.

Mr. Sill lived to the very great age of ninety-one; and died Nov. 25, 1875.

He was rather under medium size and weight. He had regular and pleasant features and expression of face. His eyes were dark hazel in color, and he had a curious habit of closing them while talking to any person. His hair was originally very dark, but began to turn gray at forty years before his death. He began dying his hair and kept it up the remainder of his life, and sometimes with ill success, almost equal to that of "Tittlebat Titmouse."

But he was an excellent and honest man; and may ill fare the one who wrongs the memory of Father Joseph Sill.

Edward King.

fourth son of Hon. Rufus King, of New York, minister of the United States at the court of St. James, United States Senator, and Federal Candidate for the Presidency in 1804, 1808 and 1816. He was born in Albany, New York, March 13, 1795. He spent his early boyhood with his father in London, England. Upon his return to this country, after proper preparation in a grammar school, he graduated from Columbia College. He finished his professional studies in a law school at Litchfield, Connecticut. In 1815 he came to Ohio and established himself at Chillicothe where in 1815 he was admitted to practice. In the same year he married Sarah, daughter of Hon. Thomas Worthington, Governor of Ohio. He was a member of the House in 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826 and 1827 and was Speaker at the last session. In 1827, 1828 and 1829 he was again in the House and at the last session was again Speaker. In 1830 and 1831 he was Senator from Ross County, but only served one session from December 6, 1830 to March 14, 1831. After his location in Chillicothe he soon acquired business and was very popular with all classes of the people. "Ned" King is yet spoken of by all of the citizens of Chillicothe, who were old enough to have known him personally, with positive affection. He did the first legal work ever performed by an attorney for the town of Portsmouth. This was on March 14, 1823 and the services were rendered in a suit of the Corporation against one Moore. He attended the Courts of Scioto County while a resident of Chillicothe. In 1831, he removed to Cincinnati, where he remained until his death and obtained a good practice in his new theatre of action, very steadily, and retained it as long as his health permitted him to attend to professional duties. In 1833, in connection with three other gentlemen of Cincinnati, he was efficient in organizing a law school, and was one of the lecturers in it the following winter; and upon the establishment of the Cincinnati College in 1835, he was appointed by the Trustees to a chair in the Law Department, but ill health prevented him from assuming this position. He was the father of Hon. Rufus King, who became a prominent lawyer of Cincinnati and lived to a good old age. As early as October 1834, he was attacked by a dropsical disease; in the following winter he went to the South, in hope that the change would benefit him, but he did not realize any advantage from the journey. He returned greatly depressed, and thence forward grew feebler until his death, which occurred on the 6th day of February, 1836. There was a great deal to admire in Edward King's ability and a great deal to love in his character. He was quick and acute in perception, of active and vivid imagination, abounded in good natural wit, was fluent and pleasant in speech, graceful and often forcible in declamation and always gentle and polished in manners. He was generous to a fault, if that be possible; cheerful, frank, cordial to all acquaintances, high or low, learned or ignorant, rich or poor. No wonder then "that his praise was in all men's mouths." One little anecdote of him before we quit this sketch; "Joe! Joe!" called out King, one day in the court room; meaning to attract the attention of the very venerable Joseph Sill. "Well, what is it Ned?" replied Mr. Sill. "Ned?"—who the devil authorized you to call me Ned?" tartly replied King.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY SCIOTO COUNTY, 1821-1850.
BORN 1798—DIED 1856.

Samuel Miles Tracy

was born in Chenango County, N. Y., 1798. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1815. He studied law and was admitted in 1818, and in the fall of that year visited Portsmouth, traveling horseback. He was looking for a location to practice law. He had relatives in Portsmouth, and made a lengthy visit. He had it in his mind to ride on to Lafayette, Ind. He lingered about Portsmouth, visiting all the shops, stores, etc. One William Dailey kept a store in Portsmouth at that time, and had a pretty grown up daughter who assisted in the store part of the time.

Tracy found himself visiting that store oftener than any other place, but he could not just tell why. However, he had made his visit in Portsmouth as long as he felt it proper and thought he must be moving on. So he mounted his horse and started for Lafayette, Ind. Along the way, every day, he kept thinking of that attractive Miss Dailey. He could not drive her image out of his mind, though he made no particular effort in that direction. Every day he rode west the remembrance of Miss Dailey grew stronger. Finally, when he was a few days' ride west of Cincinnati, he made up his mind he was in love with Miss Dailey and would return to Portsmouth, locate there and marry her. Once he formed the purpose he returned to Portsmouth.

On February 19, 1819, he published his card in the papers, and stated he would be happy to attend to any business entrusted to his care. He announced that he had succeeded to the business of Judge Osborn, who became presiding Judge February 6, 1820, and served one term. Until he was married, Mr. Tracy boarded at the Portsmouth Hotel, of which John Peebles was the landlord. He was married to Miss Mary Dailey October 13, 1822. She died November 5, 1845.

John Collins was an Associate Judge of Scioto County from 1803 to 1832. He took a great fancy to young Tracy, and had him appointed Prosecuting Attorney. We find he drew his first pay in this office June 22, 1821, when he was allowed $33.33, or at the rate of $100.00 per year. Judge Collins was so strong a friend of Tracy that he declared that he, Tracy, should be Prosecuting Attorney as long as he sat on the bench, and he kept his word. Collins retired in 1832, and Tracy held the office as Prosecutor until January, 1850. He was appointed by the Court of Common Pleas until 1833, when the office became elective for two years, and he was elected every two years from that time until October, 1849. No record of the elections of 1833, 1835, 1837, 1839 or 1841, 1843, 1845 or 1847 have been preserved, and we can give no figure, but we are told he was elected without opposition. In 1840 Mr. Tracy received the regular Whig nomination as usual. Many felt jealous of him, and this encouraged E. W. Jordan, then a young lawyer and a Democrat, to stand against him. Jordan hesitated, but, being encouraged, finally concluded to run, and, at the election, Mr. Tracy received 933 votes to 901 for Jordan. The Whig majority was 350, and Mr. Tracy was the only candidate on the ticket defeated. Mr. Tracy was again a candidate for the same office as the regular Whig nominee in 1851, and was again defeated. This time the vote stood—E. W. Jordan, 1,434; Tracy, 731; Jordan's majority, 703. The Whig majority was about 400. Mr. Tracy felt much chagrined at this result, and justly so, for he had made a most efficient officer. In 1833, at Tracy's first election, he received seventy eight votes in Wayne township, to forty-three for Ransom Odle, a seng digger in the hills of the West Side. The persons who voted for Odle had sons who had stolen bee-hives and were prosecuted by Mr. Tracy.

In 1830 Mr. Tracy's income was estimated at $500; in 1833, $600; in 1842, $1,000; in 1843, $1,250; in 1847, $1,600; in 1849, $2,000; He was Recorder of the town from May 12, 1823, until April 4, 1834, when he resigned. In 1833 his compensation as Recorder was $30.00 for the entire year.

The lawyers' incomes were estimated from 1830 to 1851, and they were taxed on them.

In 1839 and 1840 he was Corporation Counsel at $50.00 per year. In 1837 he was a School Visitor, and served as such most of the time till 1853.

He became a Councilman in the town in 1823, and served till 1834. In 1824 he was authorized to print twenty-five copies of the Ordinances.

In 1827 he was Trustee of Wayne Township, and was elected to the same position in 1828.

In 1827 he was employed in the celebrated controversy about the Front of the Town, and perpetuated the testimony in relation thereto. In 1820 he and Washington Kinney were a committee to purchase the Front of the Town from Henry Massie. In 1839 he was a Director of the Commercial Bank, and in 1843, became one of its Assignees.

In 1842 he was a Commissioner in Bankruptcy, under the law of 1841.

The old Tracy homestead on Front street was built in 1833 by Jacob P. Noel, who sold it to Mr. Tracy, who resided there until his death, on December 25, 1850, of consumption. Mr. Tracy was married twice. His second wife was Mrs. Thurston.

Mr. Tracy was a gentleman very proud and always on his dignity. He was perhaps the best lawyer who ever practiced in Portsmouth. That was the opinion of the lawyers who were contemporary with him and of the business men of his period of active life. He had an influence in the county possessed by no other lawyer before or since. The juries always believed in him and he never failed to convict a defendant when he made up his mind to do it. The County Officers, during the time he was Prosecuting Attorney would take no action without his advise and would follow the latter in every respect. With the County Commissioners, whatever Sam Tracy said, they did. He was engaged in all the principal litigation of his time. Captain James W. Davis, one of the leading business men of Portsmouth, said Samuel M. Tracy was the best lawyer he ever knew or heard of.

He had three daughters and one son by his first marriage. His daughter, Mary R., married George Johnson. Another daughter married M. B. Ross, and the third, Emily, married Mr. Julius C. Guthrie. His son, Samuel, died a young man.

It seems Mr. Tracy never had any ambition to be a Judge or a Congressman, but was content with being the leader of the bar to which he belonged. We doubt if there ever was another instance in the State of Ohio of the same lawyer holding the office of Prosecuting Attorney for 29 consecutive years.

Charles Oscar Tracy was a younger brother of Samuel M. Tracy. He was born August 4, 1804 at Oxford, N. Y. He came to Portsmouth, Ohio in 1826 and located as a lawyer. He married Dec. 20, 1827 to Maria Kinney, a daughter of Aaron Kinney and had a family of two sons and three daughters. His son, Uri Tracy is living in Columbus. His son, Van Der Lyn Tracy, born in 1829, died a young married man. His daughters are Mrs. Frank Oakes, Mrs. Mary Camnitz of Goshen, Ohio and Mrs. Alice Hurd, wife of Colonel John R. Hurd of Colorado. In 1830, he built the home on Washington street just south of the German M. E. Church and resided there until his death.

In 1830, his income as a lawyer was estimated at $300.00 and arose to as high as $1500.00 in 1851. From March 6, 1830, until March 7, 1831, he served as Auditor of Scioto County, Ohio by appointment, but never was a candidate for any office. He left all of that to his brother, Samuel. In 1833, he was the Supervisor of the East ward in Portsmouth and received $3.25 for one year's services. He was an eloquent advocate, but a lazy lawyer. It took considerable to rouse him up, but once aroused, he was as good a lawyer as any at the bar. He was witty, eloquent, courteous and kind to every one. As an advocate he was clear, logical and cogent. He was fond of hunting and fishing and never was happier than when with a hunting or fishing party, and a three weeks hunt or fish was the acme of his enjoyment.

He often said that the only meat fit to eat was that killed and dressed in the woods, and eaten there. He had a fund of anecdotes apparently inexhaustible. Hon. James W. Ashley, afterwards Congressman from the Toledo District, was a law student under him.

As a companion, Charles Oscar Tracy was one of the most agreeable and entertaining of men.

Benjamin Ramsey

must have come to Portsmouth in 1837. The first notice we have of him in Portsmouth was in 1838, when the Ward Assessor found him and listed his income as a lawyer at $300. The next three years he dropped $100 off that and in 1843, he went up to $500, in 1847 to $800 and in 1851 to $1,000, which was the high water mark with him. March 11, 1851, he was elected Mayor of Portsmouth and served two years, defeating James M. Ashley. In 1851, he was elected Probate Judge, the first elected. He took his set February 9, 1852, and served till November, 1853, when he resigned. He then got on to a stage coach and went to Western Pennsylvania, where he came from. He was a bachelor while he lived in Portsmouth. He was a Whig but would not join the "Know Nothings." If he ever had any religion, it never materialized. As a lawyer, he was only moderately successful. He was a large man, lazy and indolent. In 1838, he was in partnership with one William S. Murphy, as Murphy and Ramsey. In 1842, he was in partnership with Hon. Wells A. Hutchins, in his first year in Portsmouth. The firm was Ramsey and Hutchins. In 1846 he was in partnership with Sterret Barr as Ramsey and Barr. In 1842, he delivered a lecture to the Franklin Institute. These are all the testigia he left in Portsmouth. He pulled out November 8, 1853.

Andrew Crichton

was born August 8, 1819 in Perthshire, Scotland. With his father's family he emigrated to this country in 1833 at the age of fourteen. Most of his education was acquired at Perthshire, where the schools—like those in Scotland generally—were good. At an early age he assisted in the Clerk's office in Portsmouth and remained there for many years with John R. Turner. In 1841 he was elected County Recorder on the Whig ticket. He had 1,459 votes and his opponent, Daniels, 1,058. He was re-elected in 1847 and again in 1850. In 1853 he went on the bond of Martin Crain as Recorder. He was a lawyer in 1845 and was taxed as such on an income of $500, in 1851 he was taxed on $1,000, his income varying between these two dates from $250 to $1,000. He was a practicing attorney in this county until he died on March 14, 1855. In ——— he married Virginia McCoy by whom he had four children: Miss Kate Crichton of Portsmouth being the only survivor. The work by which Mr. Crichton was best known among this people was the admirable methods employed by him in the Recorder's office. Everthing there under his care was a model of neatness and order. Any point which the records were designed to show could be found in a moment, and the information was always accurate and reliable. For many years after his incumbency, it was common for the older attorneys to refer to the methodical accuracy which characterized everything committed to the care of the Recorder's office under Andrew Chrichton.

Edward Jordan

was born in Messina, St. Lawrence County, New York, October 6, 1820. His father was Elijah Jordan and his mother Betsey (Frazee) Jordan. His father was a Baptist minister of repute for unusual eloquence, with a talent for many useful things such as cooper, watch-maker, carpenter, flute player and verse maker, by turns. As a boy, Edward Jordan had an unquenchable thirst for knowledge and was a great book reader. He at one time tried to learn the blacksmith trade, but found that he had no taste for the work. Having received the rudiments of an education, he concluded that the next best thing for him to do was to teach school, and he started out on a career for himself. He was very fastidious in his personal habits and was always neatly dressed. He had fine black hair and black eyes. He was always close shaved, and his linen was always immaculate. At that time he had a taste for athletics, being a good horseman, an excellent shot, and could row and manage a sail boat. As a youth, he never smoked or drank, and refused to gather with men in saloons, but was very fond of attending picnics, political gatherings, torchlight processions, barbecues, and demonstrations of that character. He was a young man of great personal courage. He came to Portsmouth in 1844 and entered himself as a law student with Samuel M. Tracy. He was an intimate friend of Ralph Leete, who was a pupil of Judge W. V. Peck. He maintained himself by teaching school. He taught at the old Red School House near Portsmouth, Ohio.

He and Leete were great friends and used to spend their Sunday afternoons together in Jordan's office, reading and criticising one another. James M. Ashley was with them part of the time. Mr. Jordan was admitted to the bar in 1846 and immediately formed a partnership with Edward Hamilton which dated from the 15th of February, 1846. In 1845, he was rated as a practicing lawyer in Scioto County and his income was assessed at $500. He and James M. Ashley at one time edited and conducted a Democratic newspaper in Portsmouth. In 1847, his practice was assessed at $400, in 1848, at $600, in 1849, at $800, in 1850, $1,000. In 1849, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County, Ohio, on the Democratic ticket, being the only Democrat elected. He had 961 votes and Samuel M. Tracy 936. The Whig majority that year was 549. Mr. Jordan had no expectation of election. Samuel M. Tracy had been Prosecuting Attorney for the County for twenty-nine consecutive years and some one induced Mr. Jordan to place his name on the Democratic ticket merely to see what could be done. In 1851, he was re-elected against the same competitor, receiving 1,434 votes to 731 for Mr Tracy. His majority was 703.

April 26, 1851, he was elected City Clerk. He had 223 votes to 207 for J. L. Watkins. In 1856, he changed his politics, before that he had been a Democrat, but became a Republican on account of his anti-slavery ideas. Between 1856 and 1860 he became an intimate friend of Salmon P. Chase, and this friendship caused his appointment in Washington, hereafter mentioned.

He removed to Lawrence County in 1854 and was Prosecuting Attorney of that county from 1856 to 1858. He took an active part in the campaign of President Lincoln and after his cabinet was formed, he was made Solicitor of the Treasury and held that office for eight years, serving from 1861 to 1869. At the close of his term of service as Solicitor of the Treasury, he took his family to Flushing, Long Island, where he lived until 1872, while practicing law in New York city. His partners in New York were: Grosvenor P. Lowry, William Mellen, Daniel G. Thompson. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church while in Portsmouth. During Cleveland's administration, he left the Republican party and became a Democrat again. This was largely on account of the tariff question.

He was patient and deliberate and nothing could hurry him. Ralph Leete says he could control his temper better than any man he ever knew. He was industrious and energetic in his profession. He was courteous to all and a good advocate. He was slow to form his purposes, but sure to carry them out. He had great force of character and good judgment in legal matters. On October 27, 1852, he was married to Augusta Ricker, at Franklin Furnace, Ohio. Their children were: Mary Augusta, Professor of English, Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts; Susan Elizabeth, now Mrs. George Dimock of Elizabeth, New Jersey; Emily, now Mrs. Henry C. Folger of Brooklyn, New York; and Francis who married Harriet F. Abbott, daughter of Rev. Lyman Abbott of Brooklyn, New York. Our subject retired in 1872 to Elizabeth, New Jersey, where he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Dimock until his death on September 22, 1899, surviving his wife eighteen years. He and his wife are buried in Woodland Cemetery near Ironton, Ohio.

James M. Ashley

was born in a suburb of Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 24, 1822, son of John Clinton and Mary Ann (Kirkpatrick) Ashley. His colonial ancestor was Capt. John Ashley of London, England, whose name appears in the second Virginia charter of 1707. His great grandfather, William, was master's mate in the navy during the Revolution. His grandfather, Rev. Benjamin Ashley, was a Baptist minister, and his father (b. 1800, d. 1855) was also an itinerant minister and a follower of Alexander Campbell. His mother was born in Alleghany City, Penn., in 1800, and died in Matamoras, Ohio, in 1861. The family, then consisting of husband, wife and three children, removed to Portsmouth, GOV. JAMES M. ASHLEY.

Ohio, in the spring of 1826. James M. Ashley was educated at home under the stern discipline of his father, whose rigor clashed with the spirited and fun-loving nature of the youth, so that at the age of fourteen he left home. He never received much school-education. His mother sympathized with her spirited son, and her letters followed him in all his wanderings. After leaving home he became a common laborer on a flat-boat, then cabin boy, then clerk of a river steamer. He later engaged in freighting on the Ohio, with a flat boat of his own. During his first voyage down the Mississippi he left the steamer at Memphis, to call on his boyish hero, General Jackson, at the "Hermitage," where he was received very kindly.

In February 1841, he visited Washington to witness the inauguration of President Harrison, and while there Col. Richard M. Johnson, the retiring vice-president, introduced him to President Van Buren and other distinguished men. Some years after, he again visited Washington, and was introduced to President Tyler and John C. Calhoun, whom he found personally a very pleasing man. He attended the Democratic convention at Baltimore in 1844, and through Colonel Johnson had a seat on the floor of the house with the Kentucky delegation. Beginning active systematic work as an abolitionist when but eighteen, he spared neither time nor labor to understand the position and tendency of every public man of prominence in the South, and also the exact status of as many of the men of intellect in that section who were not in public life as could be induced to answer his letters. These facts show how, through correspondence and personal acquaintance he was enabled later clearly to comprehend the power and purpose of those who menaced the national life. During his life on the river he saw much that horrified him with the slave system. In later years he used to relate how free negroes employed to work on the same steamer with himself would be kidnapped. At landing places where the steamer would stop to take on freight they would go ashore to help with the work, and would be arrested on the charge of being runaway slaves, and being unable, without money or friends, to make a defense, and no owner appearing, would finally be sold to pay the expenses of apprehending them. Returning to Portsmouth while still young he studied medicine for a time, and then drifted into the newspaper business, conducting a Democratic newspaper for a time.

The Democratic Inquirer was started in Portsmouth by James M. Ashley and Edward Jordan, two prominent Democrats. The first publication of the paper was April 6, 1848. They published another issue April 13th, and then the enterprise broke down. Neither of them had a cent of capital. Captain Francis Cleveland bought them out and continued the Inquirer as a Democratic paper, gotten out every week until 1849, when it became a daily paper. After the failure of the newspaper, young Ashley began the study of law with Charles O. Tracy and in 1849 he was admitted to the bar. In January 1851, he was assessed as a lawyer upon an income of $1,000 but it is doubtful if he earned that amount of money. However as the tax was only $5.00, Mr. Ashley, rather than admit that he had not earned it, paid it. On April 7, 1851, our subject was a candidate for Mayor as a Democrat against Benjamin Ramsey as a Whig and he was defeated. The vote stood: Benjamin Ramsey, Whig, 261, James M. Ashley 201, William Oldfield 97. If Judge Oldfield had kept out of the race Ashley might have been elected and his wonderful career belonged to the Portsmouth instead of the Toledo District. But it was "kismet" that the electors of Portsmouth were to make this mistake. If the citizens of Portsmouth had known of what greatness and talent Mr. Ashley was possessed, probably this would not have occurred as Ramsey was a man who attained no distinction whatever and he was too lazy to live. But this discouraged young Ashley with Portsmouth and justly so.

While in Portsmouth he became connected with the "underground railway," and at great risk to himself assisted a number of runaway slaves in their flight to Canada. In those days it was, of course, very necessary to be secretive about this; otherwise, with the state of sentiment that then prevailed along the Ohio Valley, he would have been sent to the penitentiary. At one time he met a Quaker on the street who said to him, "James, I think thee needs this," at the same time handing him $20.00. Knowing that the Quaker was of anti-slavery sentiments he came to the conclusion that this money was given him to aid in the operation of the underground railway, and thinking that if the Quaker knew of his activity in that direction many others must, he decided to leave Portsmouth and in 1851 removed to Toledo, Ohio, where he engaged in the wholesale drug business. From the first he was very active in politics. In 1852 he at first supported Franklin Pierce, but later seeing the pro-slavery drift of the Pierce campaign, he changed his mind and voted for Hale and Julian. In 1854 he participated in the first Republican Convention of Lucas County held in the Court House at Maumee. During the Fremont-Buchanan campaign of 1853 he delivered many speeches of remarkable ability and boldness, declaring among other things, "that there was no escape from a revolution that must end either in the destruction of the Union, or in the abolition of slavery"—thus anticipating Lincoln's celebrated declaration "that a house divided against itself cannot stand."

In 1858 he was elected a representative to Congress from the Toledo district, being re-elected until 1868. Mr. Ashley made a trip to Illinois and at Alton first met Mr. Lincoln and heard his last speech in the famous Lincoln-Douglas debate. A very warm friendship followed, which lasted until Mr. Lincoln's death. Mr. Ashley soon became a prominent figure in the Republican ranks, acting with the most radical Abolitionists, many of whom he had long known. During the first session of Congress, after Mr. Lincoln became president, he introduced a bill for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, which met with no support and was finally replaced by another bill, the joint work of Mr. Ashley and Hon. Lot M. Morrill, which was finally passed April 11, 1862. It appropriated $1,000,000, with which to compensate the owners for their slaves, but was supported by Ashley and his friends as the precursor to emancipation. He had no faith in compromises, but from the outbreak of the Civil War believed that the Union would be preserved. To that end his first re-construction bill was prepared in June, 1861, before leaving home to attend the extra session of Congress, convened by President Lincoln July 4th of that year; but his colleagues were not prepared for it.

At the regular session, December 23, 1861, he introduced a successful resolution instructing the Committee on Territories, of which he was chairman, to inquire into the legality and expediency of establishing territorial governments within the limits of disloyal states. On March 12, 1862, a majority of the committee reported his bill, but it was laid on the table. Mr. Ashley introduced a bill for the organization of the Territory of Arizona, and aided in securing a law prohibiting slavery in the territories. On December 14, 1863, he introduced a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States, abolishing slavery, but on June 15, 1864, this proposition was defeated in the house. On his motion to reconsider Mr. Ashley succeeded in converting twenty-four border-state and northern Democrats and secured the passage of the measure. On January 31, 1865, the 13th Constitutional Amendment was passed and of this vote Mr. Ashley said later: "I knew that the hour was at hand when the world would witness the complete triumph of a cause, which at the beginning of my political life I had not hoped to live long enough to see." On his re-election to Congress in 1864, Mr. Ashley was tendered a banquet, at which, Hon. Salmon P. Chase said: "To him, more than to any other man, do we owe the consecration of all the new states to liberty by irrepealable provisions of fundamental law." March 7, 1867, Mr. Ashley introduced the resolution for the impeachment of President Johnson, and on May 29, 1868, a constitutional amendment proposing the election of president by direct vote of the people. In 1869 he was appointed territorial governor of Montana, which territory, with Arizona and Idaho, he had organized and named while chairman of the committee on territories, but he remained only about a year on account of a difference with President Grant. In the presidential campaign of 1872, Mr. Ashley supported Horace Greeley and favored the restoration of all rights, dignities and privileges forfeited by the rebellion, claiming that by so doing the republic would be elevated toward heights of moral grandeur.

Mr. Ashley has consecrated his life to the cause of a race from whom he could not expect any reward save the gratitude and appreciation which he received. The colored people did everything in their power to honor him while living and to perpetuate his memory when dead, making a souvenir volume of his addresses. He left public life in 1870 with depleted finances, but observing that a railroad extending north from Toledo, across the peninsula of Michigan would furnish an outlet for about 300 miles of country, then largely without such facilities, he purchased valuable terminals at Toledo entirely on credit and proceeded to build the road north to Lake Michigan; there, with his eldest son, J. M. Ashley, Jr., constructed a fleet of train-carrying ferry boats, operating them to and from Gladstone, Wis.,—the first vessels to carry trains across so wide a body of water. This made the Toledo, Ann Arbor and North Michigan an important line. In connection with this great enterprise, Mr. Ashley again indulged his philanthropic impulses by schemes of industrial profit-sharing.

When the disciples of John Brown, who had encouraged him to make his raid on Harper's Ferry, all deserted him, Mr. Ashley had the courage to go into the midst of the angered south and visit the friendless old man in his prison, procured permission for the wife to visit the husband, and the tragedy over, asked for the body of the dead martyr and sent it north among the Adirondack hills. Meeting the stricken wife he said, with tears streaming down his face: "Dear Madam, Virginia has hung your husband, but Virginia will, some day, erect a monument to his memory, and his name will live among the martyrs of freedom and the race when all the rest of us are forgotten." Mr. Ashley was married in 1851 to Emma J. Smith, of Portsmouth, Ohio. They had three sons, James M., Henry W., and Charles S., and one daughter, Mary, wife of Edward Ringwood Hewitt of New York City. To his family he was remarkably kind and liberal, giving all his children college educations at a time when the financial strain was hard to bear; and in every other way he was kind and indulgent to an unusual degree. Governor Ashley died September 16, 1896.

Gov. Ashley always considered that his want of education was a very great handicap to his success in life. He never learned in school how to spell well or to express himself with perfect grammatical correctness. His mind was so made that while capable of long and intense labor on matters that interested him, he found it very difficult to do dry detail work of uninteresting sort, and for this reason he never made up the deficiencies of his early training. This characteristic followed him in business and in politics. His methods of business, while characterized by great foresight, and a large ability in appreciating the factors of enterprises of magnitude, seriously lacked carefulness of detail. He was extremely good at working out his own ideas, but had small inclination to put much time or study upon the suggestions of others. When putting up buildings he would plan them himself rather than invite the best skill of an architect. When moving the impeachment of Andrew Johnson in 1867, he put no time or study upon a precedent. It is quite in accordance with this general trait that he is reported to have been somewhat averse to manual labor when he was a young man, although considered very bright mentally.

Perhaps his most remarkable quality was the extraordinary courage with which he would pursue his designs regardless of serious obstacles. His railroad enterprise was prosecuted and over $6,000,000 obtained and expended by him on a very slender private capital. This involved him in very heavy liabilities and for fourteen years he was under a continuous financial strain. The failure of the railroad he had built with so much effort, after he had ceased from active control of it, was a very great grief to his last years, although he uttered no word of complaint. In social life he was a delightful reconteur having a very large appreciation of humor and loving to entertain his friends with stories and narratives that interested himself. If these had been preserved they would make no small addition to the history of the period in which he lived.

Joseph Mills Glidden was born June 1, 1808, near Northfield, New Hampshire. His father Charles Mills Glidden was a successful stock raiser in this state. He moved with his family to Scioto County, Ohio, about 1820; where he followed the same vocation until his death, which occurred a few years later. Joseph Glidden was one of a family of seven sons: John, who died in young manhood, Mills, Jefferson, Obadiah, Galusha and Dan, all of whom were successful iron furnacemen. Our subject graduated with high honors at Dartmouth College in 1829 and wrecked his health by hard study in his course. Directly after he graduated, he took a three years voyage in a whaling vessel and came home a well man physically, but his mind was never what it was before his arduous study at college. He studied law at Portsmouth with Judge Peck, was admitted to the bar of Scioto County, but practiced but little. In 1845, Mr. Glidden was elected Marshal of Portsmouth, but resigned December 5, 1845. He was at one time a Justice of the Peace in Portsmouth. He was married first to Mary Donaldson of Highland County about 1835. She died and left one child, Charles Henry, now living at Lincoln, Illinois. In 1844, he married Eliza Emory Young, daughter of Rev. Dan Young, who was so prominently identified with early Methodism in Scioto County. Eliza Young, his wife, was born near Northfield, New Hampshire, October 3, 1819, and came with her parents, when a babe, to Scioto County, Ohio. She was one of a very numerous family of sons and daughters. At the age of sixteen, she taught a country district school. After that she taught in a private family, the Pogue's in Kentucky. She began teaching in the Portsmouth schools in 1839 at the age of twenty and taught till her marriage in 1844. She began teaching again in 1852 and taught continuously till June 1878. She taught the colored schools a part of the time. She had the reputation of being one of the best teachers in Portsmouth. Of this last marriage there were three children: Jefferson, Kate and Flora, now Mrs. John E. Williams, all residents of Williamson, West Virginia. Joseph Glidden died May 7, 1865, at Portsmouth. His wife died September 29, 1881, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John E. Williams, at Syracuse, Meigs County, Ohio.

William H. Reed

was born on the South Branch of the Potomac River in Virginia, about 1810. His father and mother brought their family, a large one to Adams County and they settled near Loudon. There Mr. Reed was educated in the common schools. After he came of age, he went to Sinking Springs and engaged in merchandising. He concluded law was best for him and studied law in West Union under Nelson Barrere. He was admitted to the bar in 1846, and located in Piketon, where he very soon attained distinction in his profession. He was on one side of every case of importance in Pike County for years, even after he left there and located in Portsmouth, which was in 1863. He was most highly esteemed as a lawyer in Pike County. Every one had confidence in him and believed in him. As a lawyer, he was disposed to be technical. He could always make a good argument to the Court or jury. While in Pike County, he was a partner in the banking business of T. Sergeant & Co., which failed. He also took an interest in Pioneer Furnace, which turned out badly. May 17, 1849, he married Mrs Catharine Penn, a daughter of Judge Johnson of Hillsboro. They had one child, Charles A., who grew to manhood, graduated at Marietta College and studied law. His health failed and he went to Iowa, where he died August 2, 1878. Mr. Reed never obtained the confidence of the people of Scioto County, or Adams, to the extent he had obtained that of the people of Pike County. That was not however, because it was not deserved. Mr. Reed was not of a pushing disposition. He never went after business, but let it come to him. Judge W. W. Johnson of Ironton passed a high compliment on him. He told of him that when a certain enterprise he was in failed and the partners were sued and judgments were obtained, others sought to conceal and dispose of their property, but he never tried to avoid the payment of any obligation and let his property be seized and applied to the debts of the concern.

Mr. Reed became addicted to the drink habit in Pike County and it ruined his life. He had enough troubles to drive one to drink. He never told them himself, or talked of them, but his acquaintances did. He died at about the age of 68 and was interred at Loudon in Adams County, where his grave is unmarked. He was an honorable man and a faithful, able and honorable attorney. He was no man's enemy but his man. In personal appearance he was tall and slender, but much cramped in his shoulders. The top of his head was bald and around the sides of his head he had a fringe of brown hair, as fine as silk, and which never turned gray. His nose had a weakness in it, owing to an injury on his palace in middle life. Had he not for Daniel's pen picture of St. Paul in the latter's life of the Great Apostle, the description would not have been made true to himself. Mr. Reed was a Whig, while the Whig party was in existence. He afterwards became a Republican. He was never a candidate for any public office. His great strength lay in defending a cause. It was customary with him to file a general denial whenever it would be and to require the plaintiff to make full proof. If he failed to prove any necessary fact, then Reed demanded a non-suit. He was never a member of any Church, at least, not in his latter days. His religion consisted of his honesty and integrity.

William S. Huston

was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, January 29, 1811, the eldest son and child of Captain Samuel J. and Elizabeth (Lehman) Huston. He was reared in Portsmouth and received his education in its public schools. He was of a precocious mind and early developed a judgment in advance of his years. He was noted for his filial affection. His development early a faculty for making and saving money. The first hundred dollars he earned and saved he presented to his mother as an evidence of his tender affection for her. He studied law with Mr. George Johnson, and was admitted to the bar.

He was City Treasurer in 1841. He was practicing in 1836 and continued until his death except the period he was Probate Judge. He was elected Probate Judge in 1857 on the Democratic ticket and served one term, February 1, 1858, to February 9, 1861. He was appointed Regimental Quartermaster of the 56th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, October 18, 1861, and served until December 17, 1862, when he resigned. In 1863 and 1864 he was practicing law in Portsmouth. His health was never strong and he died August 27, 1865, at the age of forty-one years. Mr. Huston had great ability as a financier and had he lived he would have acquired a great fortune. The great and overpowering characteristic of his life was his devotion to his family, his father and mother and their children. He could never do too much for them, and he was entirely devoted to their interests. As a business lawyer he had no superior; but by natural taste he preferred the quieter walks of the profession.

George Ott Newman was born in Stanton, Virginia, November 9, 1836, the eldest of six children of his parents, Hon. William Newman and his wife Catherine Ott. In 1839, his parents came to Portsmouth, where he has ever since resided. He attended the public schools of Portsmouth and in 1853, entered the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and graduated in 1858. He entered the office of Moore and Johnson as a law student directly after his graduation. On August 1, 1860, he was admitted to the bar by the District Court of Morrow County, Ohio, and began practice in Portsmouth. In April, 1861, he was First Sergeant of Company A, 15th Regiment Ohio Volunteer Militia. This Company responded to the first call for 75,000 troops in the Civil War and became Company G, 1st O. V. I. It served from April 16, 1861, until August 1, 1861. It reached home 3 a. m. August 16, 1861, and every one was out to welcome it. Hon. Wells A. Hutchins delivered the welcoming address. Mr. Newman replied for the Company. Mr. Newman was elected in 1861 Prosecuting Attorney on the Democratic ticket, J. J. Harper being the Republican candidate. In 1863, the same two were opposed for the same office and Harper was elected. In 1868, Mr. Newman was the candidate of his party for Common Pleas Judge but was defeated. Mr. Newman was married September 1, 1866, to Miss Clay B., eldest daughter of Colonel O. F. Moore. Their children are Oscar William, a member of the Portsmouth Bar; Mrs. Kate Alger, wife of Edwin N. Alger of Huntington, W. Va.; Mrs. Fannie Shaw, wife of Edward H. Shaw, and Charles Russell. Mr. Newman is a good and well read lawyer. He is uniformly correct in preparing all legal instruments, a wise and prudent counsellor, and always takes the safe side. He has been President of the Portsmouth Library Board since its creation and has been a member of the Board of City Elections since 1880, its first organization. In politics, he has always been a Democrat. He is not a member of any Church, but prefers the Episcopal. He has fine literary tastes, and is popular with all who know him. He carries his years lightly. In 1870, he became a member of the firm of Moore and Johnson and Newman. After the death of Mr. Johnson in 1873, the firm continued Moore and Newman, until the death of Colonel Moore in 1885. Since then Mr. Newman has practised alone. In September, 1901, at the organization of the Portsmouth Bar and Law Library Association, he was made its President.

John Jefferson Glidden was born September 19, 1840, at Junior Furnace. His father was Jefferson Wadley Glidden and his mother, Catherine Wolfe Young. His grandfather, Charles Glidden, came from New Hampshire in 1820 and his father in 1826. There were ten children in his father's family, although but three lived to maturity, John, Carlos and Mrs. Anna Houts. His father built the Goddard house at Junior Furnace in 1844. There stands a magnolia tree in the yard which was planted there by our subject's mother in 1844. In 1850, his father removed to Dayton, Ohio, on account of the schools and lived there three years. In 1854, he built the present Peebles residence on the north-east corner of Second and Washington streets, in Portsmouth, Ohio. His father lived there until 1858 when his wife died of consumption at the age of 48. In 1858, his father went to Junior Furnace and made his home with Jesse Young until his death in March 1863.

In 1856, our subject attended the Collegiate and Commercial Institute at New Haven, Conn., for two or three years. In the fall of 1851, he went into the law office of the Hon. Wells A. Hutchins in the Massie Block, as a law student. He entered the Cincinnati Law School in 1859 and graduated in 1860. As he was not then of age, he took a post-graduate course in 1860 and 1861.

On April 16, 1861, he enlisted in Company "G," 1st Ohio Volunteer Infantry, three months men. He was made a Corporal April 29, 1861, and mustered out August 1, 1861. He was admitted to the bar in 1861 in Columbus and located in Portsmouth. He formed a partnership with Martin Crain, the firm being known as Crain & Glidden, which continued for two years. After that time he practiced alone. In the Spring of 1869, he was elected City Solicitor of Portsmouth, Ohio. The vote stood, John Glidden, Republican, 787; Robert N. Spry, Democrat, 736; majority, 51 votes. In regard to his election Mr. Glidden said that he did not ask anyone to vote for him and did not expect to be elected. In December, 1870, he resigned his office as City Solicitor and located in La Porte, Indiana, and remained there until March, 1872, when he removed to Cincinnati and began the practice of law and has continued it ever since. He is located in the Atlas Bank Building on Walnut Street. He has always been a Republican.

He was married to Mary A. Bell, daughter of Robert Bell, Esq., in October, 1862. They had three children, two of whom died in infancy. His son, Bruce, of this marriage, is now a prominent lawyer in Denver, Colorado. He was married to Elizabeth Montgomery, and they have one child. Mr. Glidden, our subject, was married a second time to Miss Ruth Hall Glidden, daughter of Obadiah Glidden, December 20, 1870. The children of this marriage are Ellen, the wife of Walter W. Clippenger, an attorney of Cincinnati, Ohio; Hope S., who graduates this Spring in the Cincinnati Medical College, and Ruth, who resides in Brooklyn and has charge of a kindergarten. Mr. Glidden has had distinguished success in his chosen profession of the law. He has assiduously devoted himself to it and has been connected with some of the most important litigation in the courts, and his reputation could safely rest on his conduct of two or more important cases. His ability in these shown has sufficiently fixed and established his reputation as a most able lawyer.

James Severn Pollitt was born at Tolesboro, Lewis County, Kentucky, October 14, 1839, son of Alexander and Elenor Pollitt. He had scarcely any education, but always thirsted for one. At the age of twenty, he went to Maysville, Kentucky and studied law with the Hon. Wm. H. Wadsworth for whom he always professed and expressed the greatest admiration and friendship. At 22 years of age, he was admitted to the bar and located at Clarksburg, in Lewis County. He afterwards moved to Vanceburg, the County seat, and was elected County Judge, July 3, 1865, to succeed Socrates Holbrook who had resigned. August 24, 1866 he was elected for a term of four years, to the same office. He resigned October 20, 1868 and came to Portsmouth and formed a partnership with William H. Reed which continued until 1871. He was madly fond of politics. Nothing made him happier than to be in a political contest. In 1873, he received the Republican nomination for Mayor. He defeated George W. Flanders in the convention. Flanders ran independent and beat him before the people. The vote stood: Flanders 972, Pollitt 867. In 1873, he was a candidate for City Solicitor on the Republican ticket and defeated by Duncan Livingstone. The vote stood, Livingstone 1,061, Pollitt 1,039. In 1881, he was a candidate for Common Pleas Judge and carried the County, but it was taken away from him. In 1883, he was again Republican candidate for Mayor against John J. McFarlin, Democrat, and was defeated by the following vote: McFarlin 1,361, Pollitt 1,129, majority 232. These votes in which he was defeated are given to show that he stood well with his own friends and that he was never discouraged or appalled by defeat.

His Republicanism was of the purest and most zealous kind. He never sulked in his tent. No matter about his misfortunes, he always supported the ticket. He always controlled the negro vote. They were his friends and stood by him. He had an extensive practice in Scioto County, and was something of an orator. He believed in exercising his gifts as an advocate, and did so. He was a thin, slender man of very dark complexion, black full beard and long black hair, and was a typical Kentuckian. He never could tolerate anything Democratic. When the Cincinnati Daily Gazette and the Commercial were printed as separate papers, he regarded the Gazette as Orthodox and the Commercial heterodox. He never could bear to see a Republican read the Commercial. He was fond of talking of his fixed principles. While he never swore a profane oath, his favorite, so called oath was "Dod burn it." His enthusiasm for his party never flagged, and he could not tolerate political luke-warmness in others.

He was honest to the core. He was a victim of consumption. A week before he died he proposed to go to Florida and take his son Orville with him, but when it was apparent that he must die, he called Orville to him and told him that he would take a longer and farther journey and go alone. He was married June 26, 1865 to Miss Lucy C. Parker of Vanceburg, Ky. They had two children: Arthur Wadsworth, born June 4, 1869, died June 28, 1871 and Orville Preston, born September 18, 1871, now County Clerk of Lewis County, Kentucky. He died November 2, 1885, with the greatest calmness and composure. He was buried at Hill Crest Cemetery, just west of Vanceburg, Kentucky, and his widow and her son took up their residence in Vanceburg, Kentucky, where they have remained since. James S. Pollitt's ambitions were not great, but they were very dear to him, and yet he was thwarted in them all, and compelled, when but 46 years of age, to depart to the land of spirits, but in all his reverses and disappointments he acted the part of a man. His was a noble soul in a frail casket, but his memory is honored by all who knew him well.

Judge Fernando Cortes Searl.

Here is a subject whose father, a great reader of Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, compelled him to bear the name of a Spanish general all his life and yet he has done well and prospered and in the course of his long life has demonstrated what the Spanish General ought to have been. Then our ideas of Spaniards in the course of years have changed. While we admired the characters portrayed by Prescott, when his books were new, now that the doctrine of humanity has forged to the front, the characters of the Spaniards have been relegated to the background. The name of our subject in its origin, in the far misty past was of Scandinavian origin. The Searls went from Sweden to Normandy several generations before William the Conqueror, and when he went over to England on his free-booting expedition, they packed their traps and went along, ready for fighting or plunder, or both. Our subject's great-grandfather came from England with a brother, Gideon. His son, Reuben was born in New England. His son, Nathaniel, father of our subject, was born in Middleton, Rutland County, Vermont, February, 1788. The same year the Searl family moved out of the house where Nathaniel was born and the White family moved in and Rebecca White, afterwards the wife of Nathaniel Searl, was born there in 1797. Her father, Abel White was a Revolutionary soldier from Steuben County, New York. He and his wife, Comfort, died in Scioto County, Ohio.

Nathaniel Searl and his wife Rebecca were married in Steuben County, New York, March 26, 1806, and had eight children. Miranda was the eldest of the family and was seventeen years older than our subject. The family moved to Scioto County in 1813, from New York, prior to the birth of our subject, who was born July 18, 1825, on the Searl farm, in sight of Chaffin's Mills, Vernon Township. He was a thinker and reasoner from boyhood. He would discuss matters with his father at the early age of eight years. So persistent was he that to get rid of him his father would send him to bed, as evening was always their time for discussing. His father was pro-slavery and young Searl would take the side of anti-slavery. He was an abolitionist at eight years and had reasoned the matter out for himself. He went to school but little till the age of fourteen, when he attended for three months. At fifteen years of age, he went to school for five months. He was very industrious and had a knack of doing anything. He could be a carpenter, blacksmith or machinist as occasion required. At the age of sixteen, he became a teacher in the public schools and began by teaching in a district in Madison Township, where his uncle John White lived. At the age of eight he read an account of the murder of Lovejoy in Illinois which confirmed his views as an abolitionist. He was not slow to announce his opinions, formed when a child, and there was an effort made to deprive him of his school on account of his anti-slavery opinions. He continued to teach from time to time until he was thirty-five years of age. He taught in South Webster from 1853 to 1859. In 1855, he tackled Kansas. He took a pre-emption claim but came home for his wife and never went back. He was an Assessor in Vernon Township for several years. He was Justice of the Peace in Vernon Township from 1849 to 1852, and afterwards in Bloom. In 1855, he began the study of law under Jordan and McCauslen. He had canvassed the County with Jordan for the Republican ticket. He came to Portsmouth in 1858, to accept the position of Deputy Sheriff under John L. Ward, who was Sheriff from 1859 to 1863. John L. Ward thought to make a politician of him, but he was born one, and the pupil was more apt than his teacher. In 1859, Deputy Sheriff Searl tried his virgin hand on politics. He was a candidate for Justice of the Peace in Wayne Township and defeated Cornelius McCoy by 65 majority. Squire McCoy was an easy subject but Searl's victory made him eager for more. In 1860, the Republican party was a weak and wobbly affair, but young Searl was one of them. The American party had been all powerful and held sway in Scioto County. Searl, Joseph Ashton and Milton Kennedy had stood for the Republican party when none others would. Searl was placed on the ticket for Probate Judge against William S. Huston, a popular Democrat and Searl was elected by a majority of 57 votes. The poll was, Searl 2,186 and Huston 2,129. John L. Ward, his political godfather was on the ticket too and was re-elected for Sheriff. On April 19, 1861, there was a great Union meeting at the Biggs House and Searl was one of the speakers. His devotion to the Union never waived. In 1862, he was a Commissioner of the Draft. On May 8, 1863, he was admitted to the bar. In 1863, Searl was re-nominated Probate Judge and the vote stood, Searl 2,273, Franklin Patterson 1,743, Searl's majority 530. In 1866, he was a candidate for a third term and was elected. The vote stood Searl 2,615; J. T. Douglas 2,158, Searl's majority 457. He was Deputy Sheriff under John L. Ward for two years and in that time was a member of the County Board of School Examiners and its clerk. In February, 1864, he went into the 140th O. V. I., as First Lieutenant of Co. F, and served until September 2nd. He was at home three weeks of the time to attend to business of the Probate Office and while with his regiment served as Judge Advocate on Court Martial. During the war he was Chairman of the Military Committee of the County and had powers equal to that of a dictator. He supervised the enlistment of volunteers and as a friend of the negroes, he believed in recruiting them for service and did so. He put them into the service and secured them bounties from $150 for single men to $250 for married men. He was a member of the City Council for four years and its President in 1876. In 1865 and for several years, he acted as a Government Claim Agent. He began the practice of law in 1870 to 1872 in the partnership of Harper and Searl. From 1873 to 1880, the firm was Searl and Dever and in 1880 it was Searl and Briggs. In 1884, the partnership was Searl and Milner and the same year became, Harper, Searl and Milner. Afterwards in 1890, it was dissolved and since then Judge Searl has practised alone. He was married March 12, 1884, at the age of nineteen, to Julia Schoonover, and had one son and three daughters. His eldest daughter Minta, is the wife of Rev. J. C. Vananda of Morganhill, California. Helen is the wife of a Mr. Fleming and resides at Cheny near Wichita, Kansas. His daughter, Mrs. Morton is deceased and his son, Orpheus A., is the postmaster at Sciotoville. His wife died August 1, 1876. In 1878, he married Catherine A. Shoemaker, and has four children: Clinton M., a lawyer in Portsmouth; Bertha M. Loyston, aged twenty-one, Beecher aged sixteen and Katie aged fourteen. Judge Searl is not aware of it but he is a man of many idiosyncrasies. He is a first-class poet. He wrote the "Shanghai Rebellion," "Ukawabbewein," "The Story of the Bald Crag in Kentucky," and many others. He can write poetry on any subject. He is a man of extraordinary good common sense and judgment and that is the Yankee part of him. He never belonged to any secret order but the Sons of Temperance which maintained its organization but a short time. In a newspaper controversy he is sure to get the best of his opponent. There is one remarkable characteristic of Judge Searl and that is, that he has always acted on his convictions. He was a Whig until the Republican party was formed and then he joined that and has adhered to it all his life. He never went off after strange political gods at any time, and his strict adherence to one party made him a political success. His excellent business sense has enabled him to acquire a fortune which he knows how to take care off. He, John L. Ward and Thomas T. Yeager are the only ones who ever went into politics and at the same time succeeded in business; but they would have succeeded in anything.

Robert Newton Spry was born at Norwich, New York, March 10, 1840. His father was Richard Spry, who located in Portsmouth, Ohio, July 27, 1844. He attended the Portsmouth schools and graduated in the Portsmouth High School. He then attended the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, O., for two years, but owing to defective eyesight, gave up his course. He enlisted in Captain John R. Hurd's Company in the Second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, but was rejected for imperfect vision. In 1862, he began reading law with Hon. Thomas McCauslen, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1864. He was Second Sergeant of Company E, 140th Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served from May 2, to September 3, 1864. In the Spring of 1865, he was elected City Solicitor of Portsmouth, as a Republican, over George H. Gaffey, Democrat, by the following vote. Gaffey, 468; Spry, 551, majority, 82. In 1867, he was re-elected to the same office on the Republican ticket. The vote stood Spry, Republican 732; Hutchins, Democrat, 651; majority 81. In 1869, he became a Democrat. On November 10, 1868, he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney in place of A. J. McFan, resigned, and served till October, 1869. In 1869, he was the Democratic candidate for Solicitor and was defeated. The vote stood: John J. Glidden, Republican, 787, Spry, 736, majority, 51. In October, 1869, he was on the Democratic ticket for Prosecuting Attorney against Colonel H. E. Jones. The vote stood Jones, 2,440, Spry, 2,212, majority 228. We give these votes to show Mr. Spry's popularity where he was known. On June 29, 1870, he married Miss B. Inez Davis, who survived him. They had one daughter, Roberta, now the wife of Edward Whitelaw of 106 Cannon street, Charleston, South Carolina. In 1871, he was the Democratic candidate for Representative, and was defeated by John C. Malone; the vote stood: John C. Malone, 2,518, Spry, 2,407, majority, 111. In 1873, he defeated William B. Grice, Republican, for Prosecuting Attorney. The vote stood: Spry, 2,534, Grice, 2,271, majority, 263. In 1875, H. W. Farnham defeated him for a second term for Prosecuting Attorney, by the following vote: Spry, 3,044; Farnham, 3,213, majority, 169. Mr. Spry was a well read lawyer. His pleadings were always carefully prepared and were scarcely ever open to motion or demurrer. For a lawyer, he wrote a readable hand. Mr. Spry's whole life was tinged with sadness. From his manhood he felt "the sword of Damocles," in the shape of consumption, hanging over him. He resisted its inroads for years, but at last succumbed June 10, 1877, at the age of thirty-seven. He was much liked by all who knew him intimately and well. He was of a retiring disposition, but there was no more agreeable companion than he. To all the lawyers who knew him, his memory is ever fragrant. He was a lover of music and his soul was attuned to its harmonies. He had a fine sense of honor and was uniformly true to his friends. The latter were always ready to do anything for him. If any one ever possessed more of the manly or heroic virtues, the editor never knew them.

Nelson Wiley Evans,

the editor of this work, was born June 4, 1842, at Sardinia, Brown County, Ohio. His father was Edward Patton Evans, who was then a lawyer practicing in Brown and Highland Counties. His mother was Amanda Jane King, born June 20, 1824. His father resided in Sardinia until April, 1847, when he removed to West Union, Adams County, to practice his profession. Our subject resided in West Union from that time until the fall of 1860. He went through the usual experiences of boyhood, enjoyed all its pleasures and endured its sorrows. As a schoolboy he showed a disposition to take life seriously, which has followed him ever since. In the fall of 1860, he attended the North Liberty Academy, and in January 1861, he entered the Freshman class of Miami University, half advanced. He remained in that school until June, 1863, when he enlisted in the 120th O. V. I.

He was made First Lieutenant of Company G in that regiment, and with it marched to Cumberland Gap, which was taken by capitulation from the Rebel General Frazier on September 9, 1863. His regiment was attached to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, under General Ambrose E. Burnside. He participated in the campaign in East Tennessee against Longstreet. On March 4, 1864, the regiment was mustered out, and he returned to Miami University, where he was graduated in June, 1864. On the eighteenth of September, 1864, he was appointed Adjutant of the 173rd O. V. I. and joined his regiment at Nashville, Tennessee. The regiment performed duty about Nashville until the time of the battle, when it was placed in the second line for the attack on Montgomery Hill. Owing to the first line moving the rebels, his command was only exposed to a dropping fire. Prior to the battle of Nashville, Mr. Evans was promoted to a Captaincy in his regiment, and during the siege of Nashville by Gen. Hood, and during the battle, was Adjutant of a brigade. After the battle of Nashville, his regiment was sent to Columbia, Tennessee, and from there to Johnsonville, Tennessee, where it performed the duty of gathering stragglers from the Rebel army, and taking them to Nashville as prisoners of war. During the time the regiment was at Johnsonville, Captain Evans was detailed as Acting Assistant-Adjutant-General.

At the close of the war, he resumed his studies of the law and in October, 1865, he entered the Cincinnati Law School. He remained there until April, 1866, when he was admitted to the bar by the District Court of Hamilton County. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, on August 1, 1866, and has remained there ever since. On September 9, 1868, he was married to Miss Lizzie Henderson, of Middletown, Ohio. He was a School Examiner of the county for two and a half years from 1867. He was a City Solicitor of Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1871 to 1875, Register in Bankruptcy of the Eleventh District of Ohio from 1870 to 1878, and a member of the Board of Education of the city of Portsmouth for ten years. He is one of the Trustees of the Miami University, and a vestryman of All Saints Episcopal Church.

For nine years he has been a Trustee of the Children's Hospital of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at Cincinnati. He has two daughters, Gladys and Muriel. In politics, he is and always has been a Republican. A friend who has known Mr. Evans since 1871, speaks of him as follows: "Captain Evans is one of the foremost attorneys at the Portsmouth bar, and has a large and lucrative practice. He is an indefatigable worker and in the preparation of his cases for trial, makes himself thoroughly familiar with every detail and fights to the last in the interest of those he represents. He is a good counsellor, a safe and a careful business and commercial lawyer. In his intercourse with his fellow men he is frank, open, courteous, accommodating and always true to his friends. His intimate associates like him best. Socially he stands high and his honesty and integrity make him respected by all."

Col. Henry Ewing Jones

was born at Nashville, Tenn., September 28, 1836. His father, David D. Jones moved to Portsmouth, Ohio, when he was seven months old. He was educated in the Portsmouth schools and then attended Dennison University at Granville, Ohio, where he graduated in 1860. He then took up the study of law with Hon. Wells A. Hutchins. In 1860, he was First Sergeant in a Militia Company at Portsmouth, belonging to the 15th Regiment, O. V. M. In 1861, he volunteered in Company G, First Ohio Regiment of Volunteer Infantry and was made Second Sergeant. He entered that regiment April 16, 1861, at the age of 24 years and was mustered out January 1, 1861. September 18, 1861, he entered the 56th O. V. I. as Adjutant. He was made Captain of Co. A, February 6, 1863. He was transferred to Co. D, August 8, 1863. He was detached on Brigade and Division Staff until May 8, 1864, and was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel January 18, 1865. He was not mustered out till April 25, 1866. He was appointed Colonel May 25, 1866, but not mustered. He was wounded in the first three months service, at Vienna. He was admitted to the bar in 1866 and January 23, 1867, formed a partnership with Hon. J. J. Harper as Harper & Jones. In 1867, he was a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney on the Republican ticket, but in that year of Republican disaster, he was defeated by A. J. McFan. The vote stood McFan, 2,560; Jones, 2,440. In 1869, he was again elected. The vote stood Jones, 2,440; Spry, 2,212; majority 228. In 1871, he was re-elected. The vote stood Jones, 2,542; Huston, 2,365; majority 177. On July 9, 1873, he formed a partnership with Hon. A. C. Thompson as Jones and Thompson. He was a well read lawyer, a pleasing speaker and an excellent advocate. He married Miss Harriet Timbrooks and they had four children, Edith, Gertrude, Henry and Wells, who was in the Spanish war. Col. Jones, died September 13, 1876, of apoplexy. His widow and one son, Henry have since died.

COL. HENRY E. JONES.

No man in Scioto County gave more to his Country than he, and he was as true a patriot as ever breathed. In every position he held whether military or civil, he discharged his duties with great ability and to the satisfaction of the public and those concerned. He had a constitution which would ordinarily have lasted him till the age of ninety. He was a large man, physically, and of great strength. Had he lived he, no doubt, would have attained as much distinction in civil life as he did in his military career, which was most brilliant as the history of his regiment discloses.

Samuel Gardner McCulloch was born March 6, 1839, at Bellefontaine, Ohio. His father was Noah Zane McCulloch and was the first white child born in Zanesville, Ohio. His mother's maiden name was Psyche Shuffleton. He attended the common schools in Bellefontaine and graduated in the High School in 1857. He went to Circleville in the same year. He worked there for five years as bookkeeper for W. W. Bierce. Before leaving Bellefontaine, he commenced reading law with Judge Lawrence and kept it up. He left Circleville in 1862, to accept an appointment in the Quartermaster Department. He served for a short time with the army of the Potomac. He was sent to Clarksburg, Virginia and served there from December, 1862 until February 1864, then he served at Harper's Ferry from February, 1864 to October, 1864 and went from there to Hagerstown, Maryland and from there to Martinsburg thence to Cumberland, Maryland, and then to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he was discharged. In August, 1866, he was admitted to the bar at Bellefontaine. In October, 1866, he located at Clarksburg, West Virginia and practiced law there one year and removed to Spencer, Roane County, West Virginia, and practiced in that and surrounding Counties until September, 1876, when he removed to Portsmouth, Ohio. While a resident in Roane County, he was Prosecuting Attorney and he was Deputy United States Assessor and Collector at that place for four years from 1871 to 1875. He was one of the five Commissioners of the state of West Virginia to the Centennial Celebration at Philadelphia, in 1876. In the city of Portsmouth, he began the practice of law. He was City Clerk in Portsmouth from May 1, 1881, to June 1, 1893. He was elected Secretary of the Board of Public Works February 12, 1901 and removed to Columbus, Ohio, where he now resides at 564 Oak street. He was married May 15, 1866, in Baltimore, Maryland, to Mary Ellen Middleton, daughter of Henry C. Middleton of Buckhannon, West Virginia. His wife is a lineal descendant of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Maryland, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Her grandfather was Henry O. Middleton of Fredricksburg, Maryland. He moved from there to Clarksburg, Virginia. He has two children: Samuel L. who resides in Portsmouth and Grace Carroll in Columbus with her father.

er. Mr. McCulloch is a Republican and a member of the Episcopal Church. He is a Blue Lodge Mason.

Robert Allen Calvert was the second son of George Washington Calvert and was born in Scioto County, June 17, 1837. He passed his minority on his father's farm. He received his education in the common schools and Wittenberg Academy at Springfield, Ohio, from which institution he graduated. Directly after his graduation he embarked in the grocery business with his brother, Frank W. Calvert and continued it four years. He bought out his brother at that time and continued the business for three years longer. He concluded to take up law as a profession and conducted his reading in the office of the late John W. Collings, of Portsmouth, Ohio. He was admitted to the bar in West Union, Adams County, Ohio, on October 8, 1868. He at once began the practice of law at Portsmouth where he has since resided.

On June 17, 1862, he was married to Martha Jane, daughter of John D. Clark, of Clark County, Ohio. They had five children: Cosette, the wife of W. S. Todd of Cincinnati, Ohio; Robert Emerson, Ralph Waldo, Bertha and Forest W., who died at the age of eight and one-half years.

In the fall of 1872, he was elected Probate Judge of Scioto County and re-elected in 1875 and served six years.

In politics, Judge Calvert is a Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Homer Wilson Farnham was born September 18, 1844, in Kingsville, Ashtabula County, Ohio. His father was Homer Wilson Farnham and his mother's maiden name was Clarice Griswold. They were married August 22, 1843. He attended school at Kingsville, Ashtabula County, Ohio, and at Ann Arbor, Michigan. He enlisted in Company "F," 98th Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry, April 8, 1865, for one year. He was honorably discharged June 29, 1865, with his company near Washington, D. C. Directly after his return in the fall of 1865, he came to Haverhill, and began teaching in the Public Schools, and taught there until 1868. He came to Portsmouth in February, 1868, and entered N. W. Evans' law office as a student of law. He was admitted to the bar in May, 1869. He became a partner with his preceptor, N. W. Evans, immediately after his admission to the bar, and remained with him as such until November, 1870, when he formed a partnership with Judge Towne, under the name of Towne & Farnham. He was appointed School Examiner in place of John Bolton, December 11, 1872, and served for a period of eight years. He was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County, Ohio, October 12, 1875. The vote stood Farnham, Republican, 3,213; Robert N. Spry, Democrat, 3,044; Farnham's majority, 169. He was re-elected Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County, O., in 1877. The vote stood Farnham, Republican, 2,722; William Waller, Democrat, 2,691; Farnham's majority 31. He remained in partnership with Judge Towne, and part of the time with Mr. Purdum until 1880, when he formed a partnership with Ryan & Ball. The firm became Farnham, Ryan & Ball.

He was married November 28, 1870, to Miss Carrie Boynton, daughter of Peter Boynton, of Haverhill, Ohio. They have two children: Claire, wife of Lawrence S. Robertson and Claude Cadot who is now residing in Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. Farnham died August 15, 1896. He was a good collector, a well read lawyer and a humorist. He excelled in the criminal law. His wit was bright and sparkling and he was always genial.

was born September 26, 1849, at Columbus, Ohio. His father was Daniel McFarland, who has a separate sketch herein; and his mother's maiden name was Lydia McCulloch. He was brought to Portsmouth, Ohio, with his parents when he was five years of age. In 1863 he was a carrier for the Tribune. In 1866 he was sent to the Military school at Dayton, Ohio, for 3 years. At the age of nineteen he began reading law at Portsmouth, Ohio, with Judge Bannon; and attended school at Lexington, Kentucky. He was a student there for one year, studying law. He was admitted to the bar, November 9, 1870. He began practice in Portsmouth, Ohio, and remained in Portsmouth until the fall of 1886, when he removed to Los Angeles, California, where he has since resided. April 20, 1880, he was appointed on the Decennial Board of Equalization in Portsmouth, Ohio. He was elected City Solicitor in April, 1885, and served until November 6, 1886, when he resigned. He was married July 28, 1877 to Miss Lily D. Larkins, daughter of D. V. Larkins. He was City Attorney in Los Angeles for three terms, or six years, from 1890 to 1896. He has a good practice and is regarded as one of the ablest lawyers at the bar. He has two sons, Daniel, born Sept. 6, 1879, and Hugh, born January 1, 1882. His son Daniel is employed at a railroad office in Santa Ana, California, and Hugh is a school boy at home.

William Waller, Jr.

was born March 3, 1849 in Portsmouth, Ohio. He obtained his education in the public schools of Portsmouth and studied law with Colonel O. F. Moore. He was admitted to the bar April 25, 1872. He practiced law all his life, with the exception of four years he spent with his father in the hardware business and four years as a clerk in the Post Office under W. K. Thompson, Postmaster. In 1874, when the School Board of two from each ward was organized, he was made its first Clerk and served till 1879. March 15, 1875, the Kinney Guards were organized and he was made First Sergeant. In 1877, he was a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney on the Democratic ticket and was defeated by only 31 votes. The vote stood: H. W. Farnham, 2,722, William Waller, 2,691. He was defeated by the treachery of his own party because of his temperance principles. He was a candidate for the same office in 1890 and was defeated by John C. Milner. The vote stood 3,825 for Milner and 2,495 for Waller, making a majority of 1,330. Soon after that he changed his party relations, becoming a Republican, and on April 9, 1895, he was elected a Justice of the Peace in the city of Portsmouth by the Republicans. He was reared in All Saints Church. He was Superintendent of Christ Church Sunday School for a long time and for some time prior to his death had been Superintendent of the Sunday School at St. Thomas Chapel, a mission maintained by All Saints Church. He was a faithful member of the Portsmouth Reading Club. He was stricken with paralysis on the evening of June 9, 1896. His left side was first affected and then his whole body. He only spoke once or twice. He appeared to suffer much and died at 1 A. M. June 10th. He possessed fine literary taste and was most companionable. He was a good friend. He was a strong church man and took great interest in historical matters. While he was not ambitious, he was a most useful citizen.

Theodore K. Funk was born January 30, 1848, on a farm in Champaign County, Ohio. His father was Jacob Funk, a native of Champaign County, where he lived until 1897, to the advanced age of eighty-two years. His father was a farmer and in the early politics of the state was quite prominent. His mother's maiden name was Sarah Long. He attended the district schools and afterwards attended the Collegiate Institute at Urbana, Ohio. In the fall of 1866 he entered the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and graduated in 1871, taking a classical course. On leaving college, Mr. Funk became a law student in the law office of Judge William Lawrence of Bellefontaine, Ohio, and was admitted to the practice of law in the Supreme Court of Ohio in 1873. In the same year, he located in Portsmouth, Ohio, where he has practised ever since. In 1884, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County on the Republican ticket, receiving a vote of 4,123 to a vote of 3,192 for A. J. Dever, making his majority 931. In 1887, he was re-elected to the same office against the same opponent by a vote of 3,512 to 2,289 in favor of his opponent, his majority being 1,223. He was elected Presidential Elector in 1892 for his congressional district and cast his vote for Benjamin Harrison. In 1893, he was a candidate for Congress in his district to fill the unexpired term of General Enoch of Ironton, and again in 1894, and though he received the support of his County, he failed to receive the nomination in both cases. He takes an active part in Republican League work and has canvassed his County and District during the campaigns for many years. He was married in 1874 to Miss Emma Kinney, daughter of Peter Kinney, first Colonel of the 56th O. V. I. He has five children. He is a Republican of pronounced character and is very prominent in state politics. In his profession he has been remarkably successful and enjoys a lucrative practice. He devotes much time to criminal practice and has engaged in many important murder trials. He is an eloquent speaker, an able advocate and a safe counsellor.

Duncan Livingstone

was born January 22, 1850, at Clinton Furnace, Vernon Township, Scioto County, Ohio. His father's name was Angus Livingstone, a native of Barr, Morven, Argyleshire, Scotland, and was born January 16, 1808. His mother was also a Livingstone by birth and her name was Margaret. She was born at Fort William, Invernesshire, December 15, 1807. They were married in New York City, September 5, 1849. Mr. Livingstone's ancestors originally came from Achnacremore in Benderloch and settled at Savary in the Parish of Morven the year 1600. His ancestors on both sides were staunch Jacobites and took an active part in the romantic rising of 1745 for Bonnie Prince Charlie famed in history, poetry and song. The Livingstones were a sept of the clan Stewart of Appin and quite a number of them were killed at the battle of Colloden. There, one of his ancestors, Donald Livingstone, rescued the flag of his clan by tearing it from its staff and wrapping it around his body. It is the only flag now in existence that was borne in the army of the unfortunate Chevalier. Angus Livingstone came to the United States in 1842, and his wife in 1848. They were engaged to be married long before they came to this country. Angus Livingstone on landing at New York City went to his uncle, John Livingstone, residing near Waterville, Oneida County, New York. From there he went to Cleveland where he sent for his mother and two brothers, John and Duncan. From Cleveland the whole party went to Junior Furnace where they located in 1845. The men went to working at the Furnace. Angus Livingstone had been a furnaceman in Scotland, having worked seven years at the Gartsherrie Ironworks, Lanarkshire. The brothers went from Junior to Ohio Furnace when David Simon was there. From there they went to Olive, where Angus was located when married. The whole party afterwards went to Clinton Furnace in 1849. They remained at Clinton until March, 1853, when they located on Dogwood Ridge on a farm where they afterwards resided. Our subject obtained his education in the schools of Wheelersburg from 1855 until 1868. From 1868 to 1871, he was a farmer. He came to Portsmouth, July 31, 1871, and entered as a law student with the late Martin Crain. On October 1, 1871 he changed his preceptor from Martin Crain to Nelson W. Evans, at the request of the latter, and with the consent of his first preceptor. He was admitted to the bar, December 2, 1873, by the Supreme Court of Ohio. He remained with his preceptor, practicing law till June 1, 1876; then he practised alone till 1885, when he returned to Nelson W. Evans' office where he has been since. He was City Solicitor of Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1875 to 1877, elected by the Democrats, and has never held any other public office. He was a Democrat until 1885 when he became a Republican. In the summer of 1899, he visited the land of his forefathers, remaining there about three months; and while abroad, also visited Ireland. On the maternal line direct, he is a great-grand nephew of Ewen MacLachlan, the celebrated Gaelic poet and scholar.

Though born and raised in a non-Gaelic speaking community, he is master of that language, can speak and read it as fluently as he can the English and takes a great delight in the language and literature of the mountain tongue. He is one of the first lawyers at the Portsmouth bar, and his advice and counsel in law matters are regarded as the best. He was never married. He has a wonderful faculty of making friends wherever he is known and does it without effort on his part.

Henry Clay Turley

was born in Scioto County, Ohio, January 10, 1852, the second son of Col. John A. Turley, who has a separate sketch herein. He was educated in the Portsmouth Public Schools. At the age of sixteen, he began his business career as a clerk. At seventeen, he went to Kansas where he was engaged as a farmhand and cowboy for four years. He returned to Portsmouth, Ohio, and read law under Jones & Thompson of that city. He attended lectures at the Cincinnati Law College and graduated with honor in the Spring of 1876, when he was admitted to the bar in Cincinnati. He became the partner of his preceptor, Judge Albert C. Thompson and remained such until the fall of 1868, when he was elected Probate Judge of Scioto County. The vote stood: 3,303 for Turley against 2,856 for Jura C. Fullerton. He was re-elected in 1881, and the vote was 3,445 to 2,359 for Hon. John M. Lynn. In 1885, he moved to Mississippi and settled on a plantation in Adams County, near Natchez.

In 1895, he moved to Natchez and in 1897 was appointed Postmaster of that City, by President McKinley, receiving the strongest endorsement for appointment ever sent to Washington from Natchez. In 1901, he received a spontaneous endorsement for re-appointment, signed by practically every business man in Natchez and the petition was circulated by an old Confederate veteran, though Turley was ever a Republican, but he declined re-appointment and accepted the position of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Pearl River District of Mississippi. In 1898 and again in 1900, he was the nominee of the Republican party as its candidate for Congress, in the Sixth Mississippi District, making an excellent showing in each campaign and receiving almost twice as many votes as the next highest candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket, but as the negroes were not permitted to vote, the odds were as five to one against the Republicans and he was defeated by very large majorities.

He was elected Republican National Committeeman for Mississippi in 1900 and was also a member of the State Executive and State Central Committees and was by unanimous resolution of the State Central Committee, made sole Referee of Federal appointments in that State. In February 1902, he resigned the office of Collector and directed his attention to his private business affairs.

James Martin Dawson

was born in Madison Township, September 4, 1842. He obtained a common school education. He taught in the country schools. In September 1874, he entered the law as a student. He was admitted to the bar in 1876. The same year he entered into a partnership with Nelson W. Evans as Evans & Dawson. This partnership continued until the fall of 1884, When Mr. Dawson was elected Probate Judge. The vote stood: James M. Dawson, Republican, 4,076, Henry McCall, Democrat, 3,243, majority 833. He was re-elected in 1887, receiving 3,454 votes to 2,327 for his opponent, John R Hughes, his majority being 1,127. In 1891, on retiring from the Probate office, he formed a partnership with A. T. Holcomb as Holcomb & Dawson. This continued until 1894, when the firm dissolved and Judge Dawson practiced alone. May 18, 1883, he was appointed a member of the City Board of Equalization in place of Charles A. Barton. From 1893 until his death he was a member of the Board of Education. April 18, 1880, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Wood, daughter of Benjamin Wood. They had seven children, six sons and a daughter. He died April 6, 1898. His children are Norborne, Earl, James M., Wiley Evans, Kline, Paul Henderson and Vinnie.

George Hereodh Jones

was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, June 9, 1855, the youngest son of David D. Jones and Margaret Griffith, his wife. He attended the Portsmouth public schools until 1874, when he went into his brother Henry's office as a law student. Then he went to Cincinnati, and attended the Cincinnati Law School in 1875 and 1876 and graduated in April, 1876. He was admitted in July, 1876, and began the practice as a partner of his brother Colonel H. E. Jones in Portsmouth. His brother died on September 13, 1876. In 1879, he located in Huntington, Indiana and took charge of the office of Judge James R. Slack, and was there until 1881. He was then appointed United States Inspector of Customs at Port Townsend, Washington. On his arrival there in the fall of 1881, he was appointed United States Shipping Commissioner for the Puget Sound Collection District. He held this passed for one year and resigned in favor a partnership with Hon. Charles K. Brannan of Port Townsend, Washington.

He was President, Secretary of all the Northwest Counties of the Territory of Washington. He was City Attorney of Port Townsend from 1854 to 1857. He was in politics all the time he was in the state, as a Republican, and was in all the conventions in the County and Territory. In 1857 and 1858, he was a member of the convention organized to secure the admission of the state and on the Executive Committee of that convention. In 1858, he was elected a member of the Congressional Committee of the Territory of Washington. He represented the Counties of Jefferson, Island, Clallam and San Juan and was on the Judiciary Committee of the convention and senate union. In this convention, he advanced the public ownership of land as the soundest and gave the name of "Homestead Jones." A number of the articles incorporated in the Constitution were prepared by him. He was a member of the School Board at Port Townsend for three years from 1861 to 1864, and its President for one year.

He was Captain and Major in the First Marine and served in the field on several occasions. He was Major of the United States Knights at Trillium. He was received the nomination for Superior Judge of Jefferson County, Washington, by the Republicans and the Democrats refused to endorse it. He declined the offer because he considered himself too young. At the time he was in the state of Washington, he was engaged in the practice of law. He was Chairman of the Central and Executive Committees of Port Townsend and the County of Jefferson for several years. He aided the convention to nominate William H. Kelley for President. He was a delegate to the 2d National Republican Convention in 1860. In February, 1861, he was appointed United States Attorney in the Department at Seattle to represent the government in taking evidence of claims against it on account of Indian depredations on all the territory west of the Mississippi. He continued the work March, 1862.

He was offered inducements to settle in the native state and in the Spring of 1862, purchased a tract of 100 acres, Chino. He has an office at 125 South Walling. In June 1862, he formed a partnership with Hon. Charles Henry, lately Secretary of State in Iowa and Kansas. He was married October 27, 1862, to Ada B. Frost, daughter of Captain C. M. Frost and Mary C. Jordan, his wife. He is General Counsel of the Marysville Assurance Company whose principal office is in Columbia, Ohio, and is Special Counsel for the Columbia, New Albany and Indianapolis Eastern Company. He has one of the best minds for the legal profession, the referee goes because familiar with the intricacies of a lawyer. His great forte is the investigation of facts. His keen insight, thoroughness and consistency and when done he has good judgment as to the results to be expected. He is a hard worker and never tires when he has concluded the investigation of a case or knows all there is in it for his side and for the other side too. He is a safe and wise counsel and a clear and forceful advocate.

Isaac Jefferson Haney was born 1848, in Harrison Township, Scioto County. His father was Isaac Haney, and his mother's maiden name was Rebecca Procter. Both were natives of Kanawha County, W. Va. His grandfather Haney came from Germany. His father could not speak English until after he was twenty-one years of age. His parents emigrated to Scioto County and settled on Long Run, two miles west of Harrisonville. Our subject had only a common school education. At the age of seventeen he quit school and worked on the farm for four years. He then attended school for six months and began teaching. He taught for six years, and worked on his father's farm during the summers. At the age of twenty-seven, he began the study of law with Ex-Judge Martin Cram. He studied with him one year and then returned to farming, but kept up his studies of law at home. He was admitted to the bar in 1877, at Jackson, Ohio. Most of his education was obtained at home, both in school books and in law. He began the practice of law in 1877 with Martin Cram. He practiced for three years, and then went home and practiced law as opportunity afforded. He remained on the farm until 1892. He then removed to Harrisonville and lived there one year. In 1893, he removed to Portsmouth, where he has since resided. He resides at No. 1,453 Summit Street, and has his office there. He was married October 29, 1885, to Addie Bowyer, daughter of Wesley Bowyer. They have one child, Grace, aged fourteen years. He was a Democrat until 1855, when he became a Republican on account of the tariff question. He was elected Justice of the Peace of Clay Township in 1898, and served one year, when the territory in which he resided was annexed to Portsmouth and he gave up his office. When he was six years old, he fell from a fence and injured his hip. He walked with crutches until he was fourteen years of age, and since then has been permanently lame.

James Pursell Purdum was born September 24, 1856, in Portsmouth, Ohio. His father was John W. Purdum, a native of Cumberland County, Maryland, but a resident of Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1832 until his death in 1900; his mother was Sarah Pursell, a native of England and daughter of Charles Pursell.

His education was acquired in the Public Schools of Portsmouth, Ohio, and the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio. He began the study of law in 1876, and was admitted to the bar before the Supreme Court of Ohio, March 4, 1878. He commenced the practice of his profession in Portsmouth at once, and went into the firm of Towne, Farnham & Purdum where he remained until September, 1881; since which time he has practiced alone. He was Clerk of the Board of Education from 1878 to 1881 and City Solicitor from 1881 to 1885. He has held no other office except that of Clerk of the City Board of Elections, 1880 and 1890, to which he was appointed by Governor Foraker. He is a Republican in politics; a member of the First Presbyterian Church, and a Mason and Knight Templar. He was married May 11, 1887, to Miss Louise Davey, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Henry) Davey, (both deceased), of Ironton, Ohio. He has the following children: Helen, Sarah, Mary Louise, Margaret Cornelia, Mildred, Alice and John W.

George Drake Scudder was born January 17, 1856 in Trenton, New Jersey. He was the son of Edward Wallace Scudder and Mary Louisa (Drake) Scudder, his wife. The Scudder family came to this country at or near the time of the landing from the Mayflower and settled in Massachusetts, where many of the family still reside. Subsequently a part of the family removed to Long Island, and from there Richard Scudder the ancestor of the subject of this sketch, moved about 1730 to a farm on the banks of the Delaware river, a few miles north of Trenton. A paternal ancestor of George D. Scudder acted as guide to Washington's army the night before the battle of Trenton. Edward W. Scudder the father, was a member of the Senate of New Jersey, President of that body for one year, and in 1860 was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, which position he held until the day of his death in 1893.

Mary Louisa Drake was the daughter of George K. Drake, who was also a Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey for seven years. The mother of Mary Louisa Drake was a Halsey. The old Halsey homestead is still standing in the southern part of England, and the head of the family, Mr. Thomas Halsey is now, and has been for many years, a member of the House of Commons.

George D. Scudder received his early education at the State Model School, Trenton, New Jersey. In the fall of 1872, he entered Princeton College, from which institution he graduated in 1876 with the degree of A. B. In 1879 he received the degree of A. M. from the same institution. He began the study of law in 1876, and was admitted to the bar of New Jersey in 1879 as an attorney-at-law and in 1882, upon examination, was admitted to the degree of counsellor at law. He practiced law in the City of Trenton, New Jersey from 1879 until 1893. November 20, 1870, in Portsmouth, Ohio, he was married to Harriet Helen, daughter of Charles A. M. Damarin and Harriet Caroline Damarin of Portsmouth, Ohio. They have one child, a son, Charles Damarin Scudder. The subject of this sketch was for two years a member of the Common Council of the Borough of Chambersburg, a suburb of the City of Trenton, New Jersey. He was nominated in the Spring of 1886 by the Democrats as their candidate for Mayor of that Borough, but was defeated. In the fall of 1886, he was nominated and elected as a member of the House of Assembly of the Legislature of New Jersey. He served one term and declined a re-nomination. Afterwards, by appointment of the Court, he served for a short time as Prosecuting Attorney of the County of Mercer, New Jersey. Owing to ill health, he was obliged to give up business in 1893, and after spending some months traveling in Europe, settled in Portsmouth, Ohio, where he has since resided. He was admitted to the practice of law in Ohio in 1897. At the time of the nomination of Mr. Bryan for the Presidency, Mr. Scudder, being opposed to free silver, withdrew from the Democratic party, and became a Republican, although not taking any active part in politics. At the age of twenty, Mr. Scudder became a member of the Third Presbyterian Church of Trenton. In 1886, he helped to organize a new church in the outskirts of Trenton, called the Bethany Presbyterian Church, of which he was a trustee and a ruling elder until his removal to Ohio, in 1893. On coming to Ohio, he, with his family united with the First Presbyterian Church at Portsmouth, Ohio, and he was shortly afterwards elected an elder of that church. He is also Superintendent of the Sabbath School. Mr. Scudder has twice represented his Presbytery in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

John Kelvey Richards was born at Ironton, Lawrence County, Ohio, March 15, 1856. His father was Samuel Richards, born near Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1814, and died at Ironton, Ohio, June 30, 1891. His father located in Jefferson County, Ohio, in 1824, and Lawrence County in 1840. He was one of the founders of Ironton, being for nearly thirty years the Secretary and General Manager of the Ohio Iron and Coal Company and the Iron Railroad Company, the two corporations which laid out and built up that town. His mother's maiden name was Sarah Ann Kelvey, who was born in West Union, Adams County, Ohio, October 9, 1827. She married Samuel Richards at Burlington, Ohio, September 15, 1852, and died at Ironton, Ohio, September 1, 1863. She was the granddaughter of Thomas Kelvey, who was born October 1, 1763, married (July 18, 1785) Ann Secker, said to be a niece of Thomas Secker, Archbishop of Canterbury, and who came to America about 1801. Thomas Kelvey was of Scottish origin, the name being originally McKelvey. Thomas Kelvey was a man of education and means. He located in West Union in 1831, and in Burlington, Lawrence County, in 1838.

Mr. Richards graduated from the Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania in 1875; graduated from Harvard College in 1877; studied law and was admitted to the bar, October, 1879. He was Prosecuting Attorney of Lawrence County from 1880 to 1882. He was City Solicitor tor of Ironton from 1885 to 1889; Master Commissioner in the Cincinnati & Eastern Railway case in 1885. In 1882 and 1883 he was engaged in the practice of law in Portsmouth, Ohio, as a partner of Hon. J. J. Harper. The style of the firm was Harper & Richards. Mr. Richards during his residence in Portsmouth satisfied the members of the local bar that he was one of the ablest lawyers of his age in the State. He was State Senator from the Eighth Ohio District, composed of Lawrence, Gallia, Meigs and Vinton Counties, from 1890 to 1892; Attorney General of Ohio during Governor McKinley's administration, 1892 to 1896; a member of the Commission to Codify the Insurance Laws of Ohio, 1895 to 1896; of the Second General Assembly of Ohio, in 1896; Special Counsel of the State Board of Appraisers and Assessors of Ohio, 1896 to 1898; General Counsel of the State Board of Medical Registrations and Examination of Ohio, 1896 to 1898. Solicitor General of the United States from July 1, 1897, to the present time. He was married June 12, 1890, to Anna Willard Steece, of Ironton, Ohio. They have two children: John Kelvey, jr., born at Ironton, April 20, 1891, and Anna Christine, born at Columbus, September 29, 1894.

Mr. Richards is an ardent Republican and has taken an active part in politics since leaving college. He has been a member of Ward, City, District and State Committees engaged in the active organization and conduct of campaigns. He has been a delegate to City, County, District, State and National Conventions. He has spoken for the Republican party throughout Ohio and in other states. On becoming State Senator, he made a study of taxation in Ohio, with special reference to constitutional limitations. The accepted opinion was then that, under the Constitution of Ohio, as it stood, nothing but property could be taxed for general revenue. Accordingly when several unsuccessful attempts, at great expense, has been made to amend the Constitution and enlarge the taxing power, he took the position that no amendment was required, that rights, privileges, franchises and occupations could be taxed under the Constitution as it stood. These views have since been embodied in our tax laws, which have added largely to the revenues of the State and have been sustained by the highest courts. Among these are the laws levying taxes upon foreign corporations, upon telegraph, telephone and express companies, upon railroad, street railway, electric light, gas, water, pipe line and similar corporations, upon sleeping car companies, upon freight line and equipment companies, in fact practically upon all corporations, foreign and domestic, of a quasi public nature, enjoying peculiar franchises.

In addition to drafting and sustaining these laws, Mr. Richards drafted the present election laws of Ohio, a modification of the Australian ballot system and sustained them in the courts. He drew the present law relating to the practice of medicine in Ohio, and as the counsel of the State Medical Board maintained its validity in the courts.

He sustained the constitutionality of the Compulsory Education law of Ohio in the Supreme Court, and subsequently redrafted the law, putting it in its present form. As Solicitor General, he is the representative of the Government before the Supreme Court of the United States and has argued the more important cases which have been submitted to that court during the present administration. In doing this, he has had to meet the leaders of the bar from every section of the country, but has been no less fortunate in the results, than he was as Attorney General of Ohio.

Notable among these cases are the Joint Traffic Association case (171 U. S. 505) argued for the railroad by Mr. Carter, the leader of the New York bar, Mr Phelps, Ex-Minister to England, and Ex-Senator Edmunds, of Vermont; the case of Nichol v. Anns (173 U. S. 509), involving the validity of the Federal Tax on sales at exchange, and board of trade, in which Ex-Secretary Carlisle and Mr. Robbins, of Chicago, presented the opposition to the law, and the Addyston pipe case in December, 1890, in which the Sherman anti-trust was first applied to an industrial combination.

Volney Reeves Row

was born September 17, 1859, at Portsmouth, Ohio, in the house in which he now resides. He is a son of Charles Cavalier Row and Lucina L Squires, his wife. She was a daughter of John Squires. Our subject graduated from the Portsmouth High School, June, 1876. He served a time as Clerk in the post office and for the Mayor. He began the study of law in 1876 under Moore & Newman, and was admitted to the bar October 3, 1883. He has practised in Portsmouth ever since. He was appointed City Solicitor November 6, 1886, to fill a vacancy by the removal of Charles McFarland. The next Spring he was elected without opposition, receiving 1,386 votes. He was re-elected in 1889 without opposition, receiving 1,342 votes. He was Justice of the Peace of Wayne Township from 1891 to 1894. He was re-elected in July, 1894, but resigned April 1, 1895. He was elected Mayor of Portsmouth on the Republican ticket, in April, 1895, receiving 1,686 votes against 667 for J. B. Carter. He was defeated for the same office in 1897 by Charles C. Glidden by a vote of 1,477 for himself and 1,742* for Glidden. Since that time he has devoted his time to the practice of law. He was married September 15, 1885 to Miss Caroline E. Doerr. They had one daughter, Mary L., and one son, Fred, who died at the age of ten years. Mr. Row's law office is at No. 314 Chillicothe street. He is a Republican, a Knight of Pythias and a 32nd degree Mason. He is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Portsmouth.

John R. Hughes,

Attorney-at-law, was born near Wakefield, Pike County, Ohio, the son of Samuel Hughes and Martha Ann (Sturgeon) Hughes. His Harwood first went west upon the farm. In the fall of 1858, he matriculated at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and was graduated Bachelor of the Science Course in 1861. In the fall of the same year, he began the study of law under Eamon & Anderson at Portsmouth, Ohio and was admitted to the Bar in 1866. On the 20th day of May, 1862, he was united in marriage to Jennie C. Chapman, daughter of Nathan A. and Grace Chapman of Twinsburg, Ohio. Their union was blessed with four. The eldest died at the age of eight and the two living are Oscar Elmer and Gladys Newell. Mr. Hughes is a well read lawyer. As a counselor there is none better. He is prudent and cautious in all ventures and makes it a rule to take the safe side. He is a business and commercial lawyer. In the national game he has been a Democrat, but being in favor of a Gold Standard he is not sure if his party is with him, but he is certain of his own views. He is a good neighbor and a good citizen. He enjoys the distinction of having given the first order for this work when its canvas began.

Harry Ball

was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, September 1, 1871. He is the son of the late W. H. Ball and Sarah A. Ball nee Barber. His ancestors on the father's side came from Schenectady County, New York, his father's brother having been born there, but his father was born in Jackson, Ohio. On his mother's side he comes from the Nation of Virginia, his mother's people having been in Delaware County. He has been bred and reared upon a farm. He was educated in the Portsmouth Public Schools, being a graduate of the class of 1889 of the High School. His father was a farmer and young Ball spent part of his youth time upon a wagon, working at the same time at the city and worked every day in the day of his graduation. After completing his course in the High School, he spent some time teaching school in Salem, Ohio, and in the public high school of the city. He read law with Judge Mark J. Dyer and Hon. Daniel J. Ryan and was admitted to the bar, March 1, 1891. He was Clerk of the Board of Education of the City of Portsmouth. In 1891 he was elected City Solicitor by the Republicans and re-elected in 1893. As the Solicitor of the City he discharged his duties faithfully, prosecuting several delinquent suits to judgment, so that he has given the city counsel that it did not follow. In 1895 he was elected Probate Judge of Salem County and re-elected in 1897 for a second term of three years. In politics, Judge Ball has always been a fervent Republican, and began work in 1892 in the famous Maine campaign. He has taken an active part in every political campaign since. Religiously he is a Methodist and has twenty-five years has been a member of English M. E. Church. On August 31, 1901, he was united in marriage with Miss Nora Morris, the youngest daughter of the late Stout Morris of Union Mills. Her mother, whose maiden name was Josephine McQuiston, is still living at the old homestead. To Judge Ball and wife have been born four children: Margaret M., Emily Hortense, Harry Morris and Richard Morris. The last died on the 24th day of October, 1901, aged about seven months.

George Merrill Osborn was born at Wheelersburg, Ohio, October 7, 1858. His father, Arthur Patterson Osborn, was a native of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, born September 2, 1814 and died at Wheelersburg, Ohio, September 18, 1887. His father was a tanner by trade and moved in 1840 to Springfield, Ohio, and in 1847 moved to Pond Creek, Scioto County, where he built a tannery for Smith and Davis and was employed there as Superintendent for several years. In 1858, he moved to Wheelersburg, where our subject was born, and took charge of the tannery of George W. Flanders. Soon after this Mr. Flanders was elected Auditor of Scioto County. Mr. Osborn bought the tannery and remained in that until 1880 when he retired from business. Our subject's mother, Elizabeth Way, was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, September 3, 1813, the daughter of Michael and Susan Way. Arthur Patterson Osborn and Elizabeth Way were married February 25, 1833. Their surviving children are: Stephen, Lewellyn, Arthur Patterson and our subject. There are seven deceased. Arthur Patterson Osborn enlisted in Company M, 7th Ohio Cavalry when only sixteen years of age, and served eighteen months. He then received an appointment to the Naval Academy through Hon. H. S. Bundy and graduated in 1869. He served on various vessels for a number of years and retired December 8, 1898 on account of bad health. George M. Osborn attended the public schools at Wheelersburg and took a course in the Iron City Business College at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, which he finished in 1875. He taught school ten consecutive years. In 1873, he read law with Hon. A. T. Holcomb for one year. In 1877, he returned to Portsmouth and read law with T. C. Anderson and was admitted in June, 1887. He was appointed County School Examiner in 1885 and served until 1891. He served five years as a Trustee of Porter Township from 1886 to 1891, and was a member of the Wheelersburg School Board for three years, from 1888 to 1891. He was a member of the Portsmouth City Council from 1896 to 1898 and again from 1900 to 1902; a member of the City Board of Health from 1894 to 1896; a member of the City Board of School Examiners since 1895, and of the City Hospital Board, since 1897.

After he was admitted to the bar, he formed a partnership with Mr. T. C. Anderson, which continued until he was elected Probate Judge and took the office in February, 1891. He was re-elected in 1893, and served until February, 1897. He was married, June 4, 1890, to Carrie F. Feurt, daughter of Henry and Mary Feurt. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, the Mystic Shrine, Knights of Pythias and the Elks. He is a Republican.

Samuel Miles Johnson was born November 14, 1853. He is the son of Hon. George Johnson, a member of the Portsmouth bar and Mary Ruth Tracy, his wife, a daughter of Samuel Miles Tracy. He was the second son and third child of their marriage. He attended the Portsmouth public schools until he completed the B course in the High School in 1871. He then went to Kenyon College and entered the preparatory class. He entered the Freshman class in September, 1872, and was advanced until March, 1875 when he came home and began the study of law. He studied one month and then went into the United States revenue office with General B. F. Coates, Collector and remained there until 1880. From 1880 to 1884, he was a Deputy under Marcus Boggs, U. S. Collector. In 1882, he went into the insurance business with General Benjamin F. Coates, the firm being Coates & Johnson and they continued in this until 1886, when he sold out to John K. Duke. He had studied law for one year prior to his father's death and began studying law again and was admitted October 9, 1890. In 1898, he was appointed Referee in Bankruptcy in Scioto County. He served until September, 1901. At the latter date, he was appointed Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the 11th District of Ohio. He was a member of Council of Portsmouth from the Second Ward from 1882 to 1884. December 3, 1884, he was married to Noreh Heron of Connersville, Indiana. They have five children: Emma Katherine, Heron Miles, Sherrard McCarty, Kenyon Monroe and Karoleene. He is a Republican, a Knight Templar, a 32nd degree Mason, and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth.

Henry T. Bannon

was born June 5, 1867, in Portsmouth, Ohio, the son of Hon. James W. Bannon and Mary (Smith) Bannon. He attended the Portsmouth public schools until the fall of 1885. He was a student at the Ohio State University during the ensuing year. In 1886, he entered the University of Michigan, taking the literary course, and graduated in 1889. During his college days, he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. After graduation he studied law under his father and was admitted to the bar in March, 1891. He went into partnership with his father under the firm name of Bannon & Bannon. He was a member of the City Council for three years and was its President in 1895. He was elected Prosecuting Attorney in 1896 and re-elected in 1899. He was married May 25, 1893, to Miss Jessie Damarin, daughter of L. C. Damarin. They have two children: Elizabeth and Louis Damarin. He is a Republican. He is a most indefatigable worker and aims to bring out of his cases all that is in them. When he does not win his case it is altogether the fault of the court in not being able to see it as Mr. Bannon does. He knows everybody and is very popular.

Oscar William Newman, son of George O. and Mrs. Clay B. Newman, was born at Portsmouth, Ohio, June 14, 1867. He attended the Portsmouth schools for the course of twelve years and graduated from the High School, June, 1884. He then attended Kenyon College and remained till the close of his junior year in 1887. He began the study of law in the Fall of 1889, under his father and was admitted to the bar in October, 1891. He began the practice of law in Portsmouth, Ohio, alone and so continued it until September, 1893, when he formed a partnership with the Hon. A. C. Thompson. This continued until November, 1898, when it was dissolved by the appointment of Judge Thompson as Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. Since then, he has continued his law practice in Portsmouth alone. On June 18, 1894, he was married to Judge Thompson's eldest daughter, Charl. He has one daughter Katharine L. In politics, Mr. Newman is a Democrat, and in religion, an Episcopalian. He is highly esteemed as an excellent young lawyer and bids fair to establish a distinguished reputation in his profession.

Arthur Hurd Bannon was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, on August 16, 1868, the son of the Hon. James W. Bannon and Mary Smith, his wife. He attended the public schools until 1884, studied under Prof. J. A. I. Lowes for two years, and in September, 1886, entered the Michigan University in the Philosophy course. He graduated in 1890. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1892. He is a member of the firm of Bannon & Bannon, attorneys-at-law. He was a member of the Board of Education of Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1895 to 1901. He has laid off ten acres in the Brushart Addition and subsequently laid off the Lincoln Addition of six and one-half acres, and has been engaged in selling lots as well as practicing law. He is an active, energetic young lawyer.

Frank B. Finney

was born November 10, 1869, in Vernon Township, Scioto County, Ohio. His father is Capt. Andrew J. Finney, and his mother's maiden name is Levina Wait, daughter of Benjamin Franklin Wait. He received his education in the country schools until he was twelve years of age. He then attended school in the city of Portsmouth, until he was sixteen years of age. At the age of seventeen, he went to work in a railroad and insurance office where he remained one year. He then worked two years as bookkeeper for C. P. Tracy & Company, Wholesale Boot & Shoe House.

He then went to Lebanon, Ohio, to attend the National Normal University, was there two years and graduated in June, 1891, in the scientific course. In October, 1891, he entered the Cincinnati Law School, and graduated on the 31st of May, 1893, and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Ohio on the 1st of June, 1893. He received a prize of $75.00 in the Law School for the best essay written in a Class of one hundred. Directly after admission to the bar he practiced there four years until 1897, when he came to Portsmouth and entered into partnership with the Hon. A. T. Holcomb. This continued for two years, when he opened an office of his own, which is located at rooms 9 and 10, Damarin Building. He was married July 11, 1895, to Miss Belle Burnham, daughter of Daniel and Jennie Burnham of Cincinnati, Ohio. He has one child, Frank Burnham, born December 22, 1899. He served on the Republican Executive Committee of Cincinnati from 1894 to 1897. He is a Republican in his political affiliations, and a member of the Methodist Church. He is a member of the Elks, Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Modern Woodmen.

Mr. Finney is one of the most energetic, industrious, tireless members of the Portsmouth bar. When he undertakes any task he will not fail in it, unless his failure is due to outside causes he cannot control and cannot anticipate. He is a diligent student and keeps himself well informed in all the literature of the law. He possesses excellent judgment of men and of the motives which control their action. He comes of a long line of honorable revolutionary ancestry and has inherited the good qualities of every generation of them since the Seventeenth Century. He is an excellent trial lawyer, bright, quick and resourceful. He is a forceful advocate and if he lives and has his health his ultimate position in his profession will be at the top. It is not safe to predict what Mr. Finney may accomplish, for he is likely to exceed the expectations of his most enthusiastic friends, and no one has any more than he.

Harry Ward Miller

was born March 24, 1869, the son of Captain Isaac and Ellen (Ward) Miller. His mother was the daughter of John L. Ward. He attended the public schools of Portsmouth until 1886. He then attended Prof. Lowes' school for two years. After that he spent eighteen months in the office of Colonel Floyd Smith and eighteen months in Florida as private secretary to the Superintendent of a railroad. In 1891, he commenced reading law with Harper, Searl and Milner and was admitted in June, 1893. He went to practicing and in January 1894 formed a partnership with F. C. Searl under the firm name of Searl and Miller. This continued until 1900. He then began practicing alone and has an office with Judge Dever. He was City Solicitor from 1897 to 1899 and a member of the City Council of Portsmouth from 1900 to 1902. In the Spring of 1902, he was nominated by the Republican party for the office of Prosecuting Attorney of Scioto County. He will no doubt be elected if he lives. He was married January 3, 1901 to Miss Anna McLaughlin, daughter of Robert McLaughlin of California, Ohio. They have one child, a son, Ward McLaughlin. He resides at 360 East Fifth street, Portsmouth, Ohio. Mr. Miller is well read in his profession. He is careful, prudent and conservative in the management of all business and bids fair to be one of the most prominent business men of Portsmouth as well as to attain one of the highest positions in his profession. The foregoing is from the editor of this work. The following is from another of his colleagues at the bar, who has had the opportunity to know what he speaks.

"Harry Ward Miller has succeeded and will continue to succeed, as well because of his intense earnestness, great industry and strict integrity, as because of his great natural abilities. Both physical and mental he is the prototype of his honored grandfather, John L. Ward. With Mr. Miller there is no hesitation, evasion or equivocation. It is either so or not so. He does not go to extremes. He is one of the safest of men. You can always tell where to find him. He never goes off on a tangent. In the language of the turf he is the kind that describes the safest and most trusty horse, "He can be left unhitched and found when wanted." True as steel to his trust, to his duties and his friends, firm as a rock, yet as mild mannered and pleasant in his address as a Chesterfield, using on all occasions choice and forceful language; generous to all, he is a man who could well serve as a model to his fellows and his friends so regard him."

Thomas Carlyle Beatty

was born December 7, 1868 at Powellsville, Ohio. He is the son of Robert Beatty and Armina (Remy) Beatty. His paternal grandfather was Reinard Beatty from Pennsylvania. His grandfather Thomas Remy was from France. Our subject is the oldest of three children. His father moved to Howard Furnace when he was three years old and worked in the mines there. At the age of ten, young Thomas went to work in the clay mines and worked there until he was twenty years of age. He had three months school out of each year but studied at home, and at the age of twenty he obtained a certificate to teach. He taught school first at Bonser's Run, two years at Friendship, two years at Sugar Grove and one year at Hogan's. He attended the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1891 and 1892. In 1891 he began reading law and was admitted to the bar December 7, 1894. He taught till May, 1895 and commenced practice in Portsmouth. He was Clerk of the Board of Education of Portsmouth in 1898 and 1899 and was elected Solicitor in 1901. He is a Republican and a member of the Sixth Street M. E. Church. He was married

February 27, 1890 to Margaret Appel, daughter of Theodore Appel and Mary Brant, his wife. They have two children: Charles Edwin, aged five and Howard Holcomb, aged two. Mr. Beatty is one of the hardest workers at the bar. There is no limit to his industry or diligence in his chosen business. He avoids every hindrance to success and will no doubt achieve it. He has a wide acquaintance in the county and has the capacity and ability to accomplish the most difficult tasks in his profession.

James Sheridan Thomas was born in Meigs Township, Adams County, Ohio, one of the youngest sons of George A. Thomas and Sarah J. Wittenmeyer, his wife. He has a twin brother, Professor Stephen S. Thomas, of Bloomfield, Missouri. He attended school in the district of his home and labored on his father's farm until he was seventeen years of age, when he attended North Liberty Academy for one year. In 1889 and 1890, he attended the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, where he graduated in the Scientific course in 1890. From the fall of 1890 until Spring of 1892, he taught school at Otway, Ohio. From the Fall of 1892 till the Spring of 1894, he had charge of the schools at Sciotoville. In 1893, he taught a summer school at Wheelersburg. He began the study of law with the Hon. Ulric Sloane at Winchester in the summer of 1892, and kept it up until the Fall of 1894, when he entered the Cincinnati Law School, and attended that during the Fall, Winter and Spring of 1894 and 1895. He stood fifth in a class of one hundred and fifteen in his studies.

He was admitted to the bar, May 31, 1895, on his twenty-fifth birthday. On July 1, 1895, he began the practice of law in the city of Portsmouth, where he has since resided. In politics, he is a Democrat, and has always taken an active part in political contests. In 1895, he was the candidate of his party for State Senator in the Seventh Senatorial District, but was defeated by Elias Crandall, the Republican candidate. He canvassed the district in the interest of his party. In the Spring of 1899, there was a special election to vote on the adoption of a new charter for the city of Portsmouth. This occurred about three weeks before the regular municipal election. He took strong grounds against the charter, and spoke against it in public meetings. The charter was defeated and its defeat resulted in his election to the office of City Solicitor in the strong Republican city of Portsmouth, where a Democratic City Solicitor had not been elected since 1875. He defeated one of the very best young Republicans of the city, Harry Miller, who was a candidate for re-election. He was married August 17, 1900, to Bertha LeFevre. As a lawyer, Mr. Thomas is very active and industrious. He is careful and painstaking, and bids fair to make his mark high up in his profession.

JAMES S. THOMAS.

Nathan B. Gilliland was born November 7, 1859, in Harrison Township. He is a son of Jacob G. and Mary (Baker) Gilliland. His grandfather, Samuel Gilliland, was one of the early settlers of Jackson County, Ohio, and was of Irish descent. Mr. Gilliland received his education in the common schools and fitted himself to teach, which occupation he followed for five years, from 1878 to 1884. He studied law at home while farming and was admitted to the bar in 1898. He was appointed Deputy Probate Clerk February 9, 1897, by Judge Harry Ball and is still serving in that capacity. He served as Clerk of Harrison Township three terms, from 1882 to 1884, and as Justice of the Peace from 1887 to 1890. Mr. Gilliland is a strong Republican and takes a very active part in local politics. He is a member of the Sixth Street M. E. church. He was married November 19, 1884 to Sina Monroe, daughter of Leonard Monroe. They have had five children, as follows: Mary E., deceased; Chloe E., aged fifteen; Firman B., aged eleven; Evan R., age seven and Hazel J., aged three.

Cecil See Miller

was born July 10, 1870 at Millersport, Lawrence County, Ohio, the youngest son of Anderson Miller and Elizabeth Wickline Miller. His father, Anderson Miller, has a separate sketch herein. He attended the schools of Millersport until he was 17 years of age. He then attended the Normal School at South Bend, Indiana and the Ada Normal School for a short time. He then attended the Ohio Wesleyan University and was graduated in 1896 taking the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then attended the Law Department of the University of Cincinnati, graduating therefrom with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In 1899 he received the degree of Master of Arts from the Ohio Wesleyan University. He was admitted to the Bar June 17, 1898, and located in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1898, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession.

Politically Mr. Miller is a Republican. He is a member and Trustee of Sixth Street M. E. church of Portsmouth.

Edward Jacob Daehler was born December 29, 1876, at Portsmouth, Ohio, the son of Frederick C. Daehler and Margaret Leichner, his wife. He attended the Portsmouth schools till 1895 when he graduated from the Portsmouth High School. In the fall of 1895 he entered the Ohio State University at Columbus, and was there two years in the English-Philosophy course. In the fall of 1897, he entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and took up the study of law exclusively. He remained there till June, 1900, when he graduated in the law course and received the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to practice law in Michigan and admitted to the bar of Ohio by the Supreme Court in June 1900. He opened an office in Portsmouth, Ohio, July 1, 1900, in the Spry Building and afterwards removed his office to the Damarin Building, 103 West Second street. He is a Republican and a member of the German Evangelical Church. In April 1902, he was elected a member of the City Council of Portsmouth and in its organization was made Chairman of the Finance Committee. Here is what his most intimate business associate, Hon. Frank Finney says of him, "I have known Edward J. Daehler from boyhood. Have been closely associated with him for some time, and he has been in my office for the past two years. He is a young man of correct habits, highest moral character, sterling integrity, and a forceful and wide-awake young man of superior intelligence, of genial, clever disposition, and possesses qualities eminently fitting him for any position of trust, public or private. He is aggressive, and though pleasant, always firm in the performance of that which he thinks is right."

Edward Garfield Millar

was born May 17, 1877. His father was George Bliss Millar. His mother was Ann E. Carre, daughter of Thomas W. Carre. He attended school at Lucasville and at the Ohio University in the years, 1892 and 1893. In 1893 to 1898 he spent his time on his father's farm and in the fall of 1898 he began studying law with A. T. Holcomb. He attended law school at Cincinnati in the fall and winter of 1899 and 1900 and graduated from the law school in the spring of 1901. He was admitted to the bar of Ohio, June 11, 1901. He located in Portsmouth, August 12, 1901, and went into partnership with A. T. Holcomb, as Holcomb and Millar.

William Ralph Sprague was born October 17, 1875, in Licking County, Ohio. His father was Austin E. Sprague, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Bailey. He attended the district school, including the Reynoldsburg High School, and attended the Ohio State University from 1892 to 1895. From 1895 to 1897 he was engaged in farming, and from 1897 to 1901 he finished his philosophical course at the Ohio State University. From 1899 to 1901 he studied law in that institution and for six months practised it. He was admitted December 7, 1901. He was engaged in the law office of G. J. Marriott, of Columbus, Ohio. He located in Portsmouth in December 1901, and has been engaged in the practice of law ever since in the same office with Noah J. Dever and Harry Miller.

Frank Warwick Moulton

was born in Lucasville, Ohio, February 14, 1877, the son of Hon. Chandler J. Moulton and Mary C. Smith, his wife. He attended the schools of Lucasville till the age of fifteen years. Then he entered the Ohio University at Athens and graduated in 1897. In September 1897, he was appointed to a clerkship of the United States Commission to the Paris Exposition of 1900. He served at Chicago from September, 1897 to February 1900. While in Chicago, he studied law, in the winters of 1898 and 1899, and part of the winter of 1899 and 1900. Then he went to Paris, France, and was there till October 1, 1900. At that time, he resigned and entered the Cincinnati law schools. He attended the Law School till June 1902, when he graduated. He was admitted to the bar of Ohio, June 12, 1902. On September 1, 1902, he formed a partnership with Nelson W. Evans, of Portsmouth, Ohio, in the law business, as Evans and Moulton, and is engaged in the practice of the law at Portsmouth, Ohio.

Clinton Miranda Searl was born May 7, 1879. He is the son of Fernando C. Searl and Caroline Shoemaker, his wife. He attended the Public Schools of Portsmouth until he was nine years of age, when his parents moved to Wheelersburg. He attended the schools there until he graduated in 1898. He was a member of Company H, 14th O. N. G., and enlisted in Company H, 4th O. V. I. for the Spanish War April 1898 and was made a Corporal. He was discharged in October, 1898. In the winter of 1898 and 1899, he attended the Portsmouth High School and took a special course. In the fall of 1899, he entered the University of Michigan and began the study of law. He graduated June 19, 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to the bar of Ohio, June 13, 1902. He located at Portsmouth, Ohio, for the practice of law June 20, 1902. He is a Sergeant in Company K, 7th O. N. G.

Alexander Carson Woodrow was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, November 9, 1857. His parents were Nathan A. and Margaret Jane (Kissick) Woodrow. His father was of English and his mother of Scotch Irish descent. Nathan A. Woodrow, his father, enlisted in Company E, 91st O. V. I. August 9, 1862, for three years. He was wounded May 9, 1864, in the battle of Cloyd's Mountain, Virginia, and was mustered out with the Company June 24, 1865. While he was in the army, his family resided at West Union. They remained there until 1868, when they came to Portsmouth. Our subject attended school at West Union and then at Portsmouth until he was in the Second year of the High School. After leaving school, he was employed for two years as shipping clerk with the Portsmouth Shoe Manufacturing Company. In 1879, he entered the office of Captain Nelson W. Evans as a clerk. At the same time he studied law with Duncan Livingstone and Captain Evans. He was admitted June 5, 1883, and has practiced law ever since. November 1, 1887, he left Captain Evans' office and was associated with Homer W. Farnham for the next ten years. On September 6, 1880, he was appointed Deputy Surveyor of Customs for the city and served during Colonel James E. Wharton's term. He was City Solicitor from 1895 to 1897. He is a Republican. Mr. Woodrow is noted for the correctness of all his papers in the course of his practice of the law. Everything he does in the legal way is precise and exact. He is of a genial disposition and liked by all who know him.

MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS.

Early Conveyances Early Marriages The Portsmouth and Columbus Turnpike Company The Ohio Canal Railroads in Scioto County County Elections Independence Days in Scioto County Notable Trials The Scioto County Bible Society Bibliography of the County Accidents and Sudden Deaths The Mound Builders of Scioto County.

1. The first deed recorded in the County was from John Gabriel Gervais to Peter Stephen Duponceau, both Frenchmen. The land was 200 acres of the Gervais tract and the consideration was $600.00. Both of the parties to this deed have sketches herein. Duponceau was a Philadelphia lawyer, and no doubt this conveyance was for his fee in lobbying the bill for the French Grant through Congress in 1795. The deed was executed September 3, 1803, at Burrsburg, Scioto County, Ohio, now Haverhill, before Kimber Barton, Justice of the Peace. Francis LeClercq and Peter Romaine Bureau were the witnesses. Duponceau held on to the tract until February 20, 1833, when he sold it to Thayer D. White for $1,000 in silver.

2. The second is a conveyance from John Beasley and Sally, his wife, to Samuel Van Hook. The consideration was $100.00. It conveyed fifty acres on Turkey Creek, part of a tract of 400 acres patented to John Beasley. The number of the survey is not given. January 29, 1803, is the date of the deed, and it was acknowledged before John Ellison, a Justice of the Peace of Adams County, Ohio. The month is spelled Genuwary and the word hickory is spelled hycory.

3. The third deed of record is dated January 29, 1803, from John Beasley and wife to William Corns, Sr. It recited that Beasley was from Adams County of the Northwest Territory. The consideration was $100.00; and conveyed fifty acres out of the same tract mentioned on the first date. The deed had but one witness, John Ellison, and was not acknowledged until May 10, 1803.

4. The fourth deed is from Joseph Lucas and wife to John Hamilton. The consideration was $200; and conveyed 116 1-2 acres on Pond Creek. The number of the survey is not given. The deed is dated October 3, 1803, and was acknowledged before William Lucas, Justice of the Peace, November 2, 1803.

5. The fifth conveyance is from Joseph Lucas and wife to Benjamin Feurt, dated November 1, 1803. The consideration was $20.00, and conveyed nine acres on the West Side of Pond Creek. The number of the survey is not given. William Lucas was the Justice of the Peace who took the acknowledgement.

6. The sixth conveyance was from William Lucas, Sr., and Susannah, his wife,—he being a Revolutionary soldier,—to Samuel Reed, grandfather of Samuel Reed, of the Portsmouth National Bank, of Portsmouth, O. The date is November 20, 1803, the quantity is 100 acres on the Scioto Brush Creek for $50.00. The survey is not given, and the acknowledgement was before Joseph Lucas, Associate Judge.

7. The seventh conveyance is from William Lucas, jr., and Elizabeth his wife, to Samuel Reed, the same as mentioned in Number 6. It is dated August 24, 1803. The consideration was $125.00, and conveyed eighty-eight acres on the Scioto Brush Creek. Joseph Lucas, Associate Judge, took the acknowledgement.

8. On August 1, 1803, William Lucas, jr., and wife, conveyed 100 acres for $300.00 on the Scioto Brush Creek, to William Lucas, Senior. The survey is not named. Joseph Lucas, Associate Judge, took the acknowledgement.

9. The ninth conveyance is of outlots 5 and 6 in Alexandria by Thomas Parker and wife by John Belli, attorney, for $100.00. The deed is dated November 6, 1803, and the acknowledgement was before Thomas Waller, Justice of the Peace. On the same day out lot 7 of Alexandria was conveyed between the same parties for $45.00.

10. The tenth deed is from John Beasley and wife to James Edison. The consideration is $300.00, and conveyed 120 acres of land on Turkey Creek. It is dated August 5, 1803, and acknowledged before John Ellison, Justice of the Peace of Adams County, Ohio.

The Portsmouth and Columbus Turnpike Company.

was incorporated by a special act passed February 7, 1831. There were twenty-five incorporates named in the act, five of whom were from Scioto County. They were: Samuel M. Tracy, William Kendall, Ezra Osborn, John Peebles, Nathan K. Clough and John Noel. John J. Vanmeter, James B. Turner, William Blackstone and Robert Lucas were of Pike County. Lincoln Goodale, Samuel Parsons, Robert W. McCoy and Joel Buttles were from Franklin County. James T. Worthington, David Crause, Thomas J. McArthur, Thomas James, George Renick and Anthony Walke were of Ross County. Andrew Huston, G. W. Doan, George Crook and John Cochran were of Pickaway County. The Capital stock was \$250,000. Books were to be opened at Portsmouth, Chillicothe, Circleville and Columbus. Shares were \$100 each. When 400 shares were subscribed there was to be a meeting of the stockholders. The road was to begin at the Court House in Portsmouth then on Market street between Second and Front, and to enter Columbus at the Southern termination of High Street. The road was to be opened, not exceeding 100 feet wide, thirty of which was to be roadway. No grade was to be higher than four degrees. The first ten miles were to be built from Portsmouth. Toll gates were to be erected every ten miles. The rates of toll were fixed for every ten miles. Four-wheeled carriages with two horses or oxen 25 cents. Two wheeled carriages drawn by two horses or oxen 18½ cents; sled or sleigh, two horses, 12½ cents; horse and rider 6½ cents, led horses 3 cents, cattle 25 cents for twenty, sheep or hogs 12½ cents for twenty. Four wheeled pleasure carriage drawn by two horses 37½ cents; each additional horse, 12½ cents. Two wheeled carriage and one horse, 25 cents, four wheeled carriage drawn by one horse 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. Going to Church on Sunday, militia men going and returning from musters and funerals were free. The Legislature might alter these rates by fifty per cent after ten years after the road was completed. The Company was required to put up mile stones with the distance from Columbus and Portsmouth thereon, and rates of toll were to be posted at the gates. The Company was to keep an account of the expense of the construction of the road and its revenues and expenses, and the State had a right to buy the same at a fixed price or the Commissioners of the Counties, the parts in their respective counties, and make the road free.

On January 25, 1832, this act was amended by allowing the road bed to be twenty feet wide outside the mile at the beginning in the City of Portsmouth. The stock was made $10.00 per share and when one hundred shares were subscribed, the Company could organize.

On February 21, 1833, the Legislature gave the Company till October 1 to complete ten miles of their road without forfeiture. The by laws of the Company had a Treasurer for each County. All elections were to be held at the Court House in Chillicothe, and no stock was to be transferred until fully paid up. The general plan of the road was, the road was to be opened one hundred feet wide, cleared within twenty feet of center. The road bed was to be 33 feet wide, with the center 18 inches above the sides by regular curve; no grade above four degrees. All slopes one-half to one inch, embankment. Excavations were one foot rise to one foot base. There was to be twenty feet road bed in the center, broken limestone macadamized. Gravel was to be nine inches thick. The Treasurer was allowed two per cent in moneys collected from stock holders, and one per cent in moneys from the State or Counties. One and one-half per cent for disbursing moneys coming from his predecessor. Directors were allowed $2.00 a day for the time engaged superintending or otherwise.

The Ohio Canal.

As this is not a history of the Canal as such, only such notice of it will be given as affects Scioto County. June 4, 1825, the Canal was begun at the Licking Summit. It was the intention to work it both ways. Governor Morrow and his aids, the Canal Commissioner, the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, Governor Clinton of New York and General Van Reissellear were present. Rev. Jenks of Granville officiated as Chaplain. Governor Clinton addressed the people. The Militia was out in force with all their tinsel. Mr. Kelley of the Canal Commissioners, presented two spades to Judge Minor, President of the Board. He gave them to Governors Clinton and Morrow. Each Governor used a spade and a great shout went up. Then each of the officials of the Canal used a spade. There was a public dinner, after which a number of toasts were drunk. About 8,000 persons were present. At the same time it was announced that the commissioners by unanimous vote had decided to come from Chillicothe down the west side of the Scioto, because it would cost $36,000 less. On September 2, 1825, 1200 laborers were employed at Licking Summit. They were paid $8.00 per month. July 6, 1826, the line between Piketon and Portsmouth had not been determined. At this time 2,000 laborers and 3,000 teams were at work between Licking Summit and Cleveland. In that distance 44 locks were required. There was a fall of 395 feet between those points. August 10, 1826, the Canal Commissioners borrowed $1,000,000 at six per cent. January 28, 1827, Governor Worthington was a canal commissioner. It was expected the work in the Scioto Valley would be put under contract the following season. March 8, 1827, the surveys on the west side of the Scioto were completed and the surveys on the east side from Piketon to Portsmouth were to be made. July 5, 1827, the canal was expected to be opened from Akron to Cleveland. July 19, 1828, the location of the canal in Scioto County was fixed by the Canal Commissioners. The town took a boom. The Times, not the present Times, but a paper called the Western Times, was filled with advertisements. August 2, 1828, many of the citizens of Pike and Scioto County protested against the location of the canal on the west side. That portion of land between the present Scioto Bridge and the old mouth of the Scioto was then called the "Isthmus," and on January 7, 1829, the canal commissioners resolved to cut a way through the "Isthmus" between the Ohio and Scioto rivers and make the mouth of the canal at the lower end of Portsmouth. February 21, 1829, it was announced that the "Isthmus" at the west end of Portsmouth was to be cut through and aqueducts would be built at Pee Pee, Camp Creek, and Brush Creek.

June 6, 1829, proposals for parts of the canal were published in the Western Times. On June 15th and 20th, lettings on the Ohio canal were made. Section 83, was Brush Creek Aqueduct. Section 90 was Pond Creek Aqueduct. Section 97 was Three Locks near Portsmouth and Section 98 was through the low bottoms. George W. Darlington had sections 55 and 56. Section 99 was a dam across the Scioto and section 100 was the cutting through the "Isthmus." Eads and McGregor had the three locks at Union Mills. November 21, 1829, proposals for damming the Scioto and cutting through the "Isthmus" were advertised to be let December 7, 1829. Lemuel Moss of Franklin, obtained the contract. August 19, 1831, the plans at the east end of the canal were changed. The canal was to end on the west side of the Scioto. It could not be completed before the summer of 1832. October 7, 1831, the canal was opened from Cleveland to Chillicothe, 250 miles. September 15, 1832, the canal was opened to Waverly. Boats arrived and there was a public celebration. October 13, 1832, the opening of the canal to Portsmouth was to be celebrated. Col. William Oldfield was to be Marshal. Dr. Hempstead was to receive the guests and William V. Peck was to deliver the oration. All Revolutionary Soldiers were invited to join in the ceremony.

October 20, 1832, owing to the prevalence of cholera, the celebration was deferred. December 1, 1832, the canal was completed. April 1, 1837, G. J. Leet had a line of packets to Columbus which went through in twenty-four hours. June 3, 1837, there was a line of boats running through to Cleveland. September 23, 1837, the flood destroyed the culvert at Camp Creek and the canal was broken. Extra stages were put on and teams employed to handle passengers and goods. January 2, 1838, navigation was closed, and the new aqueduct at Camp Creek was not finished. January 23, 1838, navigation was resumed. Between January 6th and 21st there arrived at Portsmouth 8,031 barrels of pork, 5,571 barrels of flour, 561 barrels of whiskey, 176 barrels of lard, butter 108 kegs, cheese 141 casks. Two or three large steamboats were freighted for New Orleans. July 10, 1838, the project of the lateral canal was discussed in the Scioto Tribune. In the Scioto Tribune of June 30, 1838, there was an account of the public meeting held in the interest of the Lateral Canal. The vote of the town on subscribing to the stock was 161 for and 37 against. This vote was taken on July 24, 1838, but this project never materialized. Edward Hamilton was chairman of this meeting. Moses Gregory and G. S. B. Hempstead were Secretaries. July 31, 1838, notice was published of a basin to be constructed at the town of Alexandria. The legislature was to be applied to. At a public meeting of the citizens of Portsmouth held December 29, 1838, it was decided to petition the legislature to subscribe one-third of the stock of the Ohio Canal and Manufacturing Company and build a canal on the east side of the Scioto. Edward Hamilton was chairman of the meeting and S. M. Tracy was Secretary. John R. Turner, Joseph Riggs and E. Glover were appointed to bring the matter before the legislature. March 15, 1839, a resolution was passed by the legislature to construct a canal from Bear Creek to Portsmouth crossing the Scioto at Bear Creek. The Ohio Canal and Manufacturing Company were to give up their rights. The news reached Portsmouth March 19. Four days later, White and Rogers of the Senate and Donally and Ripley of the House were met by a cavalcade and escorted to the United States Hotel where they spent the evening. On that evening the town was illuminated. March 29th, 1839, the canal was closed for repairs but was expected to be open by April 10th. November 15, 1839, the canal was closed from Brush Creek down for repairs. November 29, 1839, goods were brought to Brush Creek by canal and thence wagoned to Portsmouth. February 24, 1840, 200 delegates went from Portsmouth to the Whig State Convention by canal. They were from Hamilton, Brown, Lawrence, Adams and Scioto Counties. February 28, 1840, the Bear Creek culvert fell in. The tolls on the Ohio Canal for 1837 were $433,699, for 1838, $382,135, expenses of repairing $214,581.

August 27, 1846, survey was being made by the State down the east side of the Scioto for a canal. July 18, 1855, the canal was in a deplorable condition. March 31, 1858, there was a tri-weekly packet line to Columbus. The boats left Portsmouth Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 11 a. m. and returned on alternate days. February 29, 1860, the tolls for the quarter ending February 15, 1859, were $10,824.65; for the quarter ending February 15, 1860, were $7,150.11; for the quarter ending May 15, $9,926.15; for the quarter ending May 15, 1859, were $17,477.34; for the quarter ending May 15, 1860, were $10,568.93.

December 29, 1860, Barton and Thompson made a canal propeller and tried it on the waters of the canal. March 1, 1865, navigation opened, the canal had been closed two months. November 14, 1866, the first canal boat for many months came through from Cleveland. Captain A. W. Williamson's Evening Star was making through trips to Chillicothe tri-weekly. February 23, 1867, there was a break in the canal at Sharonville which took two weeks to repair. The Ohio Canal from Cleveland to Portsmouth is 306 miles long, with feeder 11 miles, total length 317 miles. It cost $4,695,203. Licking County reservoir covers 3,600 acres. November 13, 1887, the extension of the Ohio canal to the Ohio river was celebrated. It cost $10,000 and only one boat ever went through it.

Railroads in the County.

On January 18, 1849, a Railroad through Chillicothe and Lancaster to Newark was talked of. On January 22, 1849, there was a Railroad charter granted by the legislature to the Scioto Valley Railroad Company. On March 13, 1849, there was a railroad meeting at Portsmouth of which Wm. Oldfield was President and E. W. Jordan was secretary. On March 24, 1849, the town voted on $100,000 Railroad subscription; there were 320 ayes and 3 noes. On April 5, 1849, there was $23,000 to $24,000 private subscriptions given to the Railroad at Portsmouth. On May 26, 1849, the Company voted on railroad subscriptions for $25,000. The stockholders of the Scioto & Hocking Valley Railroad Company met at Chillicothe May 9, to elect seven directors. The vote to be held on the Railroad subscription was postponed on May 17 on account of cholera. On May 24, 1849, at a meeting at Chillicothe C. A. M. Damarin, J. V. Robinson, B. F. Conway were elected directors for Portsmouth, and J. V. Robinson was elected president of the board. This was the first organization. On June 14, 1849, the directors issued an appeal to voters of the county for a subscription to the Railroad. The vote was cast Oct. 11, 1849. There were 503 votes for the Railroad and one against it in the city but the county told a different story. In the whole county there were 930 votes in favor of the Railroad subscription and 937 against it, thus the proposition was lost by seven votes. Ross County voted at the same time; the vote stood 2,128 for the Railroad subscription and 2,098 against it. Pickaway county voted 1,810 for a subscription and 984 against it, majority 826 for the subscription. There was another election called for May 25, 1850, and in the city the vote was 715 for and 2 against it. Clay township voted 73 for and 11 against. The vote in the county was 1,234 for and 284 against; there was no vote in Morgan or Brush Creek township.

July 15, 1850, the stockholders of the Scioto and Hocking Valley Railroad met at Portsmouth and elected directors. J. V. Robinson, C. A. M. Damarin, J. L. McVey and Peter Kinney of Scioto County were chosen. J. V. Robinson was elected President, John McDowell secretary and Peter Kinney treasurer.

November 23, 1850, proposals for building the first twenty miles of this Railroad were invited, which was to be let January 1, 1851, and work began on it February 31, 1851. On January 9, 1851, there were 19 miles between Hales Creek and Jackson, C. H. let. This put the road under contract all the way to Jackson.

May 28, 1852, the directors of the Scioto & Hocking Valley Railroad elected were J. V. Robinson, C. A. M. Damarin, Peter Kinney, J. L. McVey and Joseph Riggs from Portsmouth. On the 9th day of July, 1852, the first ties were laid on the Scioto and Hocking Valley Railroad in Scioto County. On September 10, 1852, the first locomotive appeared in Portsmouth and it ran four miles out the track. On November 12, 1852, the Railroad was completed 14 miles out of the city. On December 24, 1852, there was an excursion to Scioto Furnace, 25 cents for the round trip. It left at 2 p. m.

SCENE IN THE McDERMOTT STONE CO. QUARRY NO. 4.

On March 25, 1853, the road was completed to South Webster. October 5, 1853, trains ran to Jackson leaving at 9 a. m., and returning left Jackson at 2 p. m. C. A. M. Damarin was Superintendent of the road. On October 12, 1853 James Connelly was made Superintendent of the road.

The earnings of the Railroad for March, 1854, were $7,180. At that time the company had two locomotives and 45 miles of road were operated. The earnings for June, 1854, were $8,183.25. August 16, 1854, J. W. Webb was superintendent of the road.

May 16, 1855, at the annual election of directors, C. A. M. Damarin, J. Riggs and Wm. Hall of Scioto County were elected. The stock represented was $644,700. The report from May 1, 1854, to May 1, 1855, showed the earnings of the road to be $84,068.60, of which $58,074.14 were for freight and $25,994.46 for passengers; the operating expenses were $25,220.58. 4,633 through passengers had been carried in the year and 39,207 way passengers. 17,461 tons of pig iron had been hauled; 12,098 tons of iron ore, 66,993 bushels of coal and 93,524 bushels of corn. On September 19, 1855, the same Railroad was being built from Jackson to Berlin. November 28, 1855, trains began to run from Chillicothe to Cincinnati and from Chillicothe to Hamden on the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad.

March 26, 1856, the train was first run through to Hamden.

May 20, 1857, at the election of directors of the Scioto & Hocking Valley Railroad C. A. M. Damarin, George Johnson, John P. Terry and George A. Waller were elected from Scioto County.

E. A. Spruce of Perry County was president, J. P. Terry was made vice president, George A. Waller was treasurer and J. W. Collins was secretary.

On January 20, 1858, H. B. Green was superintendent. The receipts for April, 1858, were $10,400.12; the expenses were $4,774.09. May 26, 1858, the Directors elected from Scioto County were C. A. M. Damarin, J. V. Robinson, Sr., George A. Waller, Wm. Newman and E. B. Lodwick. The following statement was published:

1858—Receipts for June, $10,008.75. Expenses for June, $5,149.04. Receipts for July, $10,058.88. Expenses for July, $5,721.63. Receipts for August, $9,479.74. Expenses for August, $4,618.40. Net Earnings, $3,857.07.

1859—Receipts for January, $8,022.50. Expenses for January, $6,469.70. Net earnings, $15,082.80. Receipts for March, $9,712.33. Expenses for March, $4,044.00. Receipts for September, $9,470.35. Expenses for September, $4,711.00. Receipts for November, $8,496.68. Expenses for November, $4,003.75. Receipts for December, $8,457.57. Expenses for December, $4,132.02. Net earnings, $4,325.55.

It seems that on January 6, 1860, the road was in the hands of a receiver.

1860—February receipts, $7,305.34. February expenses, $4,084.89. Net earnings, $3,220.45.

This receivership seems to have taken place on November 2, 1859; J. W. Webb was the receiver. In June, 1859, an order of sale was made. June 24, a motion was argued to set aside the order. A. G. Thurman and O. F. Moore supported the motion; Henry Stansberry, V. Worthington, Hunter and Daugherty were against it. The motion was sustained on the ground the Company could not mortgage its franchises. The order was set aside and the road left in the hands of a receiver. In October, 1859, the receipts were given as $8,815.30, the expenses were $4,659.87, net receipts $4,155.43.

January, 1860, the receipts were $6,197.76, expenses $3,537.88, net receipts $2,659.88.

On April 6, 1860, Alex Boyer fell between the cars in passing from one to another and was killed. He left a wife and three children. This is the first accident recorded on the road.

April 30, 1862, the receipts for the year previous were published as $67,338.01, expenses, $41,202.03.

May 27, 1863, the Scioto & Hocking Valley Railroad sold for $411,100 to a company from Providence, R. I., for the second mortgage bond holders. All the stock was lost. The name was changed to the Portsmouth and New-ark Railroad.

Jan. 20, 1864, the latter corporation sold out to the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad and thereafter the road was known as the Portsmouth branch of the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad. April 2, 1864 the road organized as the Portsmouth and Columbus Railroad, capital stock $1,500,000.00.

Ex. Governor Dennison, H. D. Payne, L. M. Hubbard, Amassa Stone, Jr. and W. H. Clements were incorporators. The books were to be opened in Columbus May 10, following. This ship passed in the night.

Feb. 26, 1866 the gauge of the Portsmouth branch of the M. & C. Railroad was changed to correspond with that of the main line.

April 20, 1870 the Boston, Portsmouth and Cincinnati Railroad was organized. Col. P. Kinney, was President, D. W. C. Loudon, Secretary, E. P. Evans, Treasurer. This road was a day dream; it made a survey and died.

On July 26, 1870, the first train from Portsmouth to Columbus by way of Hamden and Athens was run. The train left Portsmouth at 9 a. m., reaching Columbus at 5:20 p. m., being 8 hours and 20 minutes on the road. The fare was $5.00. This was $2.00 cheaper than by the way of Loveland and $4.00 cheaper than by way of stage through Chillicothe. The estimate of building the Boston, Portsmouth and Cincinnati railroad was published Sept. 22, 1871, and as it is a curiosity it is given in full:

Excavations, Etc.	Hamilton.	Clermont.	Brown.	Adams.	Scioto.
Excavations	$124,530	$ 49,340	$100,150	$137,100	$110,000
Embankment					73,566
Trestlework	213,000		33,500		147,060
Tunnels				234,000	60,000
Bridges	152,900	30,316	350,000	143,540	420,000
Culverts	4,500	4,120	5,750	6,860	3,980
Iron	75,758	182,121	205,568	216,572	172,524

Ties	6,300	15,286	17,366	28,743	14,551

NOTES—Total cost, $3,717,719. Two tunnels in Adams 4,000 and 2,500 feet. Two in Scioto 1,600 and 900 feet.

Made by Paul Mohr, Jr., E. P. Evans, of Adams; E. B. Lodwick, of Scioto; D. W. C. Loudon, of Brown, and two others.

May 13, 1871, there was an excursion to Columbus and back in one day for $5.00 by the Marietta & Cincinnati and Hocking Valley Railroad. The train left Portsmouth at 4 a. m. to reach Columbus at 10:50, and returning left Columbus at 6 p. m.

July 15, 1872, the county voted on building a Railroad. The vote in the city was 2,002 for, and 21 against. The total vote of the county was 3,472 for and 603 against; all the opposition came from the country. The law was afterwards held unconstitutional and the vote amounted to nothing. It was on the 21st of May, 1873, when the law called "the Boesel law" was declared unconstitutional.

November 10, 1872, the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad, began erecting a telegraph line along its line. This was the first time a telegraph line was operated along the branch.

On September 17, 1873, the citizens of Portsmouth petitioned the M. & C. Ry. to put on a train leaving Hamden in the morning and returning in the evening. November 5, 1873, this train was put on arriving at 10:20 a. m. and leaving at 2 p. m. October 1, 1870, the fare to the Cincinnati Exposition was $5.00 for the round trip; the train left Portsmouth at 6:30 a. m. and arrived at Cincinnati 2:30 p. m. Tuesday. It left Cincinnati Wednesday evening and arrived at Portsmouth at 6 a. m. Thursday.

On March 3, 1875, $115,520 was subscribed by Portsmouth to the Michigan and Ohio Railroad; the Tribune of March 3, 1875, has a list of the subscribers. April 28, 1875, Geo. D. Chapman appeared in Portsmouth for the first time. His mission was to build the Scioto Valley Railroad. He had come from Kansas for that purpose. He professed to be a man of great resources and backed by fabulous wealth. He proposed to take and pay down $150,000 stock in the Railroad and to require no money until the road was done. The effect of his enterprise was to paralyze the Michigan and Ohio Railroad and kill that project.

August 8, 1865, the Scioto Valley Railroad was put under contract from Columbus to Chillicothe.

April 12, 1876, the Cincinnati, Batavia and Portsmouth Narrow Gauge Railroad was first heard of in Portsmouth, May, 3, 1876, the Board of Trade appointed a committee to visit Batavia and learn as to the Narrow Gauge Road. This committee was composed of Dr. J. W. Fuller, F. C. Searl, J. P. McAndrew, John G. Peebles and N. W. Evans. August 23, 1876, Col. Samuel Woodward, (the Col. being purely ornamental), wrote to S. S. Jones at Rarden, that the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad was graded to Williamsburg, and track laying was to be begun that week, and Portsmouth was the ultimate destination.

On the same day an excursion left Portsmouth for Columbus by the way of Hamden and Chillicothe by the Scioto Valley Railroad, for $3.00 for the round trip. The Scioto Valley Railroad had been completed from Columbus to Chillicothe June 3, 1876.

March 31, 1877, nearly $100,000 had been raised for the Scioto Valley Railroad. April 21, 1877 work began grading for this road in Scioto County. John B. Gregory had the contract for grading the sixteen miles in Scioto County.

May 6, 1877, three hundred men were at work grading on the Scioto Valley Railroad. May 31, 1877, Col. S. Woodward and Major Byrne were in Portsmouth in the interest of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad. The meeting was held at the court house and W. B. Grice was secretary. Speeches were made by Col. Woodward, Major Byrne, N. W. Evans, F. C. Searl, L. C. Damarin, D. W. Murray, Col Peter Kinney, Dr. J. W. Fulton and Col. J. E. Wharton. June 2, 1877 the road was opened to Sardinia with appropriate ceremonies. The company asked Portsmouth $2,000 per mile to aid in building the road. On June 5, 1877, Portsmouth voted on purchasing the Agriculture works for car shops, the vote stood 743 for and 97 against, majority 651. On August 4, 1877 the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad entered Winchester. There was a great celebration over the event at that place. The company had two locomotives, one was named the Stephen Feike and the other Dick Thompson, and those two gentlemen came riding into Winchester on the pilots, and the locomotives were covered with flowers. All of Adams County was gathered there on that occasion, as this was the first Railroad, and so far has been the only one, to enter the borders of the county.

January 17, 1877 the subscribers of the Ohio and Michigan Railroad were turned over to the Scioto Valley road and on March 11, 1877 the people of Portsmouth were called on to extend their subscription to the Scioto Valley Railroad for 90 days. April 10, 1877, at two o'clock, ground was broken on the city hospital grounds for the construction of the Scioto Valley Railroad. $115,000 had been raised and Geo. D. Chapman subscribed $5,000 more, making $120,000. There were 2,000 people on the grounds. J. B. Gregory and R. A. Bryan laid off the ground and Dan McFarland made the address, then the following persons each threw a spade full off earth: Col. Peter Kinney, Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead, Jas. Lodwick, James O. Johnson, John P. Terry, Aaron Noel, John G. Peebles, and Col. John A. Turley. The Kinney guards fired a salute until twenty rounds had been fired. Hon. W. A. Hutchins made the address of the occasion.

April 25, 1877, Col. J. E. Wharton was soliciting in Adams County to secure rights of way for the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad Company. May 2, 1877, the legislature passed and enacted a law authorizing the city of Portsmouth to purchase ground and erect a depot. This ship passed in the night. The legislature also passed a joint resolution to authorize the Scioto Valley Railroad to occupy part of the eastern bank of the canal in Ross County. The lessees of the public works asked the Railroad Company $30,000 for one of the tow paths and the project was given up. This applied only to Ross County. October 1, 1877, Geo. D. Chapman failed to complete the Scioto Valley Railroad by October 1, as he had agreed and all subscriptions were forfeited, but as all had paid in advance, he was not worried about his failure. When he let the grading to J. B. Gregory the work was not to be paid for in money, but in certificates of indebtedness to the contractors. These certificates of indebtedness had an endorsement to the effect that they would be received at par to pay subscriptions of stock to the Railroad Company. This compelled the contractors to go to the subscribers and sell these certificates at once. They were sold at first at a discount of 15 per cent and afterwards went down as low as 50 per cent, and the result was that the subscriptions were paid in advance in this manner before the day that the road was to be completed. November 4, 1877, at 3 p. m., the Scioto Valley Railroad was completed between Portsmouth and Columbus. November 5, 1877, Monday, 6 p. m., the first passenger car arrived from Columbus at Portsmouth, time four hours. December 28, 1877, there was an excursion given by the Scioto Valley Railroad Company to the subscribers. It was tendered by Geo. D. Chapman and made up of directors cars only. Invitations were issued to subscribers and refreshments were provided; 125 persons went upon the excursion. Geo. D. Chapman, E. Wilhoff Banker, Mr. Peters and E. K. Stewart, a Columbus banker, were the hosts. The day following there was a return excursion from Columbus for the Railroad and Business men. The people of Columbus gave the people going on the excursion from Portsmouth free rides about the city and tickets to the theaters. On the return excursion the Portsmouth People gave to the excursionists a free dinner at the Biggs.

On August 14, 1878, the contract for the construction of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad between Winchester and Galena was let to Albert Hill.

May 1, 1880, a Railroad to Ashland, Ky. was agitated, and a law was passed allowing cities to build railroads. May 6, 1880, a great Railroad meeting was held at Portsmouth. It was addressed by N. W. Evans, Dan J. Ryan and others. May 8, 1880, there was a vote in the city for building a Railroad to Ashland, Ky. There were 1,122 for and 648 against the project, majority 473. May 15, 1880, Jos. Robinson became superintendent of the Scioto Valley Railroad. May 29, 1880, J. J. Harper appointed Wells A. Hutchins, L. C. Damarin, James Y. Gordon, D. N. Murray and Wm. Bolles trustees of the Railroad to Ashland, Ky. This ship passed in the night. Sept. 18, 1880, work was begun on the Railroad between Ironton and Portsmouth, known as the Scioto Valley Extension; the road was built from Portsmouth eastward and it was expected to be completed in November. December 22, 1880, the track for the Scioto Valley Extension to Ironton was laid to a point just beyond Franklin Furnace.

January 18, 1881, Portsmouth and Ironton were first connected by rail. February 12, 1881, the Board of Trade asked the legislature to give the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad the use of the canal between Scioto Brush Creek and Davis' Distillery.

March 18, 1882, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad was let from Otway to the Scioto River. May 11, 1882, the bill authorizing the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad to occupy the tow path of the Ohio Canal from Brush Creek to Davis' Distillery passed the house by 72 to 0, and became a law, having previously passed the Senate. September 23, 1882, the contract was let to build the Scioto River bridge for the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad to Col. J. C. Dewey. It was to be 1,000 feet long, 40 feet high, and to have seven piers. There was to be 2,000 feet of grade between the bridge and the canal, and 100,000 cubic feet of earth were to be moved.

February 9, 1881, the first train arrived in Ironton over the Scioto Valley Extension carrying 100 passengers.

April 22, 1883, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad went into the hands of a receiver, Samuel Woodward. October 13, 1883, Judge Loudon ordered the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad completed to Portsmouth. Receiver's certificates to the amount of $250,000 were ordered issued, and the road was ordered to be changed to a standard gauge from Batavia Junction. At that time it had out its first mortgage bonds $500,000, $257,500 the second mortgage bonds and $704,900 the third mortgage bonds. The floating debt secured by three-mortgage deeds was $162,879.79, and there had been an additional floating debt, not secured, of $176,539.58, and of this debt $24,061.56 was due to the operation of the road. At that time the company had 86.5 miles of track on the main line and 14.3 on the branch line. The cost of construction to Portsmouth was estimated to be $157,427.54, and of widening the gauge, $83,000, total $235,427.54. The receiver's certificates were to run three years and to be redeemable in six months. July 25, 1883, the road was completed to Henley and a new mail route established to Portsmouth from Henley, by hacks. At the same time the Belt Road project appeared in Portsmouth. It was another ship which passed in the night. The directors were James Y. Gordon, C. A. M. Damarin, John G. Peebles, Geo. Davis, W. Q. Adams, H. R. Tracy, J. F. Towell and W. A. Hutchins. On December 5, 1883, the death of the belt line was announced in the Portsmouth Tribune, with black lines.

January 16, 1884, the new C. W. & B. depot was built. It was 52 feet long, 22 feet wide, with two waiting rooms and a ticket office; it is still in use. May 21, 1884, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad had reached Rushtown. June 30, 1884, it had reached Wharton. July 9, 1884, the Scioto Valley Railroad tried to prevent the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad from crossing its track and elevated the track six feet at the point of crossing. August 25, 1884, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad was opened to Portsmouth. December 8, 1884, the roof of the Arion tunnel caved in. May 23, 1884, the council granted the Cincinnati and Eastern the right of way over the streets and alleys from 16th to 10th streets, between North Waller and Offnere Sts.

July 2, 1884, W. R. McGill, president of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad, fell out of a baggage car door over the trestle near Winchester, and was instantly killed. August 3, 1884, the Cincinnati and Eastern track crossed the Scioto Valley Railroad. August 16, 1884, the track of the road was laid to the Barbee trestle, and regular trains were run to Wharton. May 6, 1884, John R. McLean was made Receiver of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad. It was stated that the road was to be made standard gauge at once.

May 29, 1885, the Scioto Valley Railroad went into the hands of a receiver, Joseph Robinson. On September 1, 1885, Gen. B. F. Coates was appointed receiver of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad, in place of John R. McLean, resigned.

May 25, 1886, the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad between Ashland and Cincinnati was begun opposite Portsmouth. February 24, 1886, the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad was proposed to come to Portsmouth. April 8, 1886, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad shops were moved to Portsmouth. September, 1886, the earnings of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad were $19,874.64.

January 25, 1887, the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad was sold for $1,000,000.00, and it was purchased by the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad Company. On April 11, 1887, the former employees of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad presented Gen. Coates with a set of silverware. November 9, 1887, the Ohio and Northwestern was made standard gauge all the way to Portsmouth. May 14, 1887, the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad built a track from Portsmouth to Sciotoville. August 20, 1887, the Scioto Valley Railroad laid its tracks on Tenth street for its junction with the C. W. & B. and to its shops. November 7, 1887, the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad was made standard gauge from Portsmouth to Cincinnati.

May 2, 1888, the locomotive first appeared in Springville, Ky., a cannon was fired at Portsmouth and was answered by a scream of the locomotive from the other side. The track layers were working from Ashland down; 62 pound steel rails were laid. June 16, 1888, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad track was laid 13 miles below Maysville; the work progressed at the rate of one mile per day. June 15, 1888, the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad went into the hands of a receiver, Samuel Hunt.

August 8, 1888, Samuel Hunt, Receiver, asked for $325,000 Receiver certificates to complete the Railroad, $100,000 to purchase leased rolling stock, $35,000 to build the road from Portsmouth to Sciotoville, $47,243.18, to pay for cross ties and timber furnished already, $111,924 for improving the road bed and trestles.

January 5, 1889, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad began to run regular trains on the South Shore road, and trains from Huntington to Cincinnati were arranged for. January 8th, it began to run local trains, but through trains were not to go on until March 1st. The passenger train from the west came in at 12:05 p. m., from the east, 3:26 p. m., and went only to Covington, Ky. January 2, 1889, at Philadelphia, $600,000 Ohio and Northwestern bonds sold, one block at 60 cents and one at 57 cents with coupons from July, 1887, attached. May 13, 1889, the "F. F. V." train passed through Portsmouth at 1:30 p. m. on the C. & O. R. R. December 4, 1889, the Scioto Valley began to run a sleeper to Chicago. December 25, 1889, the C. W. & B. R. R. was sold out and transferred to the B. & O. South Western.

January 21, 1890, the Scioto Valley Railroad was sold to a Reorganization Committee for $3,265,200. The indebtedness on it was $44,231,955.79 including all expenses. The Central Trust Company from New York were the buyers for reorganization. The new organization was called the Scioto Valley and New England Railroad, and mortgaged the road for $15,000,000. June 21, 1890, the Norfolk and Western Railroad bought the Scioto Valley Railroad for $5,000,000, and the assumption of bonded indebtedness.

June 11, 1891, the Ohio and Northwestern Railroad ceased to exist and became the Cincinnati, Portsmouth and Virginia Railroad, with a capital stock of $2,160,000.

February 6, 1895, a receiver was appointed for the Norfolk and Western Railroad at Philadelphia. The order was made by the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern Division of Virginia. F. J. Kimball and Henry Fink were the Receivers. November 20, 1895, the Cincinnati, Portsmouth and Virginia Railroad mortgaged its road for $500,000.

November 11, 1895, the Scioto Division of the Norfolk and Western Railroad sold for $110,000. It was sold subject to at $5,000,000 mortgage. The sale was at the Portsmouth Station.

January 24, 1899, the Portsmouth and Ohio Valley Railroad was incorporated to build a Railroad from Wharton to Reitz Stone Quarries. Ignatius Reitz, Albert Reitz, Henry Bannon, George E. Kricker and William Turner were incorporators. July 11, 1899, the Cincinnati, Portsmouth and Virginia Railroad bought the old Harty Spring works property for $21,100. November 1, 1899, through train service from Cincinnati to Pittsburg began by the C. P. & V. Ry. from Cincinnati to Portsmouth, the N. & W. to Kenova and the Ohio River Railroad the remainder of the way. There was one train a day each way.

March 1, 1901, the Norfolk and Western Railroad purchased the Cincinnati, Portsmouth and Virginia Railroad.

County Elections.

It is absolutely impossible to find any records of the elections in Scioto County prior to the year 1818. They were preserved on loose sheets of paper and fled away for a period of time and then destroyed. None are on file or preserved prior to 1876. The election returns given here are taken from old files of newspapers, or from some other sources. The first newspaper ever published in Scioto County was published on August 5, 1818. The returns for the years 1821, 1822, 1823, 1830, 1833, 1834, 1835, 1841, 1843, 1847 and 1857 the Editor was unable to find. The following is the vote for 1818:

For Governor, Ethan Allen Brown received 269 votes; James Dunlap, 189. For Congress, Henry Brush received 415 votes; Levi Barber, 30. State Senator, Edward Tupper received 25 votes; Robert Lucas, 345; Jesse Hitchcock, 70. For Representative, John James received 41 votes; Ezra Osborn, 347; Caleb Hitchcock, 122. For Commissioner, Samuel B. Burt received 178 votes; John Smith, 177; and Gabriel Feurt, 80 votes. For Sheriff, Nathan Wheeler received 389 votes; John Noel, 80. For Coroner, Henry Sumner received 174 votes; Seth Graham, 124 and John H. Thornton, 56.

In the year 1820, the vote is given below. There were no nominations for county officers and each one seemed to run on his own motion:

For Governor, Ethan Allen Brown, 635 votes; Jeremiah Morrow, 8. For Congress, Henry Brush, (Chillicothe), 436 votes; Thomas Scott, (Chillicothe), 211 votes; Levi Barber, (Marietta), 75 votes. State Senator, Robert Lucas, 394 votes; no opposition. Representative, Nathan Wheeler, 465 votes; Caleb Hitchcock, 431; David Mitchell, 200; William Miller, 151; William Collins, 66 votes. Commissioners, Jacob Noel, 287 votes; Joseph Moore, 233; Wm. M. Burk, 210. For Sheriff, John Noel, 229 votes; Elijah McInter, 170 votes; Marcus Bosworth, 123; Elijah Glover, 100; Wm. Oldfield, 96; Joseph Bonser, 9. For Coroner, Uriah Barber, 411 votes; Ebenezer Corwine, 213; H. Sumner, 68 votes.

There are no records between 1820 and 1824.

1824 was a presidential year and the following is the statement of the vote in that year in the county:

For Senator, Robert Lucas, 1,062 votes; John Noel, 525 votes; Jacob Noel, 294. Representative, John Lucas, 974 votes; William Collins, 755; John Davison, 681; Roswell Craine, 653; Thomas Kerr, 247; Francis Adams, 5. For Sheriff, William Carey, 382; Samuel B. Burt, 270; Daniel Corwine, 263; Jacob Anderson, 1. Commissioners, William Lodwick, 424; Daniel McKinney, 265; Jesse Marsall, 258; Charles P. Hatton, 203; John Clingman, 200; John Brown, 122; John Chapman, 121; Samuel R. Nourse, 19; Thomas W. Burt, 19. For Auditor, David Gharky, 593; Ebenezer Corwine, 342. For Congress, S. F. Vinton, 604; Levi Barber, 190.

Robert Lucas was elected to the State Senate and John Lucas and William Collins to the House. William Carey was elected Sheriff, William Lodwick and Daniel McKinney, Commissioners, and David Gharky, Auditor.

To give the elections from year to year such as have been preserved to the present time would occupy the space of the book. These elections are not profitable except for the purpose of showing the increase in the vote for the several years.

1828 being a presidential year the vote on the various county offices is given below:

For Governor, Allen Trimble, 670; John W. Campbell, 352. For Congress, Samuel F. Vinton, 346; George House 346. For Senator, William Kendall, 370; Robert Lucas, 341. For Representative, Joseph Lodwick, 637; John Davison, 390. For Commissioner, William Jackson, 522; Peter T. Lindsey, 394. Auditor, David Gharky, 564; Ezra Osborn, 405. For Sheriff, Moses Gregory.

The election of 1829 was a famous one on account of the Senatorial race between Robert Lucas, David Mitchell and Dr. Giles S. B. Hempstead. The following is the vote on these in the county:

	Lucas.	Mitchell.	Hempstead.
Scioto.....	311	280	233
Lawrence.....	191	211	19
Pike.....	323	108	153
Jackson.....	253	281	36
	1,078	880	441

In this election, George Hammit, a Revolutionary soldier was a candidate for Commissioner and received 212 votes to 442 for Samuel B. Burt. The result of this election to the Whigs caused nominations to be thereafter effected by nominating conventions.

In the election of 1831, there were four candidates for Sheriff and three for Coroner. What they all wanted to run for those offices at that time, no one can now tell, but the vote stood as follows:

Commissioner, William Jackson, 458; John B. Dodds, 252; Thomas Aldridge, 49; N. Littlejohn, 71. Coroner, Uriah Barber, 360; David Enslow, 147; Samuel Gould, 88.

In 1832, Robert Lucas was a candidate for Governor. He received 453 votes in Scioto County to 778 for his opponent, Darius Lyman. This would indicate that Scioto County was strongly Whig. In this year there was a three-sided fight for Congress. In Scioto County, the vote stood, General Duncan McArthur, 753 votes; Wm. Allen, 453; Gen. Wm. S. Murphy, 22. Allen's majority, in the District was one. Judge Mitchell was a candidate for State Senator. He had 766 votes in the county to 437 for John Thomas, but Thomas' majority in the District was 97. Moses Gregory was elected Auditor without opposition, receiving 766 votes. For Assessor, Conrad Overturf received 706 votes and Seymour Pixley, 437. Edward Cranston had no opposition for Commissioner and his vote was 687. There was a three-cornered race for Recorder. John R. Turner had 78 votes; Samuel Nixon, 317 and Havillah Gunn, 78.

In 1836, Joseph Vance for Governor received 977 votes to Eli Baldwin, 550. William Key Bond and William Allen were the candidates for Congress and Bond had 914 votes and Allen 579. There were two representatives to be elected in the joint district of Scioto, Brown and Adams County. William Kendall and James Pilson were the Whig candidates and received 981 and 920 votes respectively. John Glover and James Loudon, of Brown, were the Democrat candidates and received respectively 488 and 599 votes. Moses Gregory, candidate for Auditor, had 1,949 votes. He was opposed by John Peebles, father of John G. Peebles, who received 398 votes. Peter Noel had 997 votes for Commissioner, and R. B. Alfred, 358. The Congressional District included Scioto, Ross, Pike, Fayette and Jackson Counties. William Key Bond's majority in the District was 536. In the year, 1834, William Allen was beaten in the district by 315 votes.

In 1837, Oliver Lindsey was the Whig candidate for Sheriff and Mark Bradburn, the Democratic candidate. Lindsey's vote was 657 to 622 for Bradburn. For Commissioner, William Jackson was the Whig candidate and received 744 votes to 472 for Abijah Batterson on the Democratic ticket. There were four candidates for Assessor, Azel Glover, Whig, 234 votes; John C. Ashley, Democrat, 154; John Peebles, Independent, 40, and James Kinnison, Independent, 109.

The race for Coroner was between William Jones, the old school teacher, who received 210 votes, and Uriah Barber, the Revolutionary soldier, who received 351 votes. Barber was the only Democrat on the ticket who was elected.

For the Legislature, William Kendall had 897 votes, and his opponent, John Glover, Democrat, 408.

For State Senator, Charles White, Whig, had 865 votes, and John Patterson, Democrat, 435 votes. This vote represented the strength of the Whig and Democrats in the county. There was only one candidate for Prosecuting Attorney, Samuel M. Tracy. He received 1,053 votes.

In 1838, Governor Vance on the Whig ticket, had 880 votes, and Shannon, Democrat, had 603. For Congress, Bond on the Whig ticket, had 853 votes, and Latham on the Democratic ticket, 605. For Commissioner, Wm. Salter had 1,015 votes and one C. V. Folen had 32 votes. John R. Turner was a candidate for Recorder and received 778 votes. He was opposed by Wm. Jones, our old friend, the school teacher, who had 227 votes.

In 1839, for Commissioner, Peter Noel had 756 votes and Thayer D. White, his opponent, 619 votes. The parties' strength was represented on the vote for Senator. George Edwards of Brown, Whig, received 755 votes, and John Glover, of Scioto, Democrat, 690 votes.

In 1840, in the race for Governor, Corwine had 1,421 votes and Shannon, 790. William Russell for Congress, had 1,884 votes and Allen Latham 779. Russell's majority in the district was 1,700. Daniel Young for Representative, had 1,357 votes and his opponent, Tieran had 785. Wm. L. Boynton, was elected commissioner by 1,334 votes to 792 for Thayer D. White. For Sheriff, John H. Thornton, had 1,356 votes and his opponent, Clark, 781.

In 1842, Corwine for Governor had 1,073 votes and Shannon, his Democratic opponent had 780. For Sheriff, John H. Thornton had 880 votes and John Cook, 920. This was the time John Cook stole a march on the Whigs and defeated their candidate for Sheriff. Everybody was suprised at this result except John Cook, who knew how it was done.

In 1844, Bartley, Whig, for Governor, had 1,451 votes and Todd, Democrat, 1,087. Vinton, for Congress, had 1,454 and Mr. Morgan, his opponent, had 1,069. This year Isaac H. Wheeler was elected Sheriff. He had 1,384 votes to 1,147 for John Cook.

In 1846, the Whig candidate for Congress had 989 votes and Byington, Democrat, had 754. For Representative, John A. Turley had 1,064 votes and Abijah Batterson, 771.

In 1848, J. L. Taylor for Congress had 1,530 and Francis Cleveland, Democrat, had 1,064. Moses Gregory, as Surveyor had no opposition. For Infirmary Director, John McDowell, Whig candidate, had 1,501 votes, and Samuel J. Huston, Democrat, 1,067 votes.

In 1849, Wm. L. Salter, Republican candidate, for Senator, received 1,192 votes and Joseph McCormick, Democrat, 643 votes. For Representative, James Rodgers, Republican, received 1,162 votes and Wm. Newman, Democrat, 695 votes. This was the year in which Edward Jordan defeated Samuel M. Tracy for Prosecuting Attorney. He received 961 votes to 936 for Tracy. Wm. Conklin, Whig, defeated Abijah Batterson, Democrat, for Treasurer by a vote of 1,198 to 709.

In 1850, J. L. Taylor, Whig candidate for Congress, carried the county by receiving 1,126 votes to 654 for McCormick. In that year, Col. Moore, Whig, defeated Johnson, Democrat. Moore had 1,326 votes to 430 for Johnson.

In 1851, Col. O. F. Moore received for Senator, 1,309 votes to 888 for Francis Cleveland, Democrat. W. A. Hutchins, Whig Candidate for Representative, received 1,148 votes against Joseph Moore, Democrat, who received 828 votes. This was the year in which John R. Turner was elected Clerk of the Courts for that term by a vote of 1,134 to 1,133 for George H. Flanders, only 1 vote majority. For Treasurer John Cook received 1,278 to 790 for George H. Sharkey. For Prosecuting Attorney, Edward A. Jordan, Democrat, received 1,334 votes to 731 for Samuel M. Tracy, Whig. The vote on Coroner was the closest fight. John Squires, Whig candidate received 822 votes; C. F. Reiniger 821. For Infirmary Director, Joseph Riggs received 1,160 votes. James Lodwick, Democrat, 986 votes.

In 1852, the Whigs made a clean sweep. For Congress, Taylor had 1,419 votes and Sherer, Democrat, had 1,083. George A. Waller, Whig, received 1,326 votes for Auditor to 1,145 for Thomas Kendall.

In 1853, Nelson Barrere for Governor, (Highland County,) received 1,077 votes to 1,260 for Wm. Medill, Democrat. One Lewis a third candidate, received 120 votes. In this year the Democrats seemed to have swept everything. There was a Democrat re-action.

Thomas McCauslen, for Senator, received 1,622 votes, Elijah Glover 708. Joseph Riggs, candidate for State Board of Equalization, received 1,103 votes and one Anderson, the Democratic candidate, 1,331. George Hoad for Representative, received 738 votes. One Hudson, had 1,072 and Cassidy had 685. Martin Crain was a Whig candidate for Recorder. He received 1,275 votes to 1,169 for B. F. Cunningham.

In 1855, on the vote for Governor, Salmon P. Chase had 1,042 and Medill 1,050, Trimble, 1,740. On the vote for Senator, H. S. Bundy had 482 votes to 1,067 for Westphall. For Representative, Daniel McFarland received 1,145 votes to 1,049 for Hempstead, Democrat. For Prosecuting Attorney, Glover received 1,206 votes and George Johnson, Independent, 1,167.

In 1856, Col. Moore for Congress on the American ticket had 1,343 votes and Miller, on the Democratic ticket, had 1,399. Hoffman, Republican, 533. Coffrin, American, 1,571 votes and John Cook, Democrat, 1,616. The Democrats elected their Auditor, J. J. Appler by a vote of 1,395 to 1,294 for George W. Flanders, American. Judge Searl, candidate for Auditor, had 483. He was on the Republican ticket. Benjamin Miles was the American candidate for Recorder. He had 1,501 votes. McCrum, Democratic candidate for the same office had 1,375. Cole, Republican, 374. Joseph Riggs was the Republican candidate for Commissioner and had 473 votes. Tracy, on the American ticket, for Commissioner had 1,363 votes and Hudson, Democrat, had 1,391. Thomas Keys, Republican candidate for Surveyor had 473 votes, Brown, Democrat, 1,508; Gregory, American, 1,142.

The returns for 1857 were not found.

In 1858, the race was a straight one between the Republicans and Democrats. Carey A. Trimble, Republican candidate for Congress, had 1,879 votes; Joseph Miller, Democrat, 1,489. For Common Pleas Judge, W. W. Johnson, Republican, had 1,785 and E. F. Bingham, Democrat, 1,543. On the vote for Commissioner, Wm. Veach, Republican, had 1,764 votes and Joseph Moore, Democrat, 1,599. At this election, Johnson for Judge had 307 majority in the five counties. Trimble, candidate for Congress, had 939 majority.

In 1859, the political vote in the county was Governor, Wm. Dennison, Republican, 1,808 votes; Rufus P. Ranney, Democrat, 1,324; the Republicans carried the county for State Board of Equalization, State Senator, Common Pleas Judge, Treasurer, Prosecuting Attorney and Recorder. The Democrats won on Commissioner, Andrew J. Enslow had 1,529 votes and Joseph Jackson, Republican, 1,486. The vote on Treasurer was Philip Noel, Republican, 1,598 votes, Jesse Appler, Democrat, 1,541. For Representative, John W. Collins, Republican, 1,658 and Stephen Smith, Democrat, 1,349. There was a vote in the County on annual sessions of the Legislature. Scioto County voted 220 for it to 828 against it.

We have given a short statement of the elections returns of the County for the first fifty-seven years. For further particulars on this subject, we refer to the State publications, or to the bound volumes of newspapers published in the county.

A law should be passed requiring the annual county elections to be recorded and preserved in permanent form. All prior to 1876 have been destroyed by the County Officers.

Independence Days.

The first record we have of any celebration in the new County of Scioto was on the 4th of July, 1808. Isaac Bonser, who lived on Bonser's Run, gave a great celebration. He cut his wheat and took it to Maysville, and had it ground to make bread. At that time it took him two days to go to Maysville in a canoe. It is reported that he pushed the canoe back up the river in one day. By some means the notice of this celebration, became noised abroad, and people came from West Union, Maysville, Chillicothe, and Gallipolis. There were 300 present. They were mostly hunters, which means that they were persons intimate and well acquainted with Isaac Bonser, who was a great hunter himself. The parties at the celebration bored out a log and banded it with iron to make a cannon, but it bursted. Robert Lucas read "the Declaration" and made a speech. Fresh meat was baked over a pit of hickory coals. An old Virginia negro was cook. Some of the party remained several days. General Tupper of Marietta was present. Whiskey was plenty. John Campbell was the gunner of that day and when he touched the gun off he dodged behind a poplar tree, and it is said to have bursted at the sixth discharge.

July 4, 1825 was a great day in Union Township. There was a celebration there by Captain Peter Noel's Rifle Company. There was a free dinner and sixteen toasts were proposed and responded to. Among them were John Q. Adams, Henry Clay, The Ohio Canal and the State of Ohio.

July 4, 1827 was celebrated in Portsmouth, the first we have of any record. A procession was formed in front of the Court House, then on Market street there were two companies of Militia in uniform, that marched to the Presbyterian meeting house on Second street, just east of Lynn's livery stable. The ceremonies opened with prayer. Edward Hamilton read the Declaration of Independence, and an oration was pronounced by Charles O. Tracy. The procession marched back and sat down to dinner on the river bank. Thirteen toasts were offered. Of the volunteer toasts, John Noel responded to "the Patriots of 1776." John H. Thornton, John R. Turner, Dr. N. W. Andrews and Samuel Dole all responded to toasts. The Light Infantry, Captain John McDowell, dined at Colonel McDonald's. That Company also had thirteen regular toasts. Captain Kennedy Lodwick's Artillery Company also celebrated the day at a public dinner at Peebles' tavern.

July 4, 1829, there was a proper celebration of the day in Portsmouth. The notice of the arrangements was published as early as June 6. At a meeting on June 13th, Samuel M. Tracy was chairman and M. B. Ross Secretary of the meeting. The Committee to take charge of the celebration was: Col. John McDonald, Dr. Andrews, Dr. Hempstead and Samuel M. Tracy.

Perhaps the greatest celebration ever in the history of Portsmouth was on July 4, 1831. The citizens assembled at the Court House at 11 o'clock A. M. Rev. E. Brainard opened with prayer. Francis Cleveland read the Declaration of Independence. Then there were salvos of Artillery, which were always fired directly after the reading of "the Declaration," a defiance to old King George. Edward Hamilton delivered the oration. John H. Thornton and Henry Jeffords marshalled the procession, and they marched to a grove just south of the late residence of John P. Terry. Cornelius McCoy furnished the dinner. William Oldfield and Roswell Crain presided by turns. There were 120 at the table, among them were several Revolutionary Soldiers and some strangers. There was an amateur choir and ladies were present. There were thirteen regular toasts and 24 volunteer toasts. Among those who participated in the dinner were, Axel Glover, James W. Davis, M. B. Ross, J. L. McVey, George Corwine, John Lawson, R. R. Peebles, brother of John G., Gen. Wm. Kendall, M. O. Reeves, E. Gunn, Robert Montgomery, Jacob Offnere, Francis Cleveland, Henry Cooper, Elijah Glover, John R. Turner, James Young, Z. P. Flower, George McCague, who each and all responded to volunteer toasts. Five of these were in honor of Henry Clay. There were many references afterwards to this celebration, and future generations in Portsmouth, regarded it as the greatest celebration which had ever taken place.

THE McDERMOTT STONE CO. MILL, NO. 1.

July 4, 1838, the 62nd anniversary of the Independence of the United States, was duly celebrated in Portsmouth. The people met at 10:30 at the Court House. This was the present Court House. Rev. Nairn prayed, Captain Cleveland read the Declaration, and Benjamin Ramsey delivered the oration. Colonel John Row marshaled the procession to Waller's Woods. The dinner was prepared by John Watson, and as usual there were thirteen regular toasts. The volunteer toasts were by William Oldfield, George Corwine, William V. Peck, B. Kepner, C. O. Tracy, Edward Hamilton, Benjamin Ramsey, Thomas Sterne, Elijah Glover, R. H. Patillo, W. P. Camden and W. S. Belt, a son of Judge Levin Belt, a teller in the bank. Mr. Ramsey's oration was published in the Tribune of July 10th, by request.

July 4, 1839, the Sunday Schools celebrated Independence Day in Portsmouth. Addresses were made by Rev. A. Brown, Rev. E. Burr and Rev. W. Simmons. Edward Hamilton read the Declaration of Independence. There was a basket dinner for the first time in Portsmouth John Kennedy Lodwick, John B. Davis and James McDowell, who were then lads, carried the banner in the procession.

July 4, 1840, there were two celebrations, one by "the Franklin Institute" at the Court House, where O. F. Moore delivered an oration; and the other by "the Mechanics." The latter formed a procession at the Market House under charge of Captain Samuel Huston, Marshal and Elihu Cook, assistant; and with the Portsmouth band went to Waller's Woods, where A. C. Davis read the Declaration and W. R. Holmes delivered the oration. Thomas Lloyd of the Exchange furnished the dinner.

July 4, 1842, the Sunday Schools again celebrated the day. They assembled at the Methodist Church and marched to the woods, where the Declaration was read by A. C. Davis, and William E. Williams delivered the oration. William Newman presided and there were thirteen toasts as usual.

July 4, 1846, there was firing of guns all day. The Portsmouth Guards, Captain P. Kinney went to the woods in the forenoon, returned to the U. S. hotel and listened to an oration by Col. O. F. Moore; they also had a dinner prepared by Colonel Graham. At 6 P. M. they went to L. N. Robinson's, where the ladies of the town had an entertainment. There were speeches, rockets, fire balloons, etc. The Washington Guards, Captain Reiniger, drilled during the day and went to a ball in the evening at the National Hotel. The Washington Dragoons, a horse company, paraded during the day. A Rifle Company from Lucasville under Captain Morgan was in town. There were 800 to 1,000 people in the town from adjoining towns. One young man got drunk and was sent to what was called "the Cowhorn tavern," a substitute of that day, for the County jail.

July 4, 1849, the people of Portsmouth were holding their breath on account of cholera, and there was no public celebration. The Washington Guards turned out and paraded and so did Captain Clark's Company of Horses.

July 4, 1850, the Portsmouth Guards paraded and marched to Morgan's Grove, where the Declaration was read by Samuel Riggs. An address was made by Lieutenant O. F. Moore. A collation was spread and toasts were drank with lemonade. There was platoon firing, and the ladies were present. On returning the ladies were invited to march to town inside of a hollow square, formed by the Guards. The invitation was accepted by several and one lady carried a musket. Her name has not been preserved. In the afternoon the Sunday Schools met at the Methodist Church where addresses were delivered and afterwards the children went to the Kentucky hills. The steamers "Whiteman" and "Resort," with a band on the former, brought down a party of Kentuckians, who took dinner at the Franklin House. Between 4 and 5 P. M. "the Raging Tads," a party of maskers arranged in fantastic style, paraded east of the U. S. Hotel. The roll of this organization, composed of awful names, was called. They shouted "We eat all we kill," and pretended to be Cannibals. At this remote period, it will be proper to say that Squire Hall, then a youth, was the leading spirit in the organization.

July 4, 1851, began the fashion of basket picnics in the Country on Independence Day, and many parties went out picnicing on that day. The Portsmouth Guards paraded. They marched down town and took dinner at Huston's Hotel. Lieutenant O. F. Moore and John R. Turner made addresses.

July 4, 1864, was celebrated by a dinner to the returned soldiers of the 56th O. V. I. at Massie Hall. This was a public dinner and reception. The returning veterans paraded the street. A great many people came down on the noon train, on the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad. They assembled at the lower Market House. Colonel Kinney presided, and speeches were made by Hon. Eli Glover, Col. J. R. Hurd and Dan McFarland. Then they went to Massie Hall and had dinner, which was gotten up by John Vetter. There were two saloon fights on account of war feeling, while the dinner was going on. William Lloyd beat up a countryman named Slocum and Frank Wear struck Lieutenant H. Lantz of the 56th Ohio, with a sling shot. John L. Ward, acting marshal undertook to arrest them and he was struck with a stone. The political feeling was high. The 56th O. V. I. left the Massie Hall and put an end to the disorder. Captain Henry E. Jones made a speech at the 56th O. V. I. dinner.

July 4, 1871, cannon were fired at midnight. There was a band of music paraded the streets at 5 A. M., at which time the City firemen paraded. It rained most of the day and the firemen occupied Wilhelm's Hall or Opera House, all day for their pleasure.

July 4, 1876, was the hundredth anniversary of Independence Day and the Centennial Fourth was celebrated in Music Hall, a temporary structure on Chillicothe street. The following was the program: Music, prayer by Rev. E. P. Pratt, Patriotic Ode, Introductory Address, N. W. Evans, Introductory Address in German by Prof. Carl Huber, Music, Reading of the Declaration, W. W. Monroe, Centennial Poem; J. W. Fulton, Oration, Hon. Wells A. Hutchins, Music, Historical Address, Rev. J. T. Franklin, Music, History of the County, Elijah Glover, Doxology, Benediction by Rev. C. W. Bethausen. The programme was carried out to the letter, but the attendance was not as it should have been for the hundredth anniversary. The people who ought to have been there were picnicking in the country, but those who were present were brimful and running over with patriotism, and those attending made up for those who were absent.

July 4, 1890, was formally celebrated in Portsmouth. At 5 P. M. gun firing began and 42 guns were fired at intervals of five minutes. There was a parade at 9 in the morning in seven divisions:

1. The City Police, Civic Band, River City Dragoons, with Creed Milstead, Grand Marshal.
2. The Soldiers of the Civil War under Captain Cole Gillman.
3. The Sons of Veterans under Filmore Musser, Colonel.
4. The uniformed secret societies preceded by the Jackson band, A. L. Sanford, Colonel.
5. The Winchester band followed by non-uniformed secret societies, W. A. Connelley, Colonel.

6. Division, State troops under Col. A. C. Thompson.
7. This Division was commanded by Colonel Stanton, embracing the City and County officials, members of the Press, visitors and citizens.

The parade extended to the Fair Grounds on Robinson Avenue. On the Fair Grounds there were prize drills, potato race, chasing of greased pigs, sack race and wheelbarrow race. In the evening there were fire works, and a company of Zouaves from Cincinnati were present, also the Champion City Guards of Springfield and the Ohio State University Cadets.

July 4, 1892, the government building was dedicated in the City of Portsmouth. At sunrise 44 guns were fired. At 9:30 in the morning there was a procession from the lower Market space to the government building, military, labor and civil societies, fire department, city authorities, etc. At the government building there was a patriotic song, followed by prayer by the Rev. D. S. Tappan, D. D., an address of welcome by Mayor Henry Hall, an address by Hon. A. C. Thompson, music, Declaration of Independence read by Hon. J. W. Newman, music, address by Hon. Charles H. Grosvenor. The Grand Army of the Republic, the Sons of Veterans, Company H., were in the procession. There were fire works at night on the river front, not less than thirty pieces. In the afternoon there was a balloon ascension and fire works.

July 4, 1896, the day was fully observed. The fire department paraded at 8:30 in the morning. At 10 A. M. the grand parade started from Market street. One hundred wheelmen with decorated wheels headed the parade. This included the Portsmouth Cycling Club, the Scioto Club of ladies and visiting wheelmen. Then the Marshal walking and the City Police, the River City band, Company H., 14th O. V. I., Alcazar Temple, D. O. K. K. The Tenth Regiment Uniformed Knights of Pythias with a band of field officers, Knights of St. John, Junior order of Americans, Mechanics with a float, the Engineers, machinists, cigar makers, bricklayers and carpenters followed, with a band, the City Officials were in carriages, followed by citizens in carriages. After the parade Hon. James W. Newman delivered an address at the Gallia street plaza. In the afternoon there were games at the ball park and fair grounds, and band music at Tracy Park, Gallia street plaza and at the Market street esplanade. At 5 P. M. all the bands met at the Gallia street plaza and marched to the esplanade where they played Sousa's grand march. At 6:30 P. M. the firemen made a run to Second and Chillicothe street. At 7 P. M. there was a band concert on Market street, when the Uniformed Knights of Pythias gave their silent drill. At 8 P. M. there were fire works on the river front. "Welcome to Portsmouth," "The Bicycle Rider" and "Good Night" were given.

July 4, 1898, was ushered in by the ringing of bells, firing of cannons and by bonfires at York Place. "Little Mac" the cannon was kept going all day and seven kegs of powder were used up. Early in the morning the four Portsmouth bands played in different parts of the City, and at 9:30 in the morning they met at the lower Market space. At 10:30 there was a public meeting at Tracy Square. W. F. Genheimer read the Declaration of Independence and Theodore F. Davidson delivered the oration. There were excursions from adjacent towns. In the afternoon news was received of Admiral Sampson's victory over the Spanish Admiral, Cervera and the town went wild. At 6:30 there was a procession of five bands, the police and the Uniformed Red Men in honor of Sampson's Victory. There were fireworks in the evening. One of the set pieces was a picture of Admiral Dewey, another the American Eagle, and the last was the bombardment of Manila.

Notable Trials.

The issue of the Portsmouth Times of April 25, 1850, gives an account of Samuel Morgan, of this county, who murdered his wife May 5, 1857. Morgan was a tough citizen who lived a mile or two above Franklin Furnace, up the branch. Morgan was forty-five, a brute and a bully. He was wretchedly poor and a great fighter. He liked to fight those who offended him. When the news of the murder was out, the body of his wife was found in an out house, with her head beaten to a jelly and covered with blood. He had come home, drunk, beaten his wife with a club, and after killing her, dragged her body with a log chain to a fire and tried to burn it and then left it in an out house and went away. Morgan was arrested and brought before Squire Samuel Gould, father of Orin B. Gould. At the next term, Morgan was indicted. Owing to the feeling against him it was difficult to obtain a jury. The jury was as follows: 1. Garrett Newman. 2nd. Jesse Vulgamore. 3rd. Alex Oliver. 4th. Francis Henry. 5th. Jonathan Tracy. 6th. John Hazelbaker. 7th. Joab Freeman. 8th. William Holt. 9th. Robert H. Thompson. 10th. Nicholas Nail. 11th. Fred J. Griffith. 12th. John Basham. John Cook was sheriff and the jury was boarded at the Franklin House. Martin Crain was prosecutor, assisted by Colonel O. F. Moore. Edward W. Jordan, John W. Collings and Thomas McCauslen defended. Honorable W. V. Peck was judge. The court house was crowded and the ladies attended. The trial was ably conducted on both sides. Ed. Jordan referred to the thirst for the prisoner's blood and said that this same feeling controlled by reason was responsible for the Sam Morgan's of society. The jury was out but a short time and returned with a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. A motion for a new trial was overruled. The judge sentenced him to be hung September 24, 1858, between nine A. M. and four P. M. The Portsmouth Artillery Company, Captain W. C. Appler guarded the jail. Morgan hung himself in jail. Squire Henry Hall and John J. McFarlin took him down.

February 12, 1862, William P. Martin replevined a cat of Giles Gilbert. The case was tried before the mayor and a jury; C. C. Hyatt, John Neill, Washington Kinney, William Newman and Philip Kelley. Henry A. Towne for Plaintiff. John W. Collings for Defendant. The cat was brought into court. The witnesses for plaintiff were Lewis C. Barber, John Reider, John Sullivan, and William Stewart. All testified the cat belonged to Martin. Giles Gilbert, Jr., William Gilbert, John P. Terry, William McFarland, C. E. Rase, John Suter, John McFarlin, J. C. Gilbert witnesses for defendant were all sure the cat belonged to Gilbert. The cat was appraised at ten dollars. The costs were thirty-four dollars and twenty-five cents. February 19, 1862, the Tribune gave an account of the Cat Case: The Cat really belonged to Gilbert. Martin's cat had "absquatulated." John T. Miller was a clerk for Martin and occupied a column in the Times about the case. McFarland came back with the cat in the Tribune of February 26th. The case is said to have cost William P. Martin $97.00. Giles Gilbert stated that the cat was worth ten dollars and the jury awarded that sum. Gilbert did not intend to defend the suit, but on persuasion from John W. Collings, did so. After the trial the cat came back to Gilbert's and remained. Martin did not try to reclaim it. He remained on good terms with Gilbert after the suit. An account of the trial was published in the London Times. Gilbert raised the cat. Martin's cat had been gone six months before the suit. The Times in its article about the case was very funny and closed its piece with the word—"Scat!"

April 2, 1862—State vs. W. S. McLean, murder in the first degree. Those on the jury were: James M. Oliver, Peter H. Brown, M. G. Nichols, Joseph Throckmorton, Thomas Brown, Matthew Burris, Joseph Pearce, Debo V. Larkin, Joseph Tracy, James J. Densmore, Aaron Noel, John Thomas. A. J. Enslow, Nathaniel Rice, Dr. C. M. Finch, Mary Cooper, W. D. Wilcox, J. D. Merrill, Susan McNeal, Sidney Patton, John H. Lee, Andy Henler, John Wolf, Uriah White and George Sturdy were among the witnesses for the State. Those for the defense were: Doctor Tyrrel, Judge Cranston, Eli McLean, Anna McLean and Henry McLean. The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty." The accused was about twenty-four years old. Silas D. Powell and two children were blown up and killed.

March 11, 1874—Daniel Pursell vs Doctor William J. McDowell. Malpractice. $5,000.00 damages for not setting the plaintiff's shoulder properly. The plaintiff's snoulder properly. The plaintiff claimed he was treated for a fractured arm when it was dislocation of the shoulder. The defendant claimed that the result was due to the plaintiff's disregard of directions while the healing process was going on. The verdict was $5.00 for the plaintiff. This is remarkable as the verdict should have been for some considerable sum or for the defendant. July 1, 1874, Doctor McDowell moved for a new trial. It was refused. He then took a second trial under the statute and it was had at June 1, 1874, and resulted in a verdict for $359.00 which he paid. Doctor McDowell claimed he was Doctor Finch's patient and Doctor Finch denied it. Doctor McDowell also claimed that at the time Pursell came to him, it was impossible to determine the injury and the treatment and that Pursell disobeyed directions and brought about the result.

Olive Applegate vs W. Kinney & Company, on a certificate of deposit with W. Kinney & Company, to hold as quasi partners twenty persons formerly stockholders in the Iron National Bank. Many like suits were depending on this. The plaintiff sued on a certificate of deposit for $424. Hutchins and Bannon for the plaintiff. Thompson, Searl, Evans and O. F. Moore for the defendant. The case was tried at great length. Colonel Moore argued three full days for the defendant. The case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed against all the defendants. Afterwards these defendants raised and paid $20,000.00 for the creditors and were released from all claims.

January 31, 1880—Before Nelson W. Evans, United States Commissioner. The United States vs. Andrew Pieron for violation of the civil rights law in refusing to furnish Pharaoh L. McDaniels a meal in his restaurant.

The Scioto County Bible Society was organized February 18, 1830, at the Presbyterian Meeting House. At the meeting for organization, Ezra Osborn was President of the meeting and John Peebles Secretary. Samuel Gunn, John C. Ashley and Ezra Osborn were appointed a Committee to draft a Constitution and report at an adjourned meeting on the first Monday in March.

November 26, 1854, the Society met. John McDowell was President. Rev. J. P. Robbins addressed the meeting, also Rev. Mahee, Rev. W. N. Spahr and Rev. E. P. Pratt. The collection was $97.44, of which $30.00 was to make Rev. E. P. Pratt, a life member. Rev. Erastus Burr, D. D. was made President. This was the first time he was referred to as D. D. in the newspapers. The following were elected: Vice Presidents, George Herod, James S. Fuller, Josiah Merrill, B. B. Gaylord and John B. Dodds. Rev. E. P. Pratt was Secretary and John McDowell, Treasurer and Depository.

On June 26, 1864, Dr. Burr was still President and Rev. E. P. Pratt, Secretary. S. S. Hard was County Assessor. At this time, it was resolved to have a Depository in every Township.

On May 28, 1882, the Society celebrated its forty-fifth anniversary, so stated, which would date its organization to 1837. Dr. Burr was President and Dr. Pratt, Secretary. Rev. J. W. Dillon addressed the meeting.

Bibliography.

"The Autobiography of Dan Young, a New England Preacher of the Olden Time," was edited by W. P. Strickland, and published in 1860, by Carlton and Foster, 120 Mulberry street New York. Rev. Dan Young located in Scioto County in 1829. He leaves out of his book what would most interest persons of this time, and it is largely an account of his feelings, his emotions, his fears and hopes, from a religious point of view. He could have told of the early developments of the County and its people, but he gives but very little of that. He was an interesting character for his time, and was a power in the community and the church. He has a sketch in this work.

In 1868, E. E. Ewing issued the "Story of the Ninety-first." It was a collection of 31 pages read at a re-union of the Ninety-first O. V. L. held at Portsmouth, Ohio, April 8, 1868.

September 10, 1879, the venerable Doctor Hempstead had just completed a pamphlet entitled "History and Development of the American Continent." It was published as a serial by the Portsmouth Tribune. It began September 17, 1879.

April 3, 1880, James Keyes published a small book of 121 pages, entitled, "Pioneers of Scioto County," being a short Biographical sketch of some of the First Settlers of Scioto County, Ohio, comprising such historical matter and anecdotes of the early settlement of the County as could be collected at the present time. He sold it at 25 cents per copy. The Volume is in double column and was originally published in the Portsmouth Republican, in the period from 1875 to 1880. The writer could not find any bound volumes of that paper anywhere, nor copies for that matter. The sketches of the French Settlers in Green and Porter Townships in the French Grant used by Mr. Keyes were first published in the Ironton Register, in 1855, and as to these he admits he copied from Prof. J. P. LaCroix. Mr. Keyes admits that out of respect to the feelings of the surviving children and friends much had to be suppressed. Mr. Keyes' book is invaluable as he has preserved many facts which otherwise at this time would be utterly lost. It is a great pity Mr. Keyes did not write up all the pioneers of Scioto County. Had he done so, much interesting matter now lost, would have been preserved.

"The Battlefield Reviewed" was published in 1883, at Chicago, by the author Rev. Landon Taylor, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It contains a narrative of his life, which included a ministry of forty years, four years of which was in Southern Ohio. It is full of readable reminiscences and the account he gives of his life and experience in Scioto County is quite interesting. He located in Scioto County in 1834. He was the father of Doctor James L. Taylor, of Wheelersburg, Ohio, and his mortal part rests in the Wheelersburg Cemetery.

"Arbitration between Capital and Labor, a History and an Argument," by Daniel J. Ryan of Columbus, Ohio, was published by A. H. Smythe, in 1885.

"A Life History Consisting of Incidents and Experiences in the Life of George B. Crane with Comments on a Variety of Topics." Written by himself for the information and entertainment of his family and descendants. San Jose, Mercury Print, 1886. Dr. Crane once practiced medicine in Lucasville and afterwards at Wheelersburg.

"A History of Ohio, with Biographical Sketches of her Governors and the Ordinance of 1787," by Daniel J. Ryan, was published in Columbus, Ohio, in 1888, by A. H. Smythe.

"The Scioto Company and its Purchase." An address by Daniel J. Ryan, at the Centennial of Gallipolis, Ohio, October 19, 1890, was published in Volume 3, Ohio Archaeological Society, pp. 109 to 140.

"History of the Second Regiment West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers during the War of the Rebellion," by J. J. Sutton late a private of the Regiment. Portsmouth, Ohio, 1892.

"The Milliad (1,000 verses)—A Poem of Justice and Liberty, an Epic of the Ages as also of the United States," by James L. Treuthart, B. L. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Published for the author by The Argyle Press, 1894.

In October, 1895, Nelson W. Evans published "General Putnam's Wolf Hunt." It appeared in Putnam's Magazine. Volume 5, Number 10, published at Salem, Mass.

June 4, 1898, Doctor James L. Taylor, A. M., M. D., of Wheelersburg, read before the American Academy of Medicine, a paper entitled "The Amount of Work the Growing Brain Should Undertake." It was printed in the Bulletin of the American Academy of Medicine. Volume 3, Number 9. It has been reprinted in a pamphlet of 14 pages.

In 1899, E. E. Ewing published "Bugles and Bells or Stories told Again" including the story of the Ninety-first. Reunion Poems and Sacred Tributes. Curtis & Jennings of Cincinnati were the publishers.

"Typhoid Fever, a Quarter of a Century's Experience Therewith," with reference to some unsolved problems, by James L. Taylor, M. D., of Wheelersburg, Ohio, was reprinted from the Journal of the American Medical Association, September 2, 1899, and also by the Chicago Medical Association Press, 1899.

In December, 1900, Nelson W. Evans issued his "History of Adams County, Ohio." It had a joint editorship Hon. Emmons B. Stivers, of Brown County, Ohio, being associated with him in the work. The volume is of 946 pages and has 100 illustrations. The edition was limited to 541 copies.

"The Expansion of the American People, Social and Territorial," by Professor Edwin Erle Sparks, Ph. D., Assistant Professor of American History in the University of Chicago, was published in 1900, in Chicago.

"History of the 53rd Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry" during the War of the Rebellion 1861 to 1865, together with more than thirty personal sketches of officers and men, by John K. Duke, Company F, 53rd O. V. I. The Blade Printing Company, Portsmouth, Ohio, were the publishers, 1900.

"Nullification in Ohio," an essay by Hon. Dan J. Ryan, was published in 1900, in Volume 2, p. 413, of the publication of the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Society.

Professor Edwin Erle Sparks also published another book in 1901, entitled "The Men Who Made The Nation." The MacMillan Company of New York and London, were the publishers.

In the December (1901) number of the Bulletin of the American Academy of Medicine, Dr. James L. Taylor of Wheelersburg, has an article entitled, "A Suppressed Educational Problem." It occupies eight pages.

Louis N. Bishop, a native of Portsmouth, Ohio, but now a citizen of Cincinnati, Ohio, is the author of the "Modern Designer", a book showing the natural way of producing garments which are perfectly balanced, stylish and graceful. The book is protected by copyright. Mr. Bishop has been a designer of men's and boys' clothing for some time. He has made quite a reputation in his art, and is giving instructions in designing. His book is purely and entirely technical, and for the use only of those who design and cut garments, but it is unique in its way. Nothing of the kind has heretofore appeared, and it has been favorably received by the trade. Mr. Bishop is at present connected with the house of Sanford, Storrs & Varner, Third and Race streets, Cincinnati, Ohio, but his skill and ability bid fair to give him a National reputation in his business.

"From Charter to Constitution," by Hon. Dan J. Ryan, was published in Volume 5, of the Ohio Archaeological Society, pp., 7 to 13.

Rev. J. D. Herron has composed and published the following music: Two Christmas Carols: "I Know, I Know," and "O Ring, Glad Bells." They were published by W. A. Pond & Company of New York. "Communion Service, in A, Flat," was published by Church & Company of New York. "Benedicte, 1 and 2", were published by himself.

The editor prepared a list of the deaths of this description from June 1865 to November 9, 1801, made up from the newspapers in Scioto County, giving the particulars in each case, but when the article was completed it was so grewsomes he suppressed it, and has only given the statistics tabulated from it. The article if published would have been in exceedingly bad taste and would have harrowed up the feelings of many of the readers of the Book. It was a record of pitiful suicides, of children neglected and exposed to the perils of fire and of the rivers surrounding the city and through and adjoining the county, of inexcusable recklessness in the handling of fire arms and machinery. It was projected with the idea that its publication would tend to guard against and prevent similar catastrophes, but the editor has come to the conclusion, that if Saint Lazarus himself, would come back and warn the people, it would have no effect, and having worried with the printers in getting out this work till he has lost a temper as serene as Lazarus was supposed to have had, he has concluded his warnings would be of no use. From now till the end of the world children will be left alone and burned up, small boys will steal away from home and be drowned, muzzles of guns and pistols, supposed to be unloaded, will be pointed in fun and deal a death discharge in earnest. Men and women will be careless with rapid and powerful machinery, young girls will continue to pour coal oil from filled cans on lighted fires and the electric cars will make their usual slaughtering of the innocents. As yet the automobile has not done its deadly work in the county, but its time is at hand. The one person who owed his death to horse cars was Charles Good; aged nine years, run over October 13, 1882.

The Mound Builders.

The following are extracts from a pamphlet published in 1888 by Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead, entitled "The Mound Builders." A particular and minute description of the ancient earthworks in Portsmouth, Ohio, by Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead, M. D., April, 1883. Printed by the Blade Publishing Co., 1883, Portsmouth, Ohio.

No earth works like those in the Ohio Valley are found in any other part of the known world. The mounds which stood on the site of the Children's Home with the parallel mounds to the southeast and southwest and to the northwest may be designated as follows: The works, designated for convenience as the Citadel, are located—partly on the ground of the Children's Home and partly on the grounds west and north. The Citadel is surrounded by an earthen wall, three feet high with four openings or gateways, northeast, northwest, southeast and southwest. This circle is six hundred feet in diameter and incloses four horseshoe mounds. The two larger are parallel to each other and the two smaller located on either side of the gateway, to the southeast. The eastern large horseshoe mound in the Children's Home grounds is well preserved. The western large horseshoe mound has been plowed down. The two larger horseshoe mounds are one hundred and fifty feet across the heel of the shoe and from heel to toe about one hundred and sixty feet and twelve feet high. The two smaller are ten feet across the heel, twelve feet from heel to toe and three feet high with the toe placed close to the inside of the surrounding wall on either side of the southeast opening. It is supposed that the horse shoe mounds were foundations of buildings of some sort, forming a tent or tabernacle opening to the south. The smaller mounds were probably sentry boxes to prevent improper persons from entering. To the southeast were parallel wall mounds, extending to the Temple mound across the Ohio river, in Kentucky. The Temple mound in Kentucky was at the end of the parallel mounds on walls extending from the Citadel. It was twenty feet high, surrounded by segments of three circles with an inner ditch, continuous except at the main entrance on the west side. Three entrance ways go in at right angles to the inner ditch which keep all intruders out except from the west side. The level within the ditch and around the mound is one hundred and fifty feet inside. This mound was surveyed and platted by Captain Francis Cleveland and was then in a good state of preservation. The mound and surroundings are nearly destroyed. The mound itself is but six feet high and the segments are nearly destroyed, barely traceable. There was a graded way around the mound by easy ascent to the top. The mound is not round, but truncated, longest east and west. There is a mound west of the Temple mound, in a good state of preservation. The ditch about it is fifteen feet wide, from the bottom to the top of the outside wall, which surrounds it, and which is three feet high. The mound is six feet high and approached from a gateway to the south. West of this mound is a six-sided figure nearly destroyed. There is a mound west of the six-sided figure which is in the forest and is well preserved. The parallels from the Citadel to the Temple mound have no breach except the Ohio River. The Children's Home stands on an elevation of twelve feet, the work of the Mound Builders, which has one fourth of an acre level on top. One arm extends from this elevation to the east, in a circle, and extends to the Kendall mound which has neither ditch nor embankments. North of the Citadel mound is a circle consisting of a ditch and embankments, the ditch on the inside, and embankment three feet high with an opening to the north. The circle is three feet in diameter. Southwest of the Citadel is a graded way from the second to the third terrace. Parallels extend from the Citadel to the high bank of the Scioto River. The north wall commences six hundred yards west of the Citadel in a circular ending which terminates in a small mound.

This north wall passes along the elevation containing the Kinney Grave yard and on to the Chillicothe road near the Briggs Homestead, and here terminates in a circle and large flat mound, near the home, and on the north side of the Spring branch. The southwest parallels run back to the mound six hundred yards, west of the Citadel, and then sweep around to the southwest till near Gallia street, where it goes nearly southwest to the Scioto River and to the north of the parallels leading from the Citadel to the Pleasure mound, in Kentucky. On the south side of the Ohio it appears and continues to the old Fort which we call the Pleasure Grounds. On the west side of Madison street is the usual circle and mound. From the east side of Madison street the southern parallel begins and runs to the place of beginning in Greenlawn Cemetery. In the elbow of these southwest parallels stood the Waller mound, now destroyed, but which stood near the residence of G. H. Heinisch. This mound had no ditch or embankment, and a large elm tree grew on the top of it. There were several large and fine springs in the vicinity of this mound. There was one in a well in front of George Davis' residence, one across the street from Irving Drew's residence, and one in front of the George Ball residence, now owned by W. A. Connolley. William Salter had a well near his residence and one existed on the premises of J. B. Green. Back of the Salter property the parallels circled from each other leaving six rods between embankments and then approached to two rods and had two small mounds. The parallels at most places were three rods apart. At the first alley west of Chillicothe street and parallel to it was a square of half an acre with which the walls of the parallels unite. This square connected with the parallels by gate ways and had an opening at the south side. The parallels ran from there crossing Market street near the Catholic Church, through the B. & O. depot grounds and Captain Moore's Machine Works to the Scioto River, when they disappeared. They had an elbow washed away but which reappeared on each side of Madison street and ran to the Ohio River where were two mounds. The only gate way in these parallels from the Citadel to the river was on the north side of the square west of Chillicothe street. There was a burying ground at the end of the northwest parallels and also on John D. Feurt's farm, where many bones have been dug up. The old Fort which we shall designate as Pleasure Grounds consists of an irregular square, having two acute and two obtuse angles and containing seventeen acres. It has two arms or wings of parallel embankments extending from the main square northeast and southwest one half mile, containing about ten acres each. These parallels are four rods apart and three feet high, and have a base of thirty feet. These works were not defensive. At the south corner on the outside wall the embankment is only two feet high on the outside and twenty-five feet in the inside. Wild animals would be driven into the square and killed. The wings would afford good courses for foot races. In the great square could be animal fights. It was evidently a pleasure or hunting ground. There is an animal mound on the third terrace on R. H. Hayman's place, circular embankments and a square. It is impossible to determine their uses unless it were a place to store provisions. Mica was discovered when they were excavating for the Ohio Canal. In the corners of the square were discovered evidences of fires. There were mounds and works south to Unionville but they were destroyed before surveyed. There is a high mound south of Hygean. It is 225 feet high and oblong from east to west; the south and west sides are abrupt and the east and north are of easy grade. The top is truncated and level. This was a signal station, for from its top all earth works can be seen from the Scioto Valley. There is a like mound due east across the Scioto. There is an important earth work at Turkey Creek, on the farm of Mitchell Evans. It commences at the river hill north of the Pyles residence and extends diagonally across the Turkey Creek and Ohio Valleys to within a few rods of the bank of the Ohio river. It is two miles in length, twenty to twenty-five feet high and six rods wide. It is symmetrical on both sides, from either end and except midway on the north side where are two indentations, half circular, into the side of the bank. On the west end of the southwestern indentation is a large mound standing on the top of the embankment. This embankment was an apparent protection from floods or animals. The farm buildings of Mr. Evans are on it and were above the flood of 1883, seven feet. Kinney Hill and Bitter Sweet Hill were also supposed to have been signal stations. All of these were artificial constructions. These two hills and Unionville hill contain no rock strata and their outlines indicate artificial construction. The soil is different from the hills on the same level. These three hills are supposed to have been erected for burial purposes or to secure treasures. Dr. Hempstead thought their displays in angles, squares and circles were evidence of scientific knowledge and their work evidence of a variety of acquirements and adopted to the uses intended, but we did not know the use. He thought if a shaft were sunk in Kinney Hill, there would be a remarkable find.

[NOTE—This article was submitted to Gerard Fowke, author of "Archaeological History of Ohio," for suggestions and corrections. The Editor is indebted to him for the following:

"The Temple mound is still about 15 feet high, though much reduced by cultivation. The graded way to the top seems to have gone directly up on the south side of the mound."

"The terms 'Citadel,' 'Pleasure Ground,' and the like are to be considered only convenient terms. Archaeologists are not ready, yet, to assign such names as indicative of known usages."

"The so-called 'mounds' at Hygean, Kinney's Hill and Bittersweet Hill, are entirely natural formations, though they may have been slightly dressed off at the summits to subserve some purpose of the builders of the mounds and walls in the vicinity. Stratified rock is to be found in all these hills; that is, if they are hills which have been pointed out to me as bearing these names. The largest mound in Ohio, at Miamisburg, measures 68 feet high."

"The embankment at Turkey Creek is a natural formation; the two 'indentations' are artificial, however, as is the mound mentioned."—Gerard Fowke.]

CHAPTER XI.

The Townships—A Separate and Complete History of Each from its Organization to the Present.

BLOOM TOWNSHIP.

was organized August 25, 1812. It was formed from Green, Lick and Madison Townships, but no part of the French Grant was to be included in it. The origin of the name cannot be learned.

The boundary of the township at first was as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of township No. 3, range 18; thence running north to the northeast corner of township No. 3, range 18; thence west to the southwest corner of township No. 3, range 19; thence south to the southwest corner of township No. 3, range 19; thence east to the place of beginning. A portion of Lawrence County's Territory was added to Scioto County, and the territory thus received was given to Bloom Township, to-wit: Beginning at the northeast corner of section 29, township 4, range 18; thence west to the southwest corner of section 6, in township and range aforesaid.

Among the first settlers, were Samuel Baker, Samuel Bennett, Benjamin Bennett, Jr., Joshua Gilman, Edgar Malone and others.

Bloom township has an area of 30,786 acres. It ranks third in area, second in population, outside of Wayne, fifth in value of real estate, fourth in personal property, and fifth in the total of both real estate and personal property.

Surface, Drainage and Products.

The surface in general is hilly, but most of it is tillable. The bottom land farms of Hale's and Pine Creek are very productive. The hills are used for grazing and for orchards.

This township is well watered by small streams. The most important ones are Hale's Creek which rises in Jackson County and flows in a general southerly direction and empties into Pine Creek which waters the Eastern part of the Township. Frederick Creek waters the western part of the Township and empties into the Little Scioto river. There is not much bottom land in the Frederick Valley, but the hills bordering on its banks are famous the world over for the immense banks of fire clay in them.

Large crops of corn, wheat, potatoes, oats, hay, and pumpkins are raised and small crops of all things raised in Southern Ohio. The hills in particular afford fine orchards of peaches and apples. Some cherries are grown as well as small quantities of other fruits. The farmers keep their farms well supplied with stock,—horses, cattle and sheep.

The people are of mixed origin, but most of them are of German extraction. Irish, Welsh and English are numerous, however.

Industries.

The Lime Coal Works at Eifort employ about 100 men; the brick plant at South Webster near 200 men and the Clay mines on Frederick 75 men; the Buckeye brick yard at Scioto Furnace 75 men and Bloom Furnace 100 men.

Bloom Furnace located in the northwestern part of Bloom Township was built in 1830 by Christian Benner and two sons, Joshua and John. It was operated by different parties till 1874, when it went out of blast. In 1879, J. H. Simmons and Oliver Lyons bought the property and started the furnace. Simmons sold his interest to Clare and the Furnace has since been run under the name of The Clare Iron Company. It is now in a prosperous condition for a charcoal furnace. Thomas McConnell is assistant manager and book-keeper for the Company. Eugene H. Clare is chief owner and manager.

Scioto Furnace was erected in 1828 by General William Kendall. It went into blast that year and was run by him for twelve months. He sold it to Salter and Dempsey, and they sold it to Harkness & Voorhees of Cincinnati. The last named firm kept it in blast till 1846. In that year Voorhees sold his interest to J. M. G. Smith. Harkness & Smith ran it till 1852 when Smith sold to J. W. Glidden and J. V. Robinson. The firm was called Robinson, Glidden & Company. This firm ran it until 1862 when the name was changed to Robinson & Company. The next change was to L. C. Robinson & Company, at the death of J. V. Robinson. Later Robinson sold a part of his share to Andrew Crawford and George S. Williams. This Company operated it until 1880 when Robinson failed and his interests went to Crawford, Williams and Wells A. Hutchins. In 1883, Crawford and Charles Leonard came into possession of the furnace and continued to operate it till 1892, when it made its last blast. The furnace lay idle from 1884 to 1886. It was dismantled in 1896 and A. T. Holcomb is owner of the site.

Churches.

The Bloom Baptist Church located at South Webster was organized in 1830 at Bloom Switch, Ohio. Its present structure was built in 1859 on the corner of Tyrrel and Pearl streets. Its present pastor is Rev. R. R. Denny of Bidwell, Gallia County, Ohio. The building is worth $600.00. The membership is 75.

The M. E. Church was organized in 1826 by Rev. John R. Turner and Asa Ballinger. In 1853, its first building in South Webster was erected. Its large new building cost $2,000.00. The pastor is Rev. H. K. Wishon, who is traveling this circuit for the third year.

The German Evangelical Church was organized in 1879 and its building was erected in 1880. Its first pastor was Rev. T. H. Yeager. Its pastor in 1902 is Rev. E. Kuensler.

The South Webster United Brethern Church was organized with 30 members and its building was erected in 1880. Its present pastor is Rev. Hauffman and its first pastor was Rev. G. W. Tuttle.

Schools.

The Township schools are divided into 11 districts. The first school in the Township was taught by Lyman Daniels in a small house near the South Webster Cemetery. He was from New England and had twelve or fifteen pupils.

There is but one Special, District, that of South Webster, which is mentioned under that topic. Bloom Township has had seven months schools for many years and has paid each teacher $35.00 per month. The enumeration of the Township is close to 1,000.

South Webster

was one of the first places settled in the Township. It was platted by John Bennett and surveyed in 1853 by George S. Walton and William Tyrrell. Its population by census in 1900 was 441. Its manufactures are the Webster Fire Brick and Coal Company, as it was originally called, but now a part of the Portsmouth and Kentucky Fire Brick Company; and a Flour Mill owned by H. Pieper & Company. The Webster Fire Brick Company was organized in the fall of 1869.

BRUSH CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Organization and Boundary.

Though formerly next to the largest it has been curtailed until it, at present, takes fourth rank among the townships in size, containing 30,766 acres. It was organized in 1820 from a part of Union Township. There have been a number of minor changes in its boundary, but the most sweeping changes were made in 1878 and on January 10, 1891. On the former date all that part of Union, west of a line following the meanders of the East Fork of McCullough, Brush Creek and Bear Creek was cut off from Brush Creek and included in Union. On the latter date Rarden Township was organized from its territory. It is the most irregular township and from the southwest to the northeast corners is a distance of fifteen miles. The narrowest place is about two miles. The records of the township have twice been destroyed by fire, the first time in 1867 and the last in 1883.

Officers.

Trustees, John Walsh, T. H. B. Jones, Taylor Cook; Clerk, John Hockaden; Treasurer, Thomas Breslau; Justices of the Peace, J. G. Freeman and R. K. Day.

The valuation of its property in 1900 was: Real estate, $109,580; personal, $10,699; total, $180,329. Its ranks among the townships outside of Wayne was: Real estate, 12th; personal, 9th; total, 11th.

Brush Creek received its first inhabitants probably before 1800. Among the first settlers were Christopher Oppy, John Liston, Perry Liston, Henry Caraway, James Jones, James Wilson, William White, Joseph and James Walker, Zanthus Kennedy and Peter Randall. Other of the early settlers may be found under Rarden Township. All that might be said about the character of its surface and its products has already been said under Rarden and Union Townships and will not be repeated here. It is drained by Brush Creek and its tributaries, the principal of which is Rocky Fork, which has its beginning in the northwest part of Nile Township and enters this township at the southwest corner. Most of the township lies within its basin.

Otway.

Otway is a village of 274 people situated on the Portsmouth and Galena turnpike and on the line of the Norfolk and Western Railroad. Brush Creek flows immediately west of it. The first house built in Otway was a log house, since removed, which stood just north of the brick house still standing, built by Moses Freeman in 1841. A post office was established in 1847, and Moses Freeman was the first postmaster. The office was abolished about 1850 and re-established about 1858. Freeman's house was a midway point between north Adams County and Portsmouth and many persons stopped there for the night.

Up to the time of the building of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad there was not even a hamlet here. But on the advent of the railroad, it became a station, and soon after a shipping point for the lumber products. Margaret and James Freeman platted the town and the plat was recorded March 29, 1884. It included 4.87 acres and contained twenty-one lots. July 30, 1886, Millie E., Margaret and James G. Freeman platted a new addition of nine lots, numbered from 22 to 30. This addition contained 1.38 acres and is known as Millie Freeman's Addition. September 27, 1887, the same parties platted a second addition containing 2.25 acres and known as the Margaret and Millie E. Freeman's Addition. It contained ten lots numbered from 32 to 41. The next addition was platted by James Oursler, E. K. Walsh and Levi Barker and is known as the Oursler Addition. The plat was recorded March 11, 1895 and contains nine-tenths of an acre, sub-divided into 9 lots, numbered from 42 to 50. The next addition was platted by Margaret and Millie E. and James G. Freeman, and is known as Margaret and Millie E. Freeman's Second Addition. The plat was recorded February 28, 1890 and contained 2.26 acres sub-divided into 12 lots numbered from 51 to 62. The Ralstin Addition was platted by George and Joanna Ralstin. The plat was recorded February 13, 1890, and contained 3.15 acres sub-divided into 9 lots, numbered from 63 to 71.

The plat of Incorporation was made and recorded October 31, 1890, and included besides Otway proper, 106.49 acres of farm land.

The first officers of the place were Mayor J. G. Hazelbaker; Clerk, John S. Smith. The present officers are: Mayor, R. K. Day; Clerk, Charles Nort; Marshal, Simon Crow; Council, James Walsh, George Ralstin, John Pieper, J. F. Gordon, G. W. Chabot, Levi Plummer; Treasurer, Thomas Breslau.

Mills.

L. Pieper & Co., Flouring Mill. was built in 1896 by Pieper and Whistler. This mill is fitted up with four double stands of Burwood and Leese rollers and has the Plan Sifter and bolting system. It has a grist-mill attached and all is run by steam.

Pieper and Paetler own and operate a large saw-mill which they built in 1900. It stands on the same site as the stone mill formerly stood and the same building is used. They manufactured all kinds of quartered and plain lumber, rim strips, shingles and table stuffs etc. The only lodge in this place is Smith Lodge, K. of P. No. 387.

Churches.

The Methodist Church was organized in 1896 and a tasteful edifice was erected in 1906 at a cost of $3,100. The first pastor was Rev. Wayne Rumpin. The present trustees are J. A. Pieper, Joel Gilbert, Dr. J. F. Gordon, James Mann, Joseph Smith and Wm. Davis. It has 60 members and an average attendance of 45 in the Sunday School. J. A. Pieper is Superintendent. Rev. Mitchell Phillips is the pastor.

The Christian Union Church was organized in 1897 and held its meetings in the Dry Run school house. In 1902 a church was erected. This stood until 1906 when a new and modern structure costing $1,100 was erected. The church has grown from 10 to 140 members. The Sunday school averages 75. The pastor is Rev. R. A. M. Johnson.

Holcomb City.

situated on the line of the North and Western Railroad and midway between Rarden and Otway was platted April 10, 1894 by M. W. Mattie. Thirty-one acres were included in the plat and there were 61 lots numbered from 1 to 61. A great effort was made to boom the place but it has not succeeded. The postoffice is Young.

What is known as the Dry Run Church stands about three hundred yards east of this hamlet. The organization has been in existence for probably seventy-five years. The present frame structure was erected in 1888. The membership numbers 35 and the Sunday School averages 25. Miles P. Thompson is Superintendent and Rev. Mitchell Phillips is the pastor.

Other churches in this township are the Oswego Baptist and the Oswego Methodist churches and the Beres Methodist Church near Pink postoffice on Rocky Fork.

Schools.

The first school house in the township stood one mile south of Otway where George Hanelbauer's dwelling now stands. It was a log house and was abandoned about 1830. Before the division of Brush Creek to create Rarden Township there were three sub-districts. At present there are eight. A uniform salary of $80 per month is paid to the teachers. The term of school is five months in the year.

The first school in Otway was taught by James G. Freeman in 1857 in a small building owned by him. It later became sub-district No. 12 in Brush Creek Township and finally a special district in 1890. A new two room building was erected that year at a cost of $1,200. In 1900 another room was added. The teachers in 1904-5 and their salaries were R. K. Day, $45. Lora Spreading, $35; Mattie Boynton, $35.

Cemeteries.

One of the oldest cemeteries in this locality is the Dry Run Cemetery near Young Station. It dates back to 1818 and contains the remains of a number of the early pioneers. It is a part of Survey No. 2,802 owned by Thomas Rarden. When he sold his land he reserved this spot for burial purposes.

The Garvin Cemetery is located one and a half miles from Otway on the road to Henley.

The Smith Cemetery is one and a half miles from Otway on the bank of Rocky Fork.

CLAY TOWNSHIP.Organization and Boundary.

This township was organized June 7, 1826, and was cut off from the north and east parts of Wayne township. The original boundary was as follows: Beginning at the northwest corner of section 17, in township 1, and range 21; thence east with the line of Massie's original surveys to the northwest corner of William Lawson's survey; thence south with Lawson's line to the run called Lawson's Run; thence with the meanders of said run to the Ohio; thence up said river to the southwest corner of fraction 12; thence north with Porter township line to the southwest corner of section 13, in township 2 and range 21; thence east one mile; thence north one mile; thence west with the section line to the Scioto river; thence down said river, with the meanders thereof, to the place of beginning. The boundary was changed June 7, 1832, so as to include all of section 13, township 2, range 21, which formerly constituted a part of Harrison. There have been seventeen additions to the city of Portsmouth taken from the territory of Clay township, and the boundary line between Portsmouth and Clay at present is approximately as follows: Beginning at the northwest corner of section 17, township 1, range 21; thence east with the section line to the southwest corner of the Wilson addition; thence north and east with the lines of said addition to the Chillicothe turnpike; thence north with said turnpike to Kinney's Lane; thence with Kinney's lane to the northeast corner of the German Catholic Cemetery in the section line between sections 8 and 9 of township 1, range 21; thence south with said section line to the southwest corner of section 9; thence east with south line of said section to the northeast corner of William F. Lawson's 15.80 acre tract near Lawson's run; thence southerly following the east line of Mary A. Young's farm and the meanders of said run by straight lines to the north side of the Portsmouth and Haverhill turnpike; thence west along the north line of said turnpike to Vinton Street; thence crossing to the south side of said turnpike; thence east with the south side of said turnpike to the west line of the Peebles' farm; thence south with said west line of said farm to what was formerly known as Queen's Run; thence with the meanders of said run to where it joins with Lawson's Run; thence with Lawson's Run to its mouth.

Rank, Officers, Etc.

The township lies just north of Wayne and the eastern two thirds borders on the Ohio. The Scioto bounds it on the west. Valley and Jefferson border it on the north and Harrison and Porter lie on the east of it. It is eleventh in size and contains 17,585 acres. The population by the census of 1900 was 1,764 and its rank is fourth. It takes first place among the townships in the valuation of its real estate; second place in the valuation of its personal property; and first in the grand total of valuation of property of all kinds. The valuation of property as taken from the Auditor's duplicate for the year 1901 is as follows: real estate, $555,620; personal property, $225,294; total of real and personal, $780,914. In pursuance of the call for an election for the choosing of officers, the voters of the township assembled at Clough's Mill, June 23, 1826, and elected the following officers: Trustees, Gabriel Feurt, Asa A. Andrews and Enoch Lawson; Clerk, Turner M. Mastin; Treasurer, Dennis Smith; Justice of the Peace, Jacob Noel; Constable, Jonathan Cutler. The present officers are: Trustees, Peter Somer, John Hogan and Philip Emmert; Clerk, Albert C. Feurt; Assessor, George McDaniel; Constable, William Alberston; Justices of the Peace, Thomas C. Lantz and William Harper. The township is divided into two precincts for voting purposes. The voting place in Precinct A is at the school house in Sub-district No. 3 near the residence of Philip Bobst. Precinct B is at New Boston and a building was erected here in 1896 at a cost of $174.50, for voting purposes and township use.

Surface, Drainage and Products.

From the location of this township, bordering as it does on the Scioto and Ohio rivers, it possesses much good farming lands. The Scioto bottoms extend entirely along its western side and are from one half to two miles wide. Each year the Ohio floods inundate much of this territory and a deposit of rich sediment is left upon its surface, renewing its fertility annually. Nothing but corn is grown in these lowlands and they are admirably adapted to this product. No richer corn land could be found in the state. Back from the rivers, the land is hilly, yet it affords some excellent upland farms. The original timber has almost disappeared, and a scant second growth has taken its place. On the south hill sides peach and apple orchards are planted and much small fruit is raised, such as strawberries, raspberries, grapes, etc.

The mineral wealth of the township is mostly in its shale which is used in the manufacture of paving brick. The Portsmouth Paving Brick Company has a mine about two and a half miles north of Portsmouth and a new mine is being opened about two miles east of Portsmouth by the Peebles Paving Brick Company. At New Boston this stratum of shale is about 150 feet thick and the supply is unlimited. It increases in thickness going west and underlies the whole township. Above this there is some little fire-clay but not in paying quantities. A very thin layer of coal can be traced along the face of the Ohio river hills but it is not of any value. About one mile north of Portsmouth on the farm of W. R. Kinney, there is a bank of red sand of very fine quality for moulding purposes. Much of this is shipped to Waverly and Columbus and there is an almost inexhaustible quantity of it. The township is well watered by small tributaries of the Ohio and Scioto rivers. Munn's Run and Long Run have their sources in the northeastern part of the township. The former flows to the southeast and empties in the Ohio just above New Boston, and forms a narrow but productive valley which is inhabited principally by Germans and their descendants. The same may be said of Long Run which flows to the northeast and leaves the township west of the northeast corner. Lawson's Run takes its rise in the river hills and courses down just east of Portsmouth and forms a part of the boundary between the corporation of Portsmouth and Clay township.

Schools.

As soon as the township was organized provisions were made at once for schools. The township was sub-divided into four sub-districts and were numbered serially from 1 to 4, commencing on the north along the Scioto and following down the valley, thence up the Ohio. No. 1 school building is located on the George Davis farm. No. 2, on the farm of M. J. Noel. No. 3, on the Hannah Briggs farm, and No. 4, on the Jacob Offner farm east of Portsmouth. The first three are on the Portsmouth and Columbus turnpike. No. 4, was commonly known as the "Red School House." In 1855, a new district was added and numbered 5. The same year new houses were erected in Districts Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 5. The first three cost $500 each, and the cost of the building in the newly constituted district was $350. In 1855 the township appropriated $100 to purchase bookcases for each sub-district and each school had a collection of from 20 to 30 volumes. A new school house was built in sub-district No. 5, in 1875, at a cost of $459.95. Sub-district No. 6, was established from a portion of the territory in sub-district No. 4. A building was erected at a cost of $525. In 1881, a new building was put up in sub-district No. 4, cost, $737. A new school house was built in sub-district No. 3, in 1885, at a cost of $700. In 1887, a new building was erected in sub-district No. 2. The Board of Education established sub-district No. 7, in 1892, from sub-districts Nos. 3 and 4, and erected a house at a cost of $660. A new building was furnished for sub-district No. 1, in 1889, cost $645. Sub-district No. 8, or what was known as the Lawson Heights district was set apart in 1893 and was formerly parts of sub-districts 4 and 7. A new school house was constructed, costing $753. The growth of this suburb of Portsmouth made it necessary in 1897 to rent a building for school purposes and three teachers were employed and the schools were graded into three departments. Another building was rented in 1899. The schools were transferred to and became a part of the Portsmouth school system, April 19, 1901. The rapid growth of New Boston made it necessary to establish a school there in 1895. A room was rented for school purposes. On May 9, 1896, a new building was ordered for New Boston and the "Red School House" was ordered moved to Earlytown. A new sub-district, No. 9, was instituted for Earlytown in 1897 and New Boston became No. 4. The building at New Boston is a frame structure and was built strong enough to support a second story. Three teachers were employed here for a year or two, and rooms were rented for school use. At present there are two schools. A second room was rented in Earlytown in 1898, to accomodate the increased number of school youths, and two teachers were employed. The Earlytown schools or sub-district No. 9, were transferred to Portsmouth with the Lawson Heights schools, April 19, 1901. The teachers in the schools of the township are among the best in the county. A uniform salary of $42 per month is paid in all sub-districts, and the term of school lasts from eight to nine months. Pupils passing the Boxwell examinations are sent to the Portsmouth High School.

New Boston

was platted February 17, 1891, by James Skelton, A. T. Holcomb and M. Stanton. The plat contains thirty-seven acres of the John Rhodes farm. There are 191 lots, numbered from 1 to 191.

The Yorktown Addition was platted September 24, 1898, by Levi D. and Alice M. York. It is a part of Section 11, Township 1, Range 21. The plat contains 384 lots, numbered serially from 192 to 575. The whole plat contains 71 acres.

The Stewartville Addition was platted October 23, 1900, by M. T. Stewart. It is part of Section 2, township 1, range 21. The plat contains seven acres sub-divided into 41 lots, numbered serially from 576 to 616.

This constitutes New Boston, a suburb of Portsmouth and is connected with it by the Portsmouth Electric line, by the Norfolk and Western, and Baltimore and Ohio S.-W. railroads.

The Peebles Paving Brick Company was incorporated in 1902 with a capital stock of $50,000, all of which is paid up. This Company has erected a paving brick plant on the Peebles farm about one mile west of New Boston on the Norfolk and Western, and Baltimore and Ohio S.-W. railroads. The plant was completed and put in operation in June, 1902, with a capacity of 60,000 paving brick per day. The officers of the corporation are: John Peebles, President and Treasurer; Samuel Reed, Secretary; and Adam Buch, Vice-president. The capital stock will shortly be increased to $75,000.

The Burgess Steel and Iron Works, located here, were built in 1898-9 by the Burgess Steel and Iron Company, organized and incorporated under the laws of Ohio in 1872, with a capital stock of $150,000 which has been steadily increased up to the present time. The incorporators were: John R. Williams, Charles Burgess, B. F. Perregrin, M. H. Ball, Fred Thompson, W. E. Williams and T. B. Bail. The mill as first operated stood at the juncture of Third and Madison streets, and had a capacity of but 3,500 tons the first year. The capacity was gradually increased up to 1898, when its annual output reached 50,000 tons per annum. On June 7, of this year, the plant was destroyed by fire. The officers of the Company at this time were: Levi D. York, President and General Manager; J. E. Jones, Vice President; B. F. Vincent, Secretary and Treasurer. A movement to re-build was immediately set on foot. By agreement the site of Yorktown was purchased and platted by Levi D. York and these lots were subscribed for and drawn by lot by private parties, who thus indirectly donated, collectively, about $30,000 to the construction of a new Burgess plant. This new plant was erected in 1898-9, and was at once put in operation. About three acres are covered by the buildings which are constructed wholly of steel and iron. While owned and managed by this Company the plant consisted of a department of four open hearth basic furnaces of 30 tons capacity each. In this department the iron is melted and cast into ingots. The next is the blooming department, which consists of two four hole soaking-pit furnaces, a 28 inch bloomer, a large pair of hydraulic shears, a large plate mill, a small plate mill, an 18 inch mill, a bar mill and a guide mill, all run by a large 24x36 engine. In this department the ingots are heated and bloomed or rolled out into 6x6 and 8x8 blooms, 4x4 billets, 2x15 slabs, and sheet bars, which afterward go to the shears and plate mills. The next is the finishing department, where the product of the blooming department is converted into any desirable shape or size. Another adjunct to the plant is the Machine Shops, where almost any conceivable piece of machinery can be manufactured. Another department is the gas producing plant, which consists of twelve gas producers, nine of which supply heat to the furnaces and three to the soaking-pits. The power plant consists of twenty-two 100 horse power boilers, two 250 horse power engines and a 200 horse power dynamo.

In 1900, the plant was sold to the Crucible Steel Company of America, and was closed down. In 1902, it was purchased by the Portsmouth Steel Company, incorporated under the laws of Ohio, the same year with W. L. Glessner, President; N. E. Whittaker, Vice President; and B. F. Vincent, Secretary. Henry Thomas is General Manager.

The mill is now being overhauled and refitted and when completed will have a capacity of 300 tons of steel per day. The first carload of its production since being remodeled, was shipped to the Cleveland Rolling Mills, June 18, 1902.

Churches.

The Union Church was built by the United Baptist Organization under the supervision of Rev. Benjamin Porter, in 1896. This organization occupied the building until 1900, when it was sold to the First and Second Presbyterian Churches of Portsmouth.

Elias Patton Baptist Chapel was built under the leadership of Rev. Thomas Peden in 1897. The Sunday School averages about 50. There is no regular church organization but those who hold meetings call themselves Baptists. Rev. Benjamin Porter and J. B. Carter conduct the meetings.

Rice M. E. Church is located on Long Run and was organized in 1877 by Rev. Pillsbury. A neat church edifice was erected in 1880 at a cost of about $800. The church flourished for a number of years when the membership reached 100, but now there are about 25 active members. The pastor is Rev. Comer Hughes.

The German U. B. Church.

also on Long Run and no great distance from the Rice M. E. Church, was built in 1872 at a cost of about $800. For a time the church was prosperous with a large and active membership, but at present the membership numbers only fifteen and services are held every two weeks. Rev. William Widener, is the pastor.

Valley M. E. Chapel

is locally known as the "Five Mile" Church as it is about five miles from Portsmouth. It was organized in 1859 and a brick edifice was built. Among the first members were A. B. Cole and wife, J. M. Salladay and wife, M. W. Thompson and wife, John Thomas and Miss Mary Noel. Its first pastor was a Rev. Loft. There are now about fifty members and the Sunday School averages 50. Rev. Morgan was the last pastor.

Cemeteries.

This township, being one of the earliest settled, contains some very old burial grounds in which have been interred some of the first settlers of the county. They are mostly located on the elevated knobs and ridges where they are free from water and floods. While there are many private burial grounds, there has been but one public or township cemetery established. This is known as the Ormes Valley Cemetery and it was surveyed and platted October 20, 1896, into 128 lots, 17 feet square, and 8 strips, 17 by 16.19 feet wide and containing in all two acres.

The Kinney and Briggs Cemeteries situated back of the Briggs homestead near each other are among the oldest in the county.

The Kendall-Lawson Cemetery situated back of the Briggs homestead pike, just east of Portsmouth.

The Feurt Cemetery is back of the Valley Church, eight miles north of Portsmouth.

Other Cemeteries in this Township are: the Catholic, near Micklethwaite's on the Boulevard and the Long Run Cemeteries.

GREEN TOWNSHIP.

Organization and Boundary.

The records of the county from 1803 to 1811 inclusive have been lost. There is uncertainty as to the time of organization of some of the townships organized from 1803 to 1812. From the best data obtainable there had been ten townships organized prior to 1812, viz: Seal, Upper, Lick, Green, Union, Madison, Nile, Jefferson, Franklin and Wayne. Green Township was carved from Upper Township and received its name for Griffin Green one of the Ohio Company associates.

Although its original boundaries are not definitely known, it is certain that its southwestern boundary began at the mouth of the Little Scioto and followed the Ohio river up to a point about a mile below Haverhill, not including all of the French Grant. In 1815, its northwestern end was cut off and made a part of Porter which was formed that year.

It was ordered by the Commissioners, December 6, 1814, "That all that part of Upper Township included in the following bounds be attached to the township of Green, to-wit: Beginning at the upper corner of Green, on the river; thence up the river to the upper corner of French Grant; thence with the upper line of the Grant to the upper back corner; thence with the back line of the Grant to the corner of Green township; thence with the line of Green to the place of beginning. On August 25, 1812, a portion of Green was taken to form Bloom which was laid out that year.

At the meeting of the Commissioners, March 2, 1824, for the purpose of fixing the boundaries of the townships of the county, the lines of Green were established as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of Hale's Creek (now Pine Creek) on the Ohio river, then up said river to the Lawrence County line, then with said line to where said line leaves the back line of the French Grant; thence westerly to the corner between lots Nos. 58, 59, 71 and 70; thence northwesterly to the corner between lots Nos. 63, 64, 75 and 76; thence southwest with the line of lot No. 64 to the line between lots Nos. 51 and 64; thence northwesterly with the division lines of the lots to the lower line of French Grant; thence to the southeast corner of Section No. 22, in Range 20, Township No. 2; thence north one mile to the northeast corner of said section; thence west to Hale's Creek; thence down said creek to the place of beginning, which boundaries shall constitute Green Township." On March 2, 1832, Green's territory was curtailed to form a part of Harrison organized that year. In 1836, the farm of William Montgomery was taken from Green and included in Porter. In 1841, the boundary was changed so as to include that portion of the French Grant which had been within the boundary of Vernon since 1824. On June 10, 1843, the boundary on the northwest was established as it stands at present with the exception of a farm of forty acres, belonging to L. Benton which has since been transferred to Porter.

Statistics.

Green Township lies in the southeastern corner of the County and borders on Lawrence County and the Ohio river. Porter and Vernon border it on the northwest and northeast respectively. The Township is sixth in size and contains 24,583 acres. It ranks third among the Townships in the valuation of real and personal property, and also third in the total valuation, having a grand total of over half a million dollars of property listed for taxation. The valuation of property, real and personal, in the Township in 1901, is as follows:

	Real.	Personal.	Total.
Green Township.....	$231,710	$182,445	$414,155
Haverhill S. S. D.....	64,250	22,898	87,148
Totals.....	295,960	205,343	501,303

The population as given by the successive censuses commencing with 1810 is as follows: 1810, 507; 1820, 582; 1830, 965; 1840, 974; 1850, 2,345; 1860, 2,513; 1870, 1,882; 1880, 1,935; 1890, 1,751; 1900, 1,332. It will be noticed that the population steadily increased after the furnaces were built until they began to close down between 1850 and 1860. Since 1860 there has been a corresponding decrease and in 1900 there was an excess of only 358 over the population in 1840. It now ranks eighth among the townships in population.

Surface, Drainage, Etc.

On the western side of the township is the broad and fertile Ohio Valley, from a half to two miles wide and extending the whole length of the township. Immediately to the east the river hills slope precipitously to the valley and form, as it were, a sort of wall, with here and there, projecting from the crest great cliffs, some with a perpendicular height of eighty feet and at an altitude of 300 to 400 feet above the valley below, suggesting the towers on the walls of ancient cities. One of these, the "High Rock," is known for miles around and when the weather is favorable, hundreds of people flock to this place to breathe the fresh air and take in the delightful view of the surrounding country. Pine Creek enters the Township towards the southeast corner, from Lawrence County, and winds a tortuous course across the northeastern part, forming a wide valley of productive farm land. The rest of the township is very much broken up into sharp ridges and flat topped hills by the tributaries of Pine Creek and some of the small affluents of the Ohio river. Some of the table lands and the gentler slopes are farmed and are fairly productive.

The whole Township was originally densely wooded with trees indigenous to this section, but all the primitive forest has disappeared before the ax of the charcoaler and has been consumed by the furnaces in the manufacture of iron. The roughest portions of the Township are now covered with a scattered second growth of timber and scrubby undergrowth.

The population along the Ohio Valley is chiefly descended from the early immigrants from New England and the Middle States, though there are still a few descendants of the early French inhabitants. The eastern portion of the Township is inhabited by German families who immigrated after 1830, and were compelled to purchase land in the back portion of the Township, as the choice land on the river had already been occupied.

The French Grant

embraces 23,934 acres in Green Township. It is all of Green Township, except about 120 acres. The act providing for the Grant was approved March 3, 1795. Vol. 1. U. S. Statutes at Large, page 442. It authorizes a grant of land to the French inhabitants of Gallipolis. It was to front eight miles on the Ohio river beginning one and one-half miles above the mouth of the Little Sandy River and thence down the river and extending back at right angles to include 24,000 acres. The French settlers of Gallipolis were to be ascertained, males above eighteen years and widows, on November 1, 1795. John Gabriel Gervais was to have 4,000 acres opposite Little Sandy, but the grant was to be void if he, or his heirs should not personally settle on the tract within three years and remain there three years.

The Gervais tract extended from the river to the back line of the Grant and was 376.17 chains on the eastern line, 416.17 chains on the west line and 100.11 chains on the back line.

The French settlers, males above eighteen years and widows, were to have each a lot of the 20,000 acres surveyed and set off to them and they were to have patents in severalty, but they were each to settle on the lands within five years and remain five years on the grant or the patents were to be void and the act was not to impair the settler's claims against others on account of previous contract.

This Grant was surveyed on April 9, 1796, by Absalom Martin and 34 lots of 217.39 acres each fronted on the Ohio River. Lots one to four lay southeast of the Gervais tract and lots 5 to 34 northeast of it on the Ohio River. The remaining lots were rectangular, 217.39 acres each. The back lots 38, 42, 55, 67 and 91 lay southeast of the Gervais tract and the remaining square lots up to 92 lay northeast of the Gervais tract.

The assignment of the lots was made in Gallipolis on November 1, 1795, by lot. A list of the 92 persons who drew their lots is given below. Of this number not over ten settled in the Grant.

Soon after the allotment, it was discovered that eight persons who should have received lots, had been left out and on June 25, 1798, an act was passed for their benefit, Vol. 6 General Statutes page 35. This Grant was for 1,200 acres adjoining the southwest corner of the First French Grant, 640 poles on the Ohio River, and thence back from the river to include the quantity. The Grantees of the Second Grant were: Stephen Monot, Louis Anthony Carpenter, Louis Vimont, Francis Valtou, Lewis Phillip, A. Fishon, Anthony Magnet, Margaret G. C. Champaigne, wife of Peter LaForge and Maria J. Dalliez, wife of Peter Luc. The lots were assigned as follows:

1. Francis Valtou.
2. Louis Vimont.
3. Lewis Phillip—A. Fishon.
4. Margaret G. C. Champaigne, wife of Peter LaForge.
5. Anthony Magnet.
6. Stephen Monot.
7. Maria J. Dalliez.
8. Louis Anthony Carpenter.

Letters patent were to be issued to these and they were to hold in severalty.

On February 21, 1806, General Statutes, Vol. 2, 350. The fourth section of the Act for the original Grant was repealed. This waived the conditions requiring settlement and residence for a specified time.

As will be seen by reading the sketches of Jean Gabriel Gervais, Samuel Hunt, and Asa Boynton, the French Grant was sold out to New Hampshire Yankees, and what was expected to be a French settlement became a New England one. Of the names of the original 100 French Emigrants, the only ones now known in this county are: Valodin, Duduit, Dutell, Chabot and Cadot, five in number. Descendants of LeClercq, LaCroix, Bertrand, Bureau, Vincent, Menager, Devacht, Magnet, Serrol, Sandgram and Le Moyne are known to the editor, but they are descendants in the maternal line. Of the remaining 76 out of 100 not a trace is known to the writer.

Claudius Cadot who has a picture and a sketch herein was the last distinctive survivor of the old French. He was the son of the Claudius in whose name lot 89 was drawn.

In regard to the bill for the French Grant introduced into Congress on March 24, 1794, the Attorney General to whom it had been referred reported on it.

William Bradford was the Attorney General and he filed an exhaustive report over all the facts. He recommended the Grant on April 30, 1794, when the bill was read in the Senate and referred to Senators Brown, Burr, Taylor, King and Potts. On June 13, 1795, Senator Brown laid before the Senate the petition of John Gabriel Gervais for the bill and it was referred. On February 8, 1795, the bill was reported and on February 24 and 25, 1795, it was debated. On motion to strike out the first section, the vote was yeas 9, nays 15, and the names are given. The bill was referred to Messrs. Potts, Burr and King to report. On February 28, it was read the third time, and amended in two particulars. On the passage of the bill the yeas were 14, the nays 8, and the names are given. Burr voted aye. In the House on the same day the bill was read and referred to a committee of three, named. On March 2, 1795, it was reported back and passed and the vote not given. It was approved the next day.

Haverhill

is the site of the first settlement in the township and was the fourth settlement above Cincinnati on the Ohio river. The place was settled by Jean G. Gervais in 1797, as the most favorable spot on his 4,000 acres for a town. He gave it the name of Burrsburg, in honor of Aaron Burr, who was chairman of the Senate Committee to which was referred the report of the Attorney General on the Memorial of the French inhabitants of Gallipolis. Taylor and Ellsworth were the other two members of this committee. The report was referred to the committee March 24, 1794 and on April 29, 1794, Mr. Burr, its Chairman, reported a bill for their relief. He afterwards used his influence for its passage. When the emigrants from New England came they gave the settlement the name of Haverhill for their native town in New Hampshire. No plat of Burrsburg can be found on the records and it is safe to assume that none was ever made as the town was only a cluster of half a dozen cabins for twenty-five or thirty years after settlement. The first plat of the town was made by Thomas Davisson and was recorded April 27, 1848. There were 13 inlots in this plat. It was surveyed again, June 16, 1859, into 25 inlots and the plat was recorded August 24, 1859. Lawson Drury was the first Postmaster and the first ferryman. A Mrs. Naylor, who sold dry goods, was one of the first to carry on business. The town was once the shipping point for the iron made at Ohio furnace; and charcoal and ore were brought across from Kentucky for this furnace. The population is about a hundred. Haverhill station on the Norfolk & Western Railroad is a mile and a half distant and Greenup, Kentucky, is just across the river. Ironton is nine miles up the river and Portsmouth twenty miles down the river. There is but one church in the place, the Methodist Episcopal. This organization has been in existence since 1815 and the Rev. Thomas Gilruth was its first pastor. The present brick structure was erected in 1870, at a cost of $4,500. The church has a large membership and the Sabbath school numbers 140. One might search the state over and he would not find a more sociable or more religious people than can be found in the membership of this church. Reverend Henry S. Alkire is the present pastor and Malcomb Clay is Superintendent of the Sabbath School. The trustees are: George C. Winkler, Evan Vandervort, Peter Boynton, William Brush and Samuel Crickenberger. In 1892 a parsonage was built near the church.

The Antioch Baptist Church is two miles north of Haverhill on the Haverhill and Portsmouth turnpike and was built in 1878. Its first minister was a Reverend Kirkpatrick and its last minister was V. N. Murphy. It is not used at present.

The Gervais House

was a hewed log house, weather boarded. It was forty feet square and the lower story twelve feet square and the upper story ten. A large chimney stood in the center, which had four fire places. One room upstairs was a ball-room, 18x10. The floor was tongued and grooved. It had a single chimney. This house was built by Jean Gabriel Gervais. It was torn down by Asa Boynton, Jr., and the logs used for fire wood. It stood in front, just above where Joe Boynton now lives, between him and the river.

Powellville.

This hamlet is situated on the eastern edge of the township, midway of the boundary between French Grant lots 85 and 86. Poplar Fork, a small branch of Pine Creek, flows through its edge. Pine Creek is only a mile away. It was laid out by William Powell, John and Washington Irwin and was named for Powell. The business of the town was in its early days conducted by the sons of Powell: William, Peter and Jacob. They conducted a tannery, a shoe shop and a store. The first survey for town plat was made July 31, 1846, and recorded July 15, 1848. This survey was made for Powell and his associates, and the plat consisted of 21 inlots.

Churches.

The German Lutheran Church has the largest membership and it is made up from the German population on Pine Creek. The church is about half a mile west of the town and was built in 1875. The congregation has a very large Sabbath School and a day school is conducted two days in the week by the minister, August Busse, in the German language.

The Powellville Free-Will Baptists hold their meetings and Sabbath school in an old school house in the center of the village. This church was organized August 16, 1841, and a church was built, but since destroyed. William Lane was the last minister.

The Pine Creek Free-Will Baptist Church was organized in 1872. The church is located two and a half miles northwest of Powellville on the Powellville Branch turnpike. The last minister was William Lane, but no meetings have been held for several months. All the trustees have died and no successors have been elected.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of this place is the old organization which formerly held its meetings at Empire Furnace, Cartright's Mills and in the Baptist Church and School house. It now has a large edifice, built in 1875, to the southeast of the village one-half mile. It has a Sabbath school, but no minister, and no trustees.

The United Brethren organization holds its meetings in the Pine Creek school house. This organization dates from 1850. William Wagner is the minister.

Furnaces.

Franklin Furnace was built in 1826 and went into blast in 1827. It was built by the natives of New Hampshire: Daniel Young, Jesse Y. Whitcomb, Joshua Merrill, John Hurd and Martin Ruter on lot 22 of French Grant, about a half mile from the Ohio river. Franklin Furnace Station on the Norfolk & Western railroad is located near the site of the Furnace. The builders operated the furnace for some years and it then passed into the hands of John Young and a Van Horn who either sold or rented it to A. Q. Rogers & Company. Rogers was a man who drank and gambled and soon lost out and the furnace was sold to John Gould, Jacob Hurd and Jesse Hurd. They did well, but Gould and the Hurds did not get on together so Gould bought the Hurds out, and during the Mexican War, when all furnaces flourished he made a small fortune. Not caring for the furnace any farther, he gave it to his brother, O. B. Gould. It blew out in 1860. The site and lands are now owned by O. B. Gould, Jr.

Junior Furnace was built in 1828, by the same Company which built Franklin and it was called "Franklin Junior Furnace" having been built after Franklin. It passed into the hands of John Young who sold it to Jefferson W. Glidden. When it blew out in 1865, it was owned by O. B. Gould, Jesse Young, John J. Glidden and Wells Hutchins. Almost all traces of it are gone. The property is now owned by Charles A. Goddard.

Union Furnace was built in 1826 by a company composed of James Rogers, John Means, John Sparks and Valentine Fear. It went into blast in 1827. When it blew out in 1851 or 2, it was owned by David Sinton and Thomas W. Means. David Sinton became manager of Union, at the age of nineteen. This furnace was located on the eastern border of Green Township, but nothing remains of it now.

Ohio Furnace was located about three miles from the Ohio river, was built in 1824, and went into blast the following year with John T. Woodrow as Superintendent with a force of fourteen men. It was built by Thomas W. Means and David Sinton and it was continued in blast until February 24, 1882, without a break except for repairs. It passed into the hands of Means, Kyle & Company, who still own the grounds and land belonging to the furnace. Some traces of the furnace remain. A large quantity of coal and iron ore are mined on the furnace lands. The ore is used in Hamilton Furnace at Hanging Rock. The ore is taken to a place near Union landing by means of a tramway and is there loaded on Norfolk & Western cars. The furnace site and all the land which belonged to Means, Kyle & Company, was sold to Rogers, Brown & Company, in 1900.

Schools.

The schools of Green Township are among the best in the County. The people pay their teachers liberally and usually have the best teachers to be had. For several years the length of the term has been eight months. It ranges from seven to nine. The first vote for a school tax was taken in 1841, but met with little encouragement. The next year the vote stood 20 for and 64 against. In 1843, the vote was 59 for and 76 against. In 1844 for the first time a special levy was made for school purposes, by a vote of 94 to 40. In 1829, there were four districts in the Township. On March 1, 1829, the trustees re-districted the Township adding District No. 5. On June 12, 1830, District No. 6 was added. On March 2, 1840, No. 7 was added. On March 7, 1842, No. 8 was added, also No. 9, which was taken from Vernon Township. Since then there have been three more added, No. 10, No. 11, and No. 12.

District No. 1 is now the Haverhill Special District. The first school building was a frame one and stood opposite where the Methodist Church now stands. About 1850, the brick building, which is now used, was erected. The township built the lower rooms and the Sons of Temperance, the upper. Both are now owned by the Special School District and the upper is used for a hall. This school was formerly large and two teachers were employed, but only one teacher is employed now. John Warren has taught this school for thirteen years. The district is the wealthiest in the Township.

District No. 2, has a two room modern style building which cost $1,800, built in 1894. This was intended for high school purposes but as yet no high school has been established. A brick school house which stood on the same site, was burned in 1893. It was built in 1873 and Ruby Feurt was the first teacher. Wilber Stout is the present teacher at a salary of $45.00 per month.

District No. 3, or the Franklin Furnace School has a new frame building put up in 1890. There was an older one which stood just across the road from the new one on O. B. Gould's land. This was built in 1853 and the first teacher was James Palmer. There was an old school house and church built by the Furnace Company in 1827. A Mr. Taylor was the first teacher.

District No. 4, commonly called the "Ball school house" is located on the Portsmouth pike about a mile and a half north of Franklin Furnace. This house was built in 1846.

District No. 5, or the "Buckeye Grove School" is situated about a mile and a half from Haverhill and a quarter of a mile from Haverhill station on the Norkolk & Western Railroad.

District No. 6 is located at Ohio Furnace. The building was erected in 1845. This school occupied two departments when the furnace was in blast and also for several years after.

District No. 7. This school had its beginning in 1829 and was cut off from District No. 2 in 1840 and made a separate district. The school is about the smallest in the township.

District No. 8, is known as the "Pine Creek Bridge" school. The house was built in 1852.

District No. 9, or the Powellsville school was inaugurated in the winter of 1858-9. The old building has been abandoned and a new one was built in 1886, seats and all costing $672.95. It is in the center of the village.

District No. 10, was instituted in 1881. It is a very large district and has the largest enrollment in the Township. John Lee was the first teacher.

District No. 11 is known as the "Dark Lick" school. There was an old house which was given up for a new one in 1878. The new house was built on the hill near where it now stands, but was moved to its present site in 1895. It enumerates under forty pupils of school age. It is sometimes called the Hubbard school.

District No. 12 is located at Union Furnace and the pupils were partly from Lawrence County. The house was built in 1884, costing $572.

In the spring of 1899 a vote was taken in the township on the question of establishing a Township High School. The measure was defeated, with the result that four of the more progressive citizens, anxious for a more complete education for their children, took it upon themselves to institute a school of this character at their own expense and employed Mr. Charles E. Davis, of Rio Grande, Ohio, to take charge of it. The school has flourished, notwithstanding there was a great amount of opposition, and has so far won in popularity, that the Haverhill Special School District, is at present bearing half the expense while the other half is paid by private subscriptions. Miss Mayme Baterson is at present teacher. The originators of the school were: James H. Yingling, Henry Folsom, Joshua Oakes and Charles A. Goddard. Much credit is due them both for the public spirit and the sacrifice incidental to it.

Haverhill Grange, No. 947

was chartered March, 1873. There were thirty-five charter members. The organization lapsed twice, but was reorganized each time, the last time, in May, 1888. Since then it has been in existence continuously. For some years the Grange met in the hall in the school house at Haverhill, but in the last three or four years its meetings have been held at the homes of the members. Its membership now numbers about forty. This is the only Grange in the County.

Cemeteries.

There are numerous private burial grounds in this Township, besides four Township Cemeteries. The oldest burial found is that of Samuel Hunt, who died July 27, 1807, and was buried in the edge of Haverhill near the bank of the river. The next oldest is the Boynton burial ground, located north of Haverhill. This is private, but others may use it with the consent of the owner, Malcom Clay.

Another of the oldest is located near Franklin Furnace, on the property of O. B. Gould.

Another is the old Feurt graveyard, located a mile south of Franklin near the old Feurt homestead. Peter Feurt, one of the first inhabitants of Scioto County, is buried here.

The Pine Creek Cemetery is located about two and a half miles northwest of Powellsville near the Pine Creek Baptist Church. It was originally a private burial ground, but is now a Township Cemetery.

The Lamb or Franklin Furnace Cemetery, is located about one and one half miles north of Franklin Furnace on the Portsmouth Turnpike, and it contains two acres, only, one of which is fenced in. The Township purchased this cemetery from Horace and Ira Lamb in 1875. It was originally a private burial ground.

The Powellsville Cemetery is located near the edge of Powellsville, and was a private burial ground until 1860, when it was given to the Township by Joseph Hudson. It contains an acre of ground.

The Ohio Furnace Cemetery is located about halfway between Haverhill Station and Ohio Furnace. It was formerly a private burial ground, but was transferred to the Township about 1880.

The German Lutheran Cemetery is near Powellsville, about a half mile to the west. In it stands the Lutheran Church. It was opened in 1875, and it is the neatest cemetery in the Township.

HARRISON TOWNSHIP.

It was named for General William Harrison and was formed from land, first part of Union and Upper Townships, but afterwards Madison and Porter. The Commissioners met March 6, 1832, and established Harrison Township. See Commissioners' Journal of above date, page 32. On June 7, 1832, the boundary was changed. See Commissioners' Journal of that date, page 40. On June 7, 1861, another change was made. See Commissioners' Journal of that date, page 283. The Township is bounded north by Madison, east by Bloom, south by Porter, and west by Clay and Jefferson.

Surface, Productions, Rank, Etc.

The whole Township with the exception of Little Scioto and Long Run Valleys is hilly, but more than three-fourths of the land is tillable. The hills are not high but have moderate slopes and round tops. The Little Scioto enters Harrison Township near the northeast corner and leaves it near the middle of the southern boundary to enter and leave again $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of this point. The valley is tortuous but wide and contains some of the best farm lands in the County. The soil of the valleys is soft and sandy adapted to corn, while the uplands have clay subsoil and are good wheat lands. Some attention is given to fruit culture. The hill soil contains all required for the growth of peaches, apples, strawberries, etc. Harrison is an agricultural Township, there being but few mills or factories. Its area is 23,687 acres.

The value of its real estate is $160,330. The value of its personal property is $100,262. In Harrisonville Special School District, the real estate value is $25,550 and the value of the personal property is $23,161, making a total valuation of $309,303 for the Township. It ranks seventh in area, ninth in population, sixth in value of personal property, ninth in value of real estate and seventh in value of both. The Township was first settled near its southern border on Little Scioto river. The early settlers were: John Snyder, Simeon Wood, Thomas Feurt, Daniel White, Samuel Crull, James Haney, Solomon Monroe, Joseph Bennett, Jacob Barr, John and Calvin Hatch, Franklin Batterson and Emanuel Traxler.

Harrisonville.

Harrisonville is situated on the northern line of the Township about the middle point from east to west. It was named for General William Henry Harrison. In 1836 Gen. Harrison passed through the village when there were a few log cabins erected. The town site was then owned by Joseph Bennett, an ardent Whig, with whom General Harrison lodged. The town was platted by Deputy County Surveyor, Frank C. Gibbs, May 24, 1859, and recorded August 22, 1859. It had been platted in 1832 by Moses Gregory but no record was made. Harrisonville has been a business point since about 1823, when Peter Lagore built a blacksmith shop, near the corner where B. F. Lantz's store now stands. He also built the frame house now owned by Captain Henry Lantz (then in Madison Township) which is the oldest building in Harrisonville and the oldest frame house in the Township. The post office is named Scioto. The first Postmaster was Ephriam Rockwell. There are three good general stores in the village. There is a blacksmith shop and an undertaking establishment, also a harness shop. Henry Lantz has an apiary. Jacob Eckhart is the postmaster. The physicians are: Dr. James B. Ray, and son, and T. H. McCann. The present population is about 200.

The Harrisonville school is taught by Miss Bertha A. Coburn, who teaches for seven months at $35 per month. There are 37 pupils. This special district was established in 1878.

Schools.

In 1806, the first school house in Harrison Township was built. It was about 16 feet square, of rough logs, with puncheon floor and seats made of half logs with the flat sides up, with four legs made of oak pins. The windows were made by leaving out a log on each side of the house, which space was filled with greased paper. The room was heated by a large fireplace, the chimney was of sticks, plastered with mud. The first teacher was Robert Finley. The present school system was established in 1853. There were eight sub-districts with a larger attendance than at present, although the number of districts is greater and the population more numerous now. The value of the school property is about $5,000. The schools and teachers are nine in number.

Each of the schools from No. 1 to 9 is conducted for six months and the teacher paid $30.00 per month.

Officers.

The first election in the Township was held at the home of Daniel White on the first Monday of May, 1832. The first Township officers were: Treasurer, Abner Wood; Clerk, Abijah Batterson; Trustees, Thomas Hatch, Daniel White, and Sylvanus Shumway; Overseers of the Poor, Henry Bonser and Simeon Wood; Constables, George Scott and R. T. Collis; Justices, T. R. Wood and Luther Wheeler. The present officers are: Clerk, Charles Brisker; Treasurer, William Jenkins; Trustees, Frank Coles, F. C. Whitt and John Shump; Justices, Henderson Clark, W. L. Webb and Andrew Purtee; Constables, L. Fenner and William Smith.

Harrison Furnace

was built in 1853, by Boston Eifort and Henry Spellman. It went into blast in 1853 and continued seven years. The Company failed and Daniel Sommers and Samuel McConnell bought the property and continued the business until 1872. They failed, the furnace blew out, John Lodwick, as receiver, sold all the property, the land became farms, part of the employees moved out of the Township, others bought farms and still remain. Most of these were Germans who had saved some money by working at the furnace.

Mills.

In 1812, Samuel Crull, father of Doctor William Crull, and grandfather of Ira Crull, built a saw and grist mill which still stands on Long Run on the farm of G. S. Neary. It was owned and operated by the Crull family until about 1880.

The Scioto Mill was built by Joseph Bennett and Henry Power in 1828. In 1831, Bower became sole owner. It has been owned by a number of persons since. Levi Wheeler sold it to John T. Miller and William H. Wheeler in 1881. Miller soon sold out to Wheeler. It is now in the possession of George Wheeler who has added a great deal of machinery of the best and most modern patterns. This is the finest mill seat in the County. Mr. Wheeler recently added a fine engine and saw mill which insures a steady run the year around.

Dixon Mill. In 1804, Emanuel Traxler built the first mill on the present site of Dixon Mill. Others beside Benjamin Scott owned the mill before 1836. Silas Dixon bought it of Joseph Smith in 1850. In 1866, George and Noah Dixon became the owners and made great improvements in the machinery. It has been owned by Noah Dixon since 1880. It is now one of the best mills in the County and contains a good saw mill besides all the modern machinery for making flour.

Churches.

The Methodist Protestant Church was organized May, 1858, by Rev. Jacob Nichols. The first services were held in the Free Will Baptist Church at the Glade. Some of the first members were: M. W. Brown and wife, James Samson, J. Q. Shumway, John Smith and wife, Charles Hopkins, Richard King, Samuel McGee and C. H. Ketter. In 1872, the Church now standing was built at a cost of about $600. The pastor is W. W. Gadd. The Trustees are: M. W. Brown, James Samson, Edward Samson, James Q. Shumway, John Shumway and Edgar Brown. The membership of the Church is about 30, and the Sunday School about 45.

Harrisonville Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1837. The first services were held in a log church at the northern end of Harrisonville. Another Church was built in 1856. Rev. S. Parker was the pastor. J. M. Violet, John Crull, James R. Taylor and William Slattery were the Trustees. The present building was erected in 1873 at a cost of about $800. The pastor is Rev. G. E. Hughes. Harrisonville has two Sunday Schools, one is a Baptist School and has about 60 pupils. The other is held by the Methodists, pupils about 50.

Harrison Mills United Brethren Church was organized in 1902. It has 23 members. Rev. Charles B. Tuttle is the pastor.

The Tick Ridge Catholic Church was erected in 1861. The first priest was Father L. Shriver, the Trustees, Benedict Seidel, Lawrence Cordell and Joseph Spitznogle. The congregation numbered 45. The membership now is about 60. The incumbent priest is Rev. Father James T. Banahan.

The German Lutheran Church was organized in 1880 by Rev. Theodoré Yeager who became the first pastor. The incumbent pastor is Rev. Henry Schenk. The Church has about 25 members and the Sunday School about 20 pupils.

Lodges.

Ives Lodge, Knights of Pythias was instituted in February, 1890, with about 20 charter members. There are now about 100 members. Soon after the institution the lodge built a large two story hall. The hall, fixtures and paraphernalia cost about $1,800. The lodge is free from debt and is in a flourishing condition.

Scioto Post, No. 287, G. A. R. was established about 1880.

Lois Camp, Sons of Veterans, No. 16, was established about 1880. It is in a flourishing condition and enjoys second rank in the state, being the oldest but one. Scioto Post, and its auxiliary, Lois Camp have for years conducted an annual reunion, which occurs on August 17th.

The Origin of the Great Harrisonville Reunion in the Summer of 1865.

At the close of the war, everybody felt rich and happy. The patriotic fever was at white heat. Everyone felt that there should be a grand reunion of the returned soldiers. At a meeting in Dugan's Grove on July 4, 1865, it was resolved to have a Grand Soldier's Reunion and Peace Jubilee. It was to be an affair of the two Counties of Pike and Scioto. Abram F. Millar, Thomas Dugan and John L. Ward were the master spirits in the movement. Many committees were appointed in Portsmouth and a grand time was arranged for; the time fixed was August 17. Dugan's Grove was then three times the extent at present, and was not marred by a railroad. It was one of the most delightful spots in the County. The day was an ideal one. There were two entrances to the grove. Over one appeared the motto, "Victory at Last," over the other, "Welcome to the Soldiers."

There was a free dinner, with two tables each over a thousand feet in length. At one was a banner inscribed, "We honor the private soldier." At the other at each end were banners bearing the names "Logan," "Thomas," "Rosecrans." In the center were banners bearing the names, "Grant," "Sherman," "Sheridan." On the speaker's stand was a banner reading, "The War was not a Failure." Five thousand people took dinner. Colonel John R. Hurd made the opening speech. Colonel T. W. Higgins spoke as did General Robert Schenk who was the orator of the day. Hon. Eli Glover made the closing speech. There was dancing in the afternoon and the band of the 73rd O. V. I. furnished the music.

Lucasville failed to keep up the function and August 17, 1880, the day began to be observed by the people of Harrisonville and vicinity and since then Harrisonville reunion has become an institution. It is now managed by the Sons of Veterans. That organization rents a grove and sells out the privileges for all manner of restaurants, candy stands, etc. The Reunion is always held on the 17th of August unless that day falls on a Sunday. Everybody within a radius of twenty miles turns out and the day is a general holiday. It is understood to be a general meeting place. One can there see friends he has not seen for twenty years. Portsmouth is a great contributor to the crowd and on that day every buggy, carriage or conveyance is in demand. The crowd assembled varies from 5,000 to 7,000.

The affair has lost its distinctive feature as a soldiers' reunion and has become a clearing house for old acquaintances.

Cemeteries.

Rodger's Cemetery is situated one half mile northwest of the Glade schoolhouse and contains about one half acre, but it has some very old graves.

Shumway Cemetery lies back of the Methodist Protestant Church. Some of the inscriptions are as follows: Abner Wood died August 25, 1824, aged 58 years. Rebecca Wood died April 18, 1853, in the 80th year of her age. Lucella, consort of Jacob Gilliland and daughter of Daniel and Sarah White, died June 24, 1855, aged 23 years, 8 months and 3 days. Jacob Gilliland born April 28, 1827, died February 25, 1875, aged 47 years, 9 months and 29 days. Daniel White died June 8, 1857, aged 64 years, 8 months and 14 days. Sarah, wife of Daniel White, died May, 1851, aged 54 years, 8 months and 23 days.

Batterson Cemetery contains about one acre and is one of the best kept in the Township. It is a Township burying ground. The following are some of the inscriptions: Elias C. Coriell died December 13, 1862, aged 81 years, 9 months and 2 days. Lucretia, his wife, died September 13, 1858, aged 79 years, 6 months and 15 days. John C. Colgrove died December 4, 1865, aged 61 years, 2 months and 4 days. Franklin Batterson born April 12, 1818, died May 5, 1887. Ira C. Coriell born July 29, 1812, died June 5, 1899. V. B. Farney died November 5, 1872, aged 36 years, 7 months and 15 days.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

Organization and Settlement.

Jefferson was a township prior to 1810, but the exact date of its organization is unknown. It included Valley Township until 1860, when the township was divided, the eastern part retaining the name of Jefferson and the western part becoming Valley Township. Jefferson Township was formerly part of Seal and Union Townships.

The present Jefferson Township was settled first on Long Run in the southeast corner of the township in 1808. Some of the earliest settlers were James "Painter" Wilson, Joshua Tritt, J. H. Munn, James Haney, Jesse Rice, Rodney Marshall, Samuel Farmer, Jacob Crouse, Richard Grimshaw, Jared Spriggs, Abner Field, Aaron Gee, Daniel Conkell, Daniel McLaughlin, Thomas Carlisle and Solomon Munn. The original Jefferson Township settlements were on the Scioto River in what is now Valley Township.

Boundary, Area and Valuation.

The boundary of Jefferson Township was first changed December 5, 1826, as follows: The east half of the southeast quarter of section 25, township 3, range 21 taken from Jefferson and attached to Madison. There have been other small changes for the accommodation of certain residents, but none are of much importance. The township records are very incomplete. Nothing of consequence is recorded prior to 1838, when Leonard Groninger was clerk. The present boundary is north by Pike County, east by Madison and Harrison Townships, south by Clay and west by Valley Township.

The area of Jefferson Township is 14,940 acres. The value of the real estate is $49,660; personal property, $25,013, making a total valuation of $74,673. It ranks 14th in area, 15th in population, (smallest), 16th in real estate, 16th in personal property and 16th in total of both.

Topography.

Jefferson contains very hilly and rough land, but also some very good farm land. In the southeast corner, the Valley of Long Run contains good farms. Southwest of the center and extending to the eastern boundary of Valley Township is a strip of bottom land on Marsh's Run, that is very productive farm land. On Blue Run are found the widest fertile bottoms, but in the region called "Flat Wood" is a large area of level high land that produces well, both grain and fruits. Fallen Timber Valley, in the north-east corner, is narrow but it contains some good farms. Jefferson has a great many hills but all of them can be profitably cultivated in berries, peaches and other fruits. Except Vernon, Jefferson is the roughest township east of the Scioto river.

Officers.

The township officers in 1851 were: Treasurer, James L. Thomas; Clerk, Leonard Groniger; Justices of the Peace, Mark Snyder and Isaac N. Johnson; Constables, Thomas Carlisle, John Stewart and O. B. Murphy. The present township officers are: Clerk, T. Frank Craig; Treasurer, P. H. Reinhoehl; Trustees, John Shuman, Jerry Field and W. L. McCain; Justices of the Peace, James McWilliams and Jared Spriggs; Constable, Stephen Keller.

Jefferson Township has no furnaces nor factories, and never has had but three mills, one water power, one horse power and one steam power.

Schools.

There are few townships but have a better school system than Jefferson. In 1851, Jefferson had eight schools, one special and 7 sub-districts. The following is copied from its first records. District Number 1, 78 youth, $64.13 school fund; District No. 2, 67 youth, $55.08 school fund; District No. 3, 71 youth, $58.38 school fund; District No. 4, 39 youth, $32.06 school fund; District No. 5, 63 youth, $51.80 school fund; District No. 6, 60 youth, $49.35 school fund; District No. 7, 34 youth, $27.96 school fund; Special District, 54 youth, $48.91 school fund. The township fund for the same year was $69.81.

Jefferson Township at present has five schools, as follows: District 1, Munn's School, 41 pupils; District 2, Flat Woods, 39 pupils; District 3, Black Run, 36 pupils; District 4, Blue Run, 39 pupils; District 5, Fallen Timber, 60 pupils. The term is seven months and the teachers' wages are $30.00 per month. Two of the school buildings, Flat Woods and Fallen Timber, are nearly new. The average value of each school house and site is about $500.

Churches.

Blue Run Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, and a church built in 1859. Rev. Harrison Willis was the first pastor. The first trustees were: James Varner, Milton Deselen and John Morgan. The original members were: John Morgan and wife; Abner Field and wife; Samuel Miller and wife; Jared Farmers from New York and New England and some were from Virginia. The Indians came from New England and the Indians from Young's families.

The exact date of Madison Township is 1837. The date of its first meeting was 1838 and its present property was 1844 making a total settlement of 1844-1846.

Mills.

Madison is a purely agricultural Township. It has no factories or factories. It has had eight mills two of which were closed but they are almost abandoned. The following are listed.

In 1847 James Gillingham built a grist mill on Spring Fork at the same place where James Gillingham lived. In 1847 it was abandoned.

In 1848 John Higgins built a grist mill on the farm of John Higgins. It was the only grist mill in the Township. He built it by contracting with a man and when the mill was all ready the millwright, E. B. Martin, started to start the mill for a young horse while the Higgins were in it and about 1848.

In 1848 Jonathan Brown built a saw and grist mill on Spring Fork, near what is called the bridge between. It was the only saw and grist mill in the Township. It was the only saw and grist mill in the Township. It was the only saw and grist mill in the Township. It was the only saw and grist mill in the Township.

Madison Mill is a fine millstone mill of the Township on Spring Fork a branch of Little Spring river. It was built in 1848 by John Higgins and all the way through the property of John Higgins and was a fine millstone mill. In 1848 John Higgins bought the mill from the same. It was the property of Jonathan Brown. In a few years it was of no more use.

Churches.

Madison Baptist Church was the first in the Township. It was founded in 1825 by Thomas Bennett. Among the first members were Thomas Bennett and wife William Bennett and wife John Bennett and wife. The first services were held in private houses but in 1825 a log church was built. In 1848, this was replaced by a frame church which was burned up by fire the year later. A new church was built about 1848 and is still standing. The present membership is about 50. The regular minister is employed. The last services were conducted by Rev. J. B. Bennett of Indianapolis. The Sunday School numbers about 50.

Madison Free Will Baptist Church was organized in 1848. It has a membership of about 50. The church was built in 1848 and is still standing. The members are John William Bennett. The Sunday School has about 50 pupils.

The United Methodist Church was organized in 1848. A church was built about 1848 and is still standing. A new and better church was built about 1848 and is still standing.

Madison Union Church. In 1848 the Free Will Baptist and the United Methodist churches built a church near the junction line of Madison Township on the Indian trail about 2 miles east of Harrison. The church was built for all denominations and was used by the Free Will Baptist and the United Methodist. The United Methodist church was organized by Rev. James Bennett. The Free Will Baptist church was organized by James Bennett and wife.

Madison Free Will Baptist Church is near the junction line of the Township. The church was organized and the building completed in 1848. It has about 50 members at present. The pastor is Rev. John Bennett.

Madison Methodist Episcopal Church was organized and the church built in 1848. The pastor is Rev. G. B. Bennett.

Madison Grace Methodist Episcopal Church was organized and the church built about 1848. The pastor is Rev. G. B. Bennett.

White Chapel United Methodist Church was organized in 1848. The church was built near the Mt. Carmel cemetery. It was destroyed by fire in 1848. The present building at White Chapel was started about 1848. The pastor is Rev. Hoffman.

Officers.

The officers of Madison Township for the year 1902 are: Treasurer, Thomas M. Kunk; Clerk, J. M. Mohr; Assessor, John Alexander; Justices of the Peace, John I. Sisson and J. W. Jackson; Trustees, J. B. Bennett, Allen Stockham and Samson Sherer; Constable, J. H. Dewey.

Schools.

Madison Township has eleven schools (Mohr's school No. 9 is abandoned); as follows:

No. 1. Adams, 54 pupils. No. 2. Fairview, 50 pupils. No. 3. "Hard Scrabble," 24 pupils. No. 4. Stockhams, 47 pupils. No. 5. Mt. Carmel, 42 pupils. No. 6. Dewey, 44 pupils. No. 7. Glade, 40 pupils. No. 8. Salem, 53 pupils. No. 10. White, 66 pupils. No. 11. White Gravel, 35 pupils. No. 12. Oak Grove, 35 pupils.

The term of school is seven months. Numbers 1, 2, 4, 10 and 12 pay $35 per month; Nos. 3 and 11, $30 per month and 5, 6, 7 and 8, $33 per month.

The schools of Madison Township have made a marked improvement in the past year which is due to the earnest efforts of the Madison Township Teachers' Association and the cooperation of the Board of Education. Although the wages are small, the schools are among the best of Scioto County. The value of her school property is about $6,000.

Cemeteries.

Kronk Cemetery on Jacob Kronk's farm and enclosing about 1 acre, is not one of the largest but one of the best kept of all the Madison Township burial grounds. It is not a family cemetery, but is used by the public, although not a Township cemetery.

Martin's Cemetery is in the western part of the Township near James S. Ricker's farm. It contains some very old graves, but the oldest legible record is James S. Ricker, died February 15, 1835, aged 71 years, 11 months, 9 days. It covers about one acre of land and is open to the public, but is not controlled by the Township.

The Carmel Cemetery is near Mt. Carmel school house and contains about one acre. The following is the oldest inscription: George W. Swaim, died March 9, 1862, aged 45 years, 5 months and 16 days.

Bennett's Cemetery is situated 1-4 mile south of Fairview Church, and contains about 2-4 of an acre. The following is the oldest inscription: Ellinor Bennett, died January 26, 1834, in her 61st year.

Bennett's Cemetery is situated 1-4 mile northeast of Harrisonville, on the farm of Thomas Bennett. It contains about 3-4 of an acre. The oldest inscription is John Bennett died June 4, 1845, in the 79th year of his age.

Granite Cemetery contains about 1-2 acres in the southwest corner of the Township. It is the old Presbyterian Churchyard. The oldest grave is that of Robert Anderson, Senior, who died June 17, 1855, at the age of 83.

The Adams Cemetery on the farm of William Adams in the northwest corner of the Township contains about 1-2 acre. The oldest inscription is: Catherine wife of Nathan Gilliland, died January 2, 1850, aged 24 years, 7 months and 7 days.

Hamilton or Jenkins Cemetery is situated near the eastern edge of the Township.

Some Cemetery located one mile north of Harrisonville, contains 5 acres. The following are some of the inscriptions: M. Bennett, died 1815, at the age of 22, 11 children, 68 grandchildren, and 71 great-grandchildren. William Stockham died 1815, at the age of 67 years. Hon. Samuel Crull born July 24, 1780, died October 3, 1854. Daniel McKinney, born May 17, 1787, died June 3, 1831. Catherine, wife of Daniel McKinney, born February 9, 1789 died September 4, 1875. J. D. McKinney, born June 17, 1816, died —. Jaybinoa, his wife born February 26, 1819, died June 29, 1886. William Slattery, born March 2, 1809, died February 12, 1881. William Slattery, died March 1, 1847, in the 79th year of his age. Samuel Crull, died November 19, 1872, aged 62 years, 11 months. Joseph Stockham, died July 7, 1833, aged 49 years and 12 days.

MORGAN TOWNSHIP.Organization, Boundary, Etc.

It was formerly parts of Seal and Union, and was organized June 7, 1825. It was named for Thomas Morgan, an early settler. It was first settled on the Scioto river and on Bear Creek near its mouth, about 1800.

Some of the first settlers were: John and William Devers, Thomas Morgan, Abraham Glaze, Isaac Glaze, David Shelpman, Spicer Shelpman, Pliny Cutler, Joshua Cutler, Aaron Noel. There was also a settlement of Murphys, Walls, McCullochs and Corbleys.

The boundaries were: Beginning at John Dever's lower line on the Scioto river, following said line to the west end thereof; thence in a direct line to Comstock's cabin on McCulloch Creek; thence in a direct line to the County line between Scioto and Pike Counties, so as to include twenty-two square miles for said township; thence with said County line to the Scioto river; thence with the meanders of the said river to the place of beginning. There have been no important changes in the boundary.

The value of the Township real estate is $107,500; personal property, $35,190, and the total valuation is $142,694. Among the Townships, it ranks twelfth in population; thirteenth in value of real estate; fifteenth in the value of personal property and thirteenth in total value of both. It is tenth in size and contains 18,369 acres.

The electors of Madison Township met on the 4th of July, 1825, at the house of Cornelius Shelton and elected their first Township officers. The first Justice of the Peace was William Devers. The records are lost, so none other of the first officers are known. Nothing of consequence is recorded prior to 1880.

Topography.

Bear Creek flows from northwest to southeast across the Township north of the center. The surface is broken and contains some very rough lands but the valleys of the Scioto river and Lower Bear Creek are excellent farm lands. No better land is found in the county than the strip of bottom bordering the Scioto. Perhaps three fourths of all the land can be profitably cultivated. There is yet some timber and quite an important part of the business of the Township consists of trading in lumber and cross ties. Morgan Township has some minerals, and petroleum springs are found at different places. At three places in the Township, natural gas was found while boring for oil. There are also a number of mineral springs, similiar to the Blue Lick Springs of Kentucky. Some free stone is quarried in this Township, and small quantities of coal have been mined. The main crop is corn. The high lands produce good crops of wheat. The hills make excellent fruit lands.

Churches.

Sedan Baptist Church was organized on Upper Bear Creek in 1879. Rev. A. K. Murphy, pastor. The church now has about fifty members.

The Macedonia Christian Church at Sedan was organized about 1865. It held its first services in the Upper Bear Creek school house, but now has a good building which cost about $500.

Lower Bear Creek United Brethern Church was organized in 1845. It was the first church in the Township. Rev. Kretzinger was the first pastor. The services were held in the school house. The first members were: Abraham, Socrates and Jonathan Glaze, William, Thomas and Miss Maria Shelpman. The building is perhaps fifty years old. The church has about seventy-five members and a large Sunday School. The pastor is Rev. William Rowe.

Schools.

The first school in Morgan Township was taught in a log school house near the mouth of Bear Creek in 1823, by A. B. Banes, who continued to teach here until 1830. There are now six schools.

District No. 1, pupils, fifty-one. District No. 2, pupils, thirty-three. District No. 3, pupils, sixty-six. District No. 4, pupils, forty-seven. District No. 5, pupils, eighty-one. District No. 6, pupils thirty-one. The wages paid teachers is $30.00, and the term is six months. The school property of the Township is worth about $3,000.

Cemeteries.

There are five Township Cemeteries: Glaze, or Bear Creek Cemetery, Booten, Rimby, Mead's and Martin's. There are also two more public, but not Township, the Rockwell, and the Crabtree Cemeteries. The first four are on Bear Creek. Crabtree Cemetery is on what is known as the Divide. All three of the latter are in the southwestern corner of the Township. The most important in the Township is the Glaze Cemetery.

NILE TOWNSHIP.

Nile Township has the distinction of being the largest township in the County. It is one of the four original townships and has retained its original shape much more than any of the others. When it was organized, August 9, 1803, the boundary was as follows: On the west by the county line, on the south by the Ohio river, on the east by Carey's Run and on the north by the top of the dividing ridge between Pond Creek and Scioto Brush Creek and the Ohio River. But two changes have been made since that time. The eastern boundary was changed from Carey's Run to Stony Run, when Washington Township was created in 1814. The north-western corner was enlarged by adding to it the region at the head of Rocky Fork.

The area at present is 51,438 acres. The assessed value of real estate in 1902 was $240,030; personal property, $61,780; total, $302,810. It ranks third in population, sixth in value of real estate, eleventh in value of personal property, eighth in value of property of all kinds.

The beautiful and fertile Ohio Valley extends the entire length of the township and makes one of the most productive farming regions in the county. Some valuable farm land lies along Turkey Creek, Pond Run and Twin Creek. The Creek and Valley region contains the population and very little farming is done elsewhere. The creeks named take their beginning within the northern border of the township, and have a rapid fall to the Ohio Valley. The hills descend precipitously to the valley below and present a long line of rocky prominences. The country back from the river and away from the above named creeks is very rough and broken, and not adapted to tillage. Recently a drove of three hundred Angora goats was turned loose in this region as an experiment.

In the wildest portions of the township there are, wild cats, foxes, minks, raccoons, opossums, skunks and weasels.

Among the pioneers of this township were: David Morrison, David Mitchell, George M. Kinney, John Tucker, David McCall, George Hutton, Abraham Tucker, Sr., Jesse Williams, Solomon McCall, John Calloway, Thomas Cooper and Middleton Harmon. Their first settlements were along the Ohio Valley. Later they ascended the streams and built their cabins there. The first lands located in the county lie in this township, Survey Number 453, entered in the name of James Culbertson, August 2, 1787, and surveyed, March 27, 1788. The largest part is now owned by George A. Vaughters.

The records of the Township prior to 1870 seem to have been lost and consequently nothing is known of the early officers of the township. In 1870, the trustees were: W. P. Williams, A. F. Givens and George Hoobler; Clerk, H. McCall; Treasurer, Mitchell Evans; Justices of the Peace, L. W. Elliot, William H. Williams. In 1902, the Trustees were: Alex. Cole, S. C. Compton, John T. Sullivan; Clerk, Albert Turner; Treasurer, Henry Cuppett; Justices of the Peace, Henry Lockhart, James M. Piatt, Solomon P. Mershon.

The first school taught in the township was taught about 1814. Now there are nine districts in the township, outside of Buena Vista. They were laid out in 1840. No. 1, is known as the Friendship school and has a two room frame building. Two teachers are employed, salaries of $40 and $35 per month. No. 2, is the Pond Run School. The salary of the teacher is $37.50 per month. No. 3, is known as the Leatherwood School. The salary of the teacher is $37.50 per month. No. 4, is known as the Elm Tree. It has a modern two-story frame building with a beautiful spreading elm standing in front. The salaries of the teachers are $40 and $35 per month.

All the above named schools are along the border of the hills. The remaining ones are up the creeks, and all pay $37.50 per month.

No. 5, Middle Turkey Creek. No. 6, Twin Creek. No. 7, Odle Creek. No. 8, Brushy Fork. No. 9, Upper Turkey Creek.

Buena Vista.

Buena Vista lies in a bend of the Ohio River in the southeast corner of the county. The valley on the Ohio is narrow and the hills rise back of the village abruptly. It was quite a thriving place once, when the stone business was at its best, but it has since become a very restful place. The village was first platted by John McCall, September 3, 1850. The plat contains eighteen acres, sub-divided into 79 lots. Loughry and Caden's Addition was platted March 6, 1873, by W. L. and William Caden and John C. Loughry. This addition contained four and a half acres, sub-divided into twenty-one lots. A third addition was platted by J. M. Crockett, July 6, 1873. The plat contained three acres, sub-divided into 15 lots.

The first store in this place was opened by G. S. McCormick in 1848. The first post-master was D. W. Murphy.

Buena Vista Special District.

The schools of Buena Vista are on a par with the other schools of the county. It has from six to seven months of school, and pays its two teachers $50 and $35 per month respectively. The present modern frame building was erected in 1875 at a cost of $1,500. Three teachers were formerly employed, but now there are but two.

Churches.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of this place was organized in 1857. The society built a church edifice the following year and Rev. Daniel Tracy was the first minister. The first trustees of this church were: Dr. W. A. Frizell, Joseph Smith and Jesse Williams. Among the members of the organization were: D. W. Murphy and wife; Joseph Smith and wife; Jesse Williams and wife; Thomas Williams and wife; David McDermott and wife; Mrs. S. B. McCall. The membership numbers 65 and the Sunday School averages 60. Its pastor is Rev. S. A. McNeillan, and Miss Mary Sidell is superintendent of the Sunday School.

German Presbyterian Church. This church was organized in 1856 and its edifice was erected in 1871. Rev. Wiley was the first pastor. It has 40 active members and its Sunday School averages 40. Fred Weghorst is superintendent of the Sunday School, and Rev. T. M. Patterson, Jr., is the pastor. The church cost $4,500.

The Roman Catholic Church was organized in 1859 and its first meetings were held in the same building which it uses today. It was formerly an old store room, but was afterwards fitted up for church purposes. Rev. Bernard is the Priest, and services are held about once a month. It has 30 to 40 communicants and a Sunday School of 15.

Friendship.

Friendship is a small settlement on Turkey Creek, a quarter of a mile above the exit of the stream from the hills. For a number of years there were cooper shops in this place, owned by Andrew Angele, John Royse and David McCall.

Churches.

McKendree Chapel, M. E. Church was built in 1884. It is located on the south side of the Portsmouth and Buena Vista turnpike, near McGaw. The church is prosperous and growing. Rev. S. A. McNeilan is pastor. The trustees are: A. F. Givens, William Stockham, Lafayette Jones, Samuel Thatcher and David Metzger. It has 70 members and the Sunday School averages 60. A. F. Givens is serving his twenty-seventh year as superintendent.

Asbury Chapel M. E. Church is located on Pond Run and has a membership of 60, an average attendance at Sunday School of 30. Services are held every two weeks.

Wesley Chapel, M. E. Church at Friendship was built in 1897, at a cost of $2,500. It is a modern frame structure with a capacity of about 2,000 sittings. The Trustees are: C. E. Worley, Mitchell Evans, James Pyles, Henry Cuppett and George Vaughters. Rev. John C. Chandler is the minister. Its membership numbers 60, and its Sunday School averages 35. Mitchell Evans is superintendent.

Cemeteries.

There are three township cemeteries in Nile Township. The Friendship Cemetery contains two acres, purchased of George Vaughters.

The Mitchell Cemetery is on the Morrison Farm, and is noted for containing the remains of three of the old Associate Common Pleas Judges, Mitchell, Moore and Givens. Hon. Joseph Moore died October 28, 1884, aged 95 years; David Mitchell, Sr., died November, 1805, aged 72 years; David Mitchell, Jr., died November 19, 1883, aged 59 years, 8 months, 15 days; David Morrison, died March 23, 1863, aged 55 years, 6 months, 7 days; Martha, wife of David Morrison, died March 18, 1886; aged 73 years, 27 days; Sarah Mitchell, died September 19, 1801, aged 68 years; William Givens, died June 26, 1863, aged 80 years, 9 months, 8 days.

Loughry Lands.

These lands embrace 745 acres in one body, lying partly in Scioto and partly in Adams counties in the state of Ohio. There are 254 acres in Scioto County and the remaining 491 acres are in Adams County. The tract is made up of no less than 12 surveys and parts of surveys in the Virginia Military District of the state of Ohio, numbered as follows:

Survey No. 1,623, containing (part) 168.75 acres; survey No. 14,249, containing (whole) 35 acres; survey No. 13,103, containing (whole) 10 acres; survey No. 9,689 containing (whole) 12 acres; survey No. 10,846 containing (whole) 21 acres; survey No. 14,890 containing (whole) 40 acres; survey No. 15,584 containing (part) 30 acres; survey No. 15,521 (part) 33 acres; survey No. 15,871—15,881 containing (part) 10 acres; survey No. 13,119 containing (part) 120 acres; survey No. 2,459—2,558 containing (part) 145.33 acres; survey No. 15,572—15,633 containing (part) 124 acres; total, 745 acres.

These lands are now described, conveyed and embraced in two tracts (formerly described in twelve tracts) of which 168.75 acres in survey No. 1623 is the first tract and the remainder is the second tract, and contains 576.33 acres. The entire two tracts as one body, front for about one mile along the Ohio river on the north or right bank, beginning at the western line of the village of Buena Vista in Scioto County, Ohio, and extending thence westerly to the village of Rockville in Adams County, Ohio. The steamboat landing for the village of Buena Vista is upon this land and parties using it pay the present proprietor a rental. There is deep and good water along the entire river bank and between that and the foot of the hill.

The bottom land varies from 6 to 20 rods in width, and is separated from the hills by a county road, leading from Buena Vista in Scioto County, to Rome in Adams County.

Three small streams form in the hills and pass through the bottom lands to the Ohio river. First of these is Flat Run which flows along at a height of 375 feet above the river to the brow of the hill just in the rear of Buena Vista, is precipitated 300 feet down the hillside to the bottoms and then flows gently to the river. A broad valley extends from either side as it flows through the hills which rise 200 feet above it. A half mile west of Flat Run, a smaller stream, Grog Run, tumbles over the face of the hill, after finding its way through the hill which runs parallel with the river and having its source in two small forks which form in the valley to the rear of the hill. A quarter of a mile further on we come to what is known as Rock Run, and this is the largest of the three streams. It heads in the hills to the north of the Loughry property, tumbles down as it flows on this property over 300 feet and winds through a deep gorge a distance of two or three miles before emerging finally on the broad bottom land just east of the village of Rockville.

The portion of these lands on the river front were located first as early as 1801 by General Nathaniel Massie. The late Judge Joseph Moore, in early life, was a stone cutter and he purchased two of the tracts on the river from Massie, prior to 1814, and in that year he built the famous stone house previously mentioned. He resided on these lands until 1830, and between 1814 and 1830 he made rafts of deadened poplar trees, loaded them with freestone from the foot of the hills and shipped them to Cincinnati for building stone, where was then and ever since has been a good market. There has not been a year since 1814 to the present that the Waverly stone has not been shipped from these lands or from adjoining lands to the Cincinnati market. The late John Loughry went to Rockville in 1831, Judge Moore having retired to his farm four miles above Buena Vista in 1870. Mr. Loughry brought with him 16 yoke of oxen and 60 or 70 men to get out stone with which he built ten locks in the Miami canal at Cincinnati.

Judge Moore got his stone from the bottom of the hill, from those that had broken off in ages past, but John Loughry began his work at the top of the hill and there got his stone for the canal locks which he built, and which are perfect to this day and have stood the test of water, air and frosts for sixty years without any signs of disintegration. The foundation of the house he resided in, built of this same stone, is as perfect this day as it was 59 years ago when it was built, and the marks of the bush hammer upon the stone are as fresh as though made but yesterday. Cincinnati is full of business and dwelling house fronts made of this stone and is largely used, when properly sawed, for paving sidewalks, for making steps and for window caps and sills, and for the latter purposes, in brick houses, its use in Cincinnati and surrounding cities is universal. Loughry first dragged the stone with ox teams to the river, afterwards built immense skids or chutes on the hill sides, down which the stone was run to the bottom of the hill, but finally built well graded roads down the hillsides and hauled the stone down on wagons. In more recent years, however, an incline railway was built near Buena Vista and locomotives were employed to haul stone from the quarries to the top of the incline and they were lowered to the bottom by endless cables, the loaded cars hauling up the empty ones. Stones were first loaded on decked scows by means of rollers and crow-bars, but later great hoisting machines capable of lifting the largest stone were built in such a manner as to carry the stone from the land to the barges, greatly facilitating and cheapening the output. The decked barge for transporting stone down the river was a great stride above Judge Moore's log raft and these went down the river never to return, being sold to produce merchants at Cincinnati, and then after being loaded with produce were run to Louisville and New Orleans markets. Timber, however, got to be scarce and towboats were brought into use, towing loaded barges to Cincinnati and returning the empties to be again loaded.

A certain ledge of stone seemed more popular with the stone workers of Cincinnati than the others, because of the evenness of color and the ease with which it could be worked, and to this ledge John Loughry gave the name "City Ledge" and by this name it is known to the present day throughout all markets where this stone is sold.

The "City Ledge" is a light drab or gray in color. For special orders, stone containing 300 cubic feet and weighing about 22 to 24 tons have been quarried and shipped away, but ordinarily blocks containing 50 to 70 feet are quarried. John Loughry in his day did not confine his work to any single ledge, but quarried ledges above and below the "City Ledge;" but since 1843, the work has been principally confined to the "City Ledge." For the construction of the locks in the canal at Cincinnati, Loughry used the yellow ledge on the top of the hill, and when the Trust Company Bank was built at the southwest corner of Third and Main streets in Cincinnati, a fine white ledge below the "City Ledge" was selected, and to this was given the name "Trust Company Ledge." Twenty-five years ago the old Trust Company building was pulled down to make way for a larger and more modern building, and when the new building was constructed the famous "City Ledge" was used. However, the stone taken out of the old building was in excellent state of preservation and the Trust Co. Ledge is really harder and more durable than the City Ledge, being older and having been subject to a greater pressure than the City Ledge, which lies some distance above it.

John Loughry died in 1862, and is buried in the Sandy Springs churchyard, three miles from the family residence, in what is known as the Irish Bottom. For his monument, three great blocks of stone were taken out of as many different ledges, were dressed and placed one on the other, making a lasting and appropriate monument to the memory of one who developed the stone industry here.

John Loughry retired from active work in 1856, and was succeeded by his son, John C. Loughry, who continued the work up to 1861, when the civil war came on and quarrying ceased. It commenced again in 1863 and John C. Loughry continued to work the quarries until 1865, taking out the stone for John M. Mueller to be used in the piers of the suspension bridge at Cincinnati. In this year, 1865, he sold out to the Caden Brothers who continued the work on a very large scale up to 1873, at which time Mr. Loughry re-purchased the tract.

We find no less than 60 ledges of stone ranging in thickness from eight inches to five feet. Twenty-two of these are below the "City Ledge," the lowest of which is 200 feet above the level of the bottom lands, thus being high enough to afford dump ground for all stripping and refuse matter. They are of an excellent quality, harder and finer grain than those above the "City Ledge." All these can be worked for more than a mile along the hills fronting on the river, and on both sides of Rock Run for two or three miles up that stream, the wide deep valley of that latter stream affords plenty of dump ground for all refuse matter.

This stone has been in demand for 77 years and there is no apparent indication of that demand lessening, on the contrary, it seems on the increase and the many industries springing up wherever the stone is found and where railroads have penetrated, can but strengthen that belief.

Not the least valuable features of this tract, are the clays found therein. These are as follows: 200 feet of black shale or clay extending from the level of the bottom land up to the lowest ledge of stone. This shale was formerly distilled (before the discovery of petroleum) for lubricating and illuminating oils. Lying above and on the city ledge is a stratum of blue clay which burns to a color of the famous Milwaukee brick and immediately below the city ledge is another vein of ten feet of the same blue clay lying on a sixteen foot stratum of black shale and all of these clays make an excellent grade of sewer pipe.

Sixteen feet above the city ledge and between a twelve inch ledge of stone on the bottom and a thirty inch ledge of stone on top, is a vein of ten feet of red clay which has gained some fame among lovers of pottery, on account of the beautiful vases and other articles made from it. It burns to a rich red-brown and stands fire better than any red clay that has been used at Rookwood Pottery in Cincinnati. Beautiful building brick have also been made from it, and in this probably lies its chief value.

A two inch cube burned from this clay, on a test at the Smithsonian Institute, withstood a pressure of 110,000 pounds. This clay is adapted to the use in Art Pottery, for building handsome house fronts, and burned a little harder, in paving streets.

In this connection it might be mentioned that several articles of pottery made and decorated by Mrs. Bellamy Storer, from clay taken from these lands and burned at Rookwood Pottery, took a distinguished prize at the recent Paris Exposition, and Mrs. John C. Loughry has some very fine specimens of pottery made from the red clay.

Buckhorn Cottage.

In 1855, just before the war, under the magic of money, a curious structure arose on the hills near the lines of Adams and Scioto Counties. It was in a beautiful country, some little way back of Buena Vista. The cottage was of peeled white poplar logs, resin-varnished and mortar-daubed, it was therefore peculiar. It was seventy-four feet long by twenty-two feet broad; in two parts, on the plan of the ordinary double cabin, with a seventeen-foot-wide floored and roofed space between them. A stone kitchen in the rear is out of the view. The chimneys were also of stone. Vines were placed to climb over it, which they accomplished in profusion; the summer breezes fluttered their leaves and the autumnal frosts put on them a blush.

In the Buckhorn lived for a term its owner and architect, Honorable William J. Flagg, and wife, a daughter of the late Nicholas Longworth, of Cincinnati, with occasional guests to share the romance of their solitude. On writing to him as an old friend and schoolmate, how he came to build it, and what he did when there, he gave this characteristic reply: "In 1852, I bought a fifty acre tract of hill land near Buena Vista, on the Ohio, through which the line runs that divides Adams and Scioto Counties, bought it because I supposed there was valuable stone in it. This purchase led, step by step, to the acquisition of something over 9,000 acres adjacent. I cleared off woods and planted orchards and vineyards to the extent of more than 100 acres; opened a quarry; built a tramway, until my operations culminated in a log house on a hill-top, a mile east of the county line and a half mile from the river, where in different broken periods of the time from '56 till '68, we spent about five years. It was mighty like being out of the world, but none the worse for that. In that heritage we managed to lodge as comfortably as in a palace, and feed better than at Delmonico's. Our society, too, was excellent. William Shakespeare was a frequent visitor; Francis de Verulam was another, he was a nobleman, you know, a baron, so were others; Viscount Montesquieu, for instance, and Sir Charles Grandison. To prove how agreeable these made themselves, I will mention that the two packs of cards I provided myself with to pass away the time, were never cut or shuffled but for two games in the whole five years. Buckhorn, as we called the place, after the form of the hill and its branching spurs, was indeed an ideal retreat. I have never found a climate equal to it. But even souls at rest in Buddha's Devehgan, after a certain stay there, feel a desire to live again, and so did we, and we returned to earth. Two years later the cabin went up in flames. I am glad it did. No insurance."

Mr. Flagg is the author of several books, as "A Good Investment", "Three Seasons in European Vineyards", "Wall Street and the Woods", etc. This last is a novel description of the wild hill country in the regions back of Buckhorn, while the characters are mainly drawn from the very primitive inhabitants who dwell there, made so because of the inaccessibility of their homes, little or no intercourse being had with the outer world, not even in the way of books and newspapers; while from the slender area of land for tillage, and the want of other industrial occupation, there is abundant leisure for meditation and the practice of a wisdom and morality peculiarly their own.

PORTER TOWNSHIP.

This township has the honor of being the first settled in Scioto County. In the month of February, 1796, Samuel Marshall came from Manchester, Adams County, and built a small cabin just above where New Boston now stands, and within the present limits of Porter Township. In the following month John Lindsey also moved from Manchester, to a point on the Ohio near the mouth of the Little Scioto river. The first white person born within the limits of Porter Township, as well as the first in Scioto County, was Fanny Marshall, one of the younger daughters of Samuel Marshall; and the first person married within the County and township was a daughter of Mr. Marshall to John H. Lindsey, son of John Lindsey. John H. Lindsey afterward became Captain of the first rifle company organized in the county and was afterward known as Captain John Lindsey. The graves of these two pioneers, Samuel Marshall and John Lindsey, are side by side near where Scioto Furnace formerly stood. In the previous year, 1795, came Isaac Bonser, who had been sent out by a number of persons living in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, to select a site for a home in the North-west Territory. The next Spring, five families, those of Isaac Bonser, Uriah Barber, John Beatty, William Ward and Ephriam Thomas set out to settle on the site selected by Mr. Bonser, the year before. It is claimed by some to be the first attempt at settlement in Porter Township for the reason that Mr. Bonser selected his place of settlement before Marshall and Lindsey came from Manchester in Adams County.

Porter Township was organized December 6, 1814, the part east of the Little Scioto was taken from Green, and the part west, from Wayne Township. The order for forming it is as follows: "Ordered that the petition for a new township by sundry persons of Wayne and Green Townships be granted and that the following be the bounds: To begin at Ira Hitchcock's upper corner; thence on the river up the Ohio to the mouth of the creek; thence up Hale's Creek so far that a due west line will strike the lower back corner of the Grant; thence with the line of Bloom Township and Madison Township so far as to strike a due north line drawn from the place of beginning, called Porter Township."

Later a petition for a change was presented to the County Commissioners and the following order was made as to boundaries: Beginning at the mouth of Hale's Creek; thence up the creek with the meanders to where it strikes the French Grant, lots Nos. 54 and 66; thence a northeast course on the line of the French Grant to lots 78 and 90 to the southeast corner of fractional section 21, range 20 in township 2; thence north with the original surveyed township line to the northeast corner of section 36, range 20 and township 3; thence west with the original section line to the northwest corner of section 36, range 21 township 2; thence south to the Ohio River; thence up the Ohio River with the meanders to the beginning of the boundaries of Porter Township."

The Commissioners ordered another change made in the boundaries in 1836: "Whereas William Montgomery having made application to be attached to the township of Porter, upon examination of the said application and upon due consideration of the same, it is ordered, that the said William Montgomery be attached to the township of Porter beginning on the line between sections 23 and 26 in township 2, range 20 where Hale's Creek crosses said line; thence up the creek with the meanders thereof until it strikes said line mentioned so as to include within the limits of Porter Township the said William Montgomery." December 7, 1836.

Valuation and Rank.

Porter received its name from Porter Wheeler, son of Major Porter Wheeler. Porter Township ranks as follows among the townships outside of Wayne; twelfth in area; first in population; second in real estate; first in personal property; second in total of both real and personal property; the valuation of real estate in 1900 was $382,800; personal property, $315,292; of both $698,092. The area is 15,709 acres.

Surface, Drainage and Productions.

The surface of Porter Township is very diversified. Most of the lowlands lie between the Portsmouth and Haverhill Free Turnpike and the Ohio River. This belt of lowlands in the west portion of the township is about one-fourth of a mile in width, while in the south it is almost a mile wide and constitutes the most fertile agricultural region in the township. About two thousand acres of the fertile valley of the Little Scioto lie within the limits of Porter Township. The portion southeast of the Portsmouth and Webster free turnpike and included in sections 1, 2, 10, 11, 14, 15, and parts of sections 3, 9 and 12, comprise what is known as "Dogwood Ridge," and is one of the best wheat producing sections in the county. Considerable attention is given to dairying on Dogwood Ridge, and many of the farmers own cream separators.

The hills about Sciotoville contain valuable clays for the manufacture of fire and paving brick. Some coal is found in the eastern part of the township though not in paying quantities. The principal streams of Porter Township are Pine Creek, which flows in a tortuous course across the southern portion and the Little Scioto River, which enters the township from the north and flows in a southeasterly direction through to the Ohio at Sciotoville. The smaller streams are Lick Run, Wheeler's Run, Ward's Run and Munn's Run. All of Porter Township except the hilly region about Sciotoville is well adapted to farming and dairying. The Pine Creek and Little Scioto valleys are each very wide. They are easily cultivated and yield a bountiful harvest. Considerable attention is given to fruit growing and gardening. Many herds of fine Jersey cows may be found on Dogwood Ridge, where dairying is an important industry. Much of the milk supply of Portsmouth comes from Dogwood Ridge.

The population of Porter is of English, German, French and Irish descent. Many of its inhabitants are of foreign birth.

is located near the center of the township and is the oldest village within its boundary. It was first settled in 1820 and was called Concord. It was laid out by Rev. Dan Young and John Young, October 8, 1824, and the survey was made June 15, of the same year by Samuel Cole. The plat consists of forty-two lots covering an area of 14 acres. After two years the name was changed to Wheelersburg in honor of Major Porter Wheeler, an early settler, a noted Indian fighter and a soldier of the war of 1812.

Plats, Industries, Etc.

On March 21, 1842, Reizin Enslow platted an addition of seven lots containing 1 4-5 acres. On August 23, 1859, Wheelersburg was re-platted for the purpose of taxation into 105 lots and the total number of acres in the whole was 30 1-2. On March 26, 1898, J. B. and Ella McCoy platted an addition of nine inlots, numbered from 2 to 10 and covering three acres.

The machinery for a cotton factory was removed from Greenupsburg, Kentucky, to Wheelersburg in 1822 by Dan and John Young. They erected the factory on the southwest corner of Broadway and Center streets. This factory was sold by the Youngs to Edward Cranston in 1835 and removed to where the flour mill now stands, and changed to a woolen mill. Here it was operated by the Cranstons until 1897 when Benjamin Cranston removed the machinery and put in a flour mill. This flour mill has a daily capacity of 50 barrels.

Another important industry at Wheelersburg is the Fertilizer Factory. A drain tile factory was in operation here from 1871 to 1902, when it was removed to Wellston, Ohio.

Wheelersburg has three churches, three general stores, one drugstore, one undertaker, one blacksmith, one shoemaker, one harness dealer, two physicians and one contracting carpenter.

Churches.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1822. Among its original members were: Rev. Dan Young, John Young, Hannah Gould, Josiah Merrill and wife, John Hurd and wife. Services were held at the homes of the members until 1838, when the first church was erected. In 1844 this building was replaced by a new one at an expense of $4,000. Rev. Dan Young was the first minister. Rev. Patrick Henry is the present pastor. The membership is 175. The church auxiliaries are the Epworth League and Junior League. The trustees are J. N. Hudson, Thomas Hartman, William Duis, J. C. Cadot and George Reif.

The Baptist Church was organized in 1879 by J. N. Clark. The first minister was J. A. Roberts. For the past ten years there have been no regular services.

St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church.

Among the first settlers in the Ohio valley between Ironton and Portsmouth, there were a number of Catholics. The work about the iron furnaces of Scioto County, attracted Catholic immigrants from Germany. The Catholics of Wheelersburg were attended in the early days by priests from Cincinnati, who made regular trips up the Ohio Valley as far as Steubenville. Among those whose names are known are those of Rev. Emmanuel Thienpont and Rev. Father Hengehold. Religious services were held in private houses. When a church was built at Portsmouth, Catholics of Wheelersburg attended services there.

By 1850 eleven Catholic families had gathered at Lick Run. The names of some of the pioneer Catholics were Eberhard Frische, Henry Lipker, Michael Delabar, John Mossman, Christopher Flanagan, Louis Deutremont, Mrs. Abigail Cranston, Gerhard Rolf, John H. Riepenhoff and John Kundel. With the aid of these men, the Rev. Emmanuel Thienpont built a log church on Lick Run. It was placed on the top of a hill on the farm of Eberhard Frische. Services were held at intervals by priests who came from Portsmouth or Pine Grove.

Rev. D. M. Winands erected a parsonage in the autumn of 1863 and in November of the same year, the Rev. Louis J. Schrieber arrived and became the first resident pastor.

Father Schrieber remained three years. After him there came the following pastors: Rev. H. H. Mayrose, Charles F. Schelhamer, John B. Gamber, Aloysius Nonnen, F. Karge, Alexander Istwann, F. Albert, J. Neumayer, Peter J. Weisenberger, Philip Kuemmert and P. F. Thurheimer, who lived at Lick Run for shorter or longer periods ranging from a few months to several years.

When Rev. John B. Ritter assumed charge in March, 1880, he found the log church too small, the location bad and the road to it impassable. He took measures to build a new church on a better site. A frame church costing $3,000.00 dollars was built on the turnpike on Dogwood Ridge, a mile from Wheelersburg. It was dedicated by Bishop Watterson in November of 1885. The old parsonage at Lick Run was removed to the new location.

Rev. Joseph M. Wehrle succeeded Father Ritter in 1889. He was pastor for six years and improved greatly the parsonage and church yard. In January, 1895, Rev. T. A. Goebel assumed charge. During the seven years of his administration the interior of the church was much improved and beautified. In January, 1902, Rev. James T. Banahan was appointed to succeed Father Goebel. He is the present pastor.

Schools.

The first school house in Wheelersburg was built in 1822 and John Young was the first teacher. When the township system of schools was inaugurated, Wheelersburg was sub-district No. 6 of Porter Township. Jesse Y. Whitcomb was elected teacher in 1845. He was a New Englander and had advanced ideas regarding education and the management of schools. He thoroughly organized the Wheelersburg District and so stimulated the people that two years later they built their present brick building of four rooms. It is now a special district. The teachers at present are W. S. Dean, Superintendent, $80 per month; W. H. Grady, Grammar, $50; Miss Anna Stout, intermediate, $45; Miss Jennie Camp, primary, $45.

Lodges.

The Western Sun Lodge No. 91, F. & A. M. located here is the oldest Masonic lodge in the County. In 1901, it erected a fine two story brick building at a cost of $4,500.

A Knights of Pythias Lodge was organized in 1890 with 26 charter members.

Sciotoville.

This is the largest town in the county outside of Portsmouth, and lies just west of the Little Scioto on the Ohio river. The Norfolk and Western and Baltimore and Ohio South-western railroads pass through it. The first house built on the present site of Sciotoville was by William Brown in the year 1835. The town was laid out in 1841 by Joseph Riggs for Madison Price, James Taylor and Charles Moore. The plat consists of 25 lots covering 7½ acres.

Additional Plats.

In 1841, Madison Price platted an addition of 23 lots, numbered from 26 to 148, consisting of eight acres. In 1851, John Shoemaker platted an addition of 34 lots, consisting of eight acres. April 10, 1868, the Wilcox addition of 26 lots was platted. December 19, 1868, Wm. Corwine platted an addition of 5 lots, containing 1½ acres. In 1870, Samuel McConnell and H. A. Towne platted an addition of 35 lots containing six acres. On January 28, 1871, William Corwine platted an addition of 4½ acres, sub-divided into 23 lots. June 13, 1889, C. W. Turner and wife, John S. Mann and wife, Ira S. Farney, W. L. Hitchcock and wife, Thomas Brock and wife, Andrew Daum and wife, Adam Ault and wife, Melvin Moore and wife platted an addition containing 6.44 acres, sub-divided into 12 lots.

Manufactures.

The manufacturing interest of Sciotoville began in 1847 when Taylor, Decker & Co. operated a foundry on the present site of the Scioto Fire Brick Works. This was destroyed later by fire. In 1881, Elias Marshall erected and operated a flour mill and edge-tool factory. Sciotoville has always been a busy town, having had at different times a number of mills, all of which have been destroyed by fire, but the different manufacturing industries and the one on which it has largely depended for the past thirty years and for which it has held more than a national reputation is that of its clay industry, which had its inception about 1863. That year Reece Thomas took from Powers Hill two barrels of fire clay. It was taken to Ashland and converted into fire brick as an experiment. The clay proved to be of an excellent quality for this purpose, and shortly after, two men by the name of Taylor, brothers, from a brick manufactory at Ashland, came to Sciotoville and opened clay mines, the output of which was shipped to Ashland to be manufactured into fire brick. In 1864 or the Spring of 1865, Thomas & Taylor moved their brick plant from Ashland to Sciotoville and began at once the manufacture of fire brick. This plant stood where the Blast Furnace Fire Brick yard now stands. In 1866, the name of this firm was changed to Taylor, Connell & Company.

In 1865, McConnell, Porter & Company erected a brick yard where now stands the plant of the Scioto Fire Brick Company. In 1869, Farney, Murray & Company built a yard near where the Baltimore & Ohio depot now stands. This was generally known as the Salamander yard. In 1873, the three companies above mentioned were consolidated and incorporated into the Scioto Fire Brick Company with Daniel F. Connell as manager. In 1873, W. Q. Adams was chosen in Mr. Connell's place, and served until 1876, when C. P. Lloyd was made President and Superintendent. No change was made until 1888, when Mr. C. W. Turner was elected Superintendent. Mr. Lloyd was retained as president until his death in 1893. Mr. Theodore Doty was elected to fill the vacancy, but resigned in 1894, and was succeeded by John Peebles, who was succeeded by C. W. Turner in 1901. Mr. Turner has been Treasurer of the Company since 1894, and is now superintendent. The other officers are: Ira C. Farney, Assistant Superintendent, Samuel Reed, Secretary. This company manufactured fire brick exclusively until 1894, when they erected a plant for the manufacture of paving brick. They employ about 100 men and make all shapes, styles and sizes of fire brick. The capacity is 16,000 fire brick per day, and the paving brick plant has about the same capacity.

In 1871, the Scioto Fire Brick Company was organized by Samuel McConnell, Judge H. A. Towpe, R. A. Mitchell, M. B. Williams and T. J. Pursell, for the manufacture of fire brick. It built what is known as the "Star Yard", one mile west of Sciotoville. Samuel McConnell was the first president and treasurer, R. A. Mitchell the first superintendent. The capacity of this yard at present is 20,000 per day. It also manufactures paving brick in the same plant for two or three months in each year. The capacity of the paving plant is 16,000 per day and it employs 100 men. This company was incorporated under the laws of Ohio recently, with Simon Labold, President and Treasurer, Addison Taylor, Secretary.

In 1898, the Blast Furnace Fire Brick Company was organized and incorporated under the laws of Ohio, with J. W. Bannon, President; D. B. Hutchins, Vice-President and Treasurer, William L. Hitchcock, Superintendent. It put in operation what was known as the old Blast Furnace Brick Yard. The capacity of this plant is 12,000 per day. It manufactures fire brick exclusively.

Churches.

The Christian Church was organized in 1867 and during the first fifteen years of its existence services were held in the old Marshall Hall. The present church edifice was erected in 1881 and dedicated in September of that year. S. S. Doyle was one of its early ministers. The present minister is Rev. T. P. Degman. Its membership numbers 125, and the Sunday School has an average attendance of 85. Ira C. Farney is the Superintendent.

The Free-Will Baptist Church was organized in 1878 by Isaac Fullerton and Uriah Chabot. The first minister was Rev. Isaac Fullerton. The first meetings were held in the Marshall Hall. There are 68 members at present under the pastoral care of Rev. Reissinger. The Sunday School numbers 30.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized about 1840 and soon afterward the church building was erected. In 1838, a revival was held in Sciotoville, in which 200 persons were converted to the Methodist faith, which resulted in the above organization. The lot upon which the church stands was donated by Madison Price. In 1866, this house was removed to a lot in the rear of where it was then standing and is now known as Marshall's Hall. A new church edifice was erected in 1868 and consecrated by Bishop Merrill. The old circuit embraced Wheelersburg, Sciotoville, Howard Furnace, Wait's Station, Olive Furnace, Vernon and Webster, with the parsonage at Webster. Some of the early members were Uriah and Jacob Bonser, Garrett Kirkendall, Ephraim Yost and Rev. Taylor. Their present minister is Rev. Patrick Henry. There are 90 members and the Sunday School averages 100.

The United Brethren Church was organized in the year 1851. This church is one mile east of Sciotoville. Its present minister is Rev. William Wegner.

The Porter Free-Will Baptist Church was organized in 1817. Rufus Chaney was the leading spirit in the organization and was also the first minister. The present minister is Rev. T. S. Arthur.

The German Methodist Episcopal Church on Dogwood Ridge, was organized in 1855. Its first minister was Rev. John Phetzing. Their first church was built in 1858 and was dedicated the same year by Rev. John Bier. Its membership numbers about 100, with an average attendance at Sunday School of 60. It has also an Epworth League.

Schools and Lodges.

The Township has long terms of school, has the best teachers and pays them good wages. There are at present, seven districts outside of Wheelersburg Special District. District No. 1, includes the schools of Sciotoville. The building is a two story brick structure containing six rooms, situated on Market street. The principal of this school, and principal of the Porter Township High School, is Thomas Sikes. There are five other teachers. The first school house erected within the limits of the district was a one story frame, which is still in existence, and is used as a dwelling. The next building was one of two rooms, and was built of brick. Both of these buildings stood near the present school house.

Sub-district No. 2, is on the Powellsville Pike two miles southeast of Wheelersburg; Sub-district No. 3, is situated on the Ohio river and is known as the Hayport School. Fred Brown is the teacher; Sub-district No. 4, is near Wait's Station, on the Webster Turnpike. John A. Stout is the teacher; Sub-district No. 5, is on Dogwood Ridge, about one mile from Wheelersburg. M. G. Chandler is the teacher; Sub-district No. 7, is about two and a half miles from Wheelersburg on the Chaffin's Mill turnpike. L. Finney is the teacher; Sub-district No. 8, is one mile west of Sciotoville and known as the Star Yard School. Everett Ault is the teacher.

The I. O. O. F. Lodge now situated at Sciotoville, was organized at Wheelersburg in 1858 and was removed to Sciotoville in 1890.

The K. of P. Lodge was instituted May 1, 1890, with 30 charter members.

Cemeteries.

Porter Township being one of the oldest townships in the county, and one of the first settled has many old burying grounds in which are interred some of the earliest pioneers.

Price's Cemetery is situated near Wait's Station. It is sometimes known as the old Marshall burying ground. Some of the burials are: Jesse Marshall, died December 17, 1866, aged 82 years, 6 months; Mary G., wife of Jesse Marshall, died August 24, 1855, aged 64 years; Clinton Marshall, died September 16, 1862, at the age of 38 years; Julia Ann, wife of Clinton M., died January 15, 1856 at the age of 31 years.

Slocum's Cemetery is near Slocum's Station. Some of the interments are Mary Slocum, died Nov. 15, 1832 at the age of 40; Lydia Slocum, died September 8, 1834 at the age of 13; Cyrus Slocum, died July 16, 1851 at the age of 35; Archibald Slocum, died Nov. 27, 1842 at the age of 24 years; Joseph Turner, died in 1898 at the age of 74 years; Clarissa Jones, died April 5, 1885 at the age of 61 years.

In Dogwood Ridge Cemetery at the German M. E. Church, lie the remains of many persons who were born in Germany.

St. Peter's Cemetery at St. Peter's Church is one-half mile east of Wheelersburg, and was laid out in 1886.

Another Catholic Cemetery is about two miles east of Wheelersburg.

The principal cemetery of the township is at Wheelersburg, and is located on a low hill one-eighth of a mile north of the village.

The Hartley Cemetery is in the northeast part of the township in which are buried the older Hartleys.

There is also a small cemetery on the Hasting's farm about half way between Wheelersburg and Sciotoville, known as the Rowley Cemetery.

On the farm now owned by Mr. Egbert is the Beloit Cemetery, in which are buried the members of the Beloit family and the McNeal family.

Perhaps the oldest burial ground in the township is just above the mouth of the Little Scioto river. This cemetery contains the graves of some of the pioneers of the township.

RARDEN TOWNSHIP.

Organization and First Settlers.

The youngest of all the townships was organized from a portion of Brush Creek January 15, 1861, and contains 18,000 acres, ranking ninth in area within Wayne. Although the last organized it received its first inhabitants shortly after 1800. Among those who settled on Rarden Creek were John Smith, James and Oliver Jones, Charles Ross, Isaac Bifford, John and Matthew Williams and Enos Mustard. Among those on Mt. Joy were: Willis Bull, Nathaniel Newman, Hiram Brown, Jonathan Boyd and James Scott. On Dunlap were: Isaac Newman, Benjamin and Joseph Walker. The first settler to take up land near the town of Rarden was Jesse Edwards. His brother came at the same time and Christopher Newman settled near the line in Adams County. Others who settled in and about Rarden were: Winham and Thomas Thompson, Thomas Kemper, John McLean, Josiah Armstrong, Paul K. Stewart, Thomas Rarden, Thomas Brown, Aaron Armstrong, James Nelson and Stephen Keddall.

Boundary and Valuation.

Rarden Township is bounded on the north by Pike County, on the east by Morgan and Brush Creek, on the south by Brush Creek, and on the west by Adams County. No changes of any consequence have been made in the boundary since its organization. The assessed value of its personal property in 1900 was $61,700, and it ranked 10th, value of real estate $6,470, rank 15th; the total valuation of property of all kinds was $142,270, and its rank was 14th.

Surface, Drainage and Products.

It is watered by Brush Creek which enters from Adams County and crosses the southwest corner, and by its tributaries; Rarden Creek which rises in the northern part of the township and joins Brush Creek west of Rarden; Dunlap, which flows from the south-western part and joins Brush Creek at Rarden; Dry Run, which courses along just west of the southeastern boundary and joins Brush Creek near Young. Besides these there are numerous other small affluents.

The surface is very much broken and much of it is very stony. The northeastern portion known as Mt. Joy is a high table land of about 1,000 acres, well situated for agricultural purposes. The soil is rather gravelly and of average fertility. Large quantities of corn, wheat, oats, hay, potatoes, etc. are raised. This region is admirably adapted to fruit growing and the annual crop is very large. Being high and dry, it is well fitted for stock raising, especially for sheep raising. In the southern end of the township is another region similar to the Mt. Joy region, much smaller in extent, but similar in most other respects.

There are many small, narrow valleys that are farmed and would probably produce well if properly cared for and improved; but the most noticeable portion of this township lies along Brush Creek and extends throughout its course through the township. It is from a quarter to a half a mile in width. Many of the slopes of this valley are farmed also. Much of the valley is flooded each year, and where the current is not too swift, a liberal deposit of sediment is left to enrich the land. This valley produces well in cereals and tobacco.

Progress and Development.

Prior to 1860, there seems to have been but little progress among the inhabitants of all the region west of the Scioto Valley. In fact if we are to believe the stories told us by persons who lived in this section at that time, and by persons who travelled through it, there must have been a decided retrograde. The country was one vast expanse of forest with foot paths and bridle paths leading through it. Small farms were cleared up here and there and log cabins housed the inhabitants. Churches and schools were very scarce; yet there were a few log school houses prior to 1830. A "dirt road" lead from northern Adams County and southern Highland County down Brush Creek to Portsmouth which was the nearest market for this region. Over this road, since converted into a turnpike, were hauled great loads of corn, wheat, and other farm products from Adams and Highland Counties in the large old fashioned wagons, pulled by four strong horses. This farm produce was exchanged at Portsmouth for groceries, dry goods and the thousand and one things that add to the comfort of man, and these articles were taken back to stock up the country stores and to be used by the farmers and tradesmen. From northern Adams County to Portsmouth was two days' travel and at Moses Freeman's brick farm house on the site of Otway was the middle point and stopping place for the night.

When the early settlers from Pennsylvania began coming into this region along in the forties, they found a people, who, partly from their isolation, and partly from necessity, had adopted primitive ways of living and had patterned much after the Indians, in their mode of dress. They farmed in a way and hunted much more, getting much of their living in this way. The men wore moccasins of buckskin, and hunting shirts, such as the Indians had worn. They carried their rifles with them when they went abroad, that they might take a shot at any game they might see. Whiskey was sold at houses here and there and on special occasions a crowd of natives would collect in on horseback from the surrounding country and after a thorough carousal, would gallop off together yelling and howling like a mob of Indians. For all these peculiar traits the Pennsylvanians called them "Pottawattomies," and the region about Rarden they called "Moccasin." Progress in this region was slow until the advent of the railroad, which opened up its resources and gave opportunity for mingling with the outside world. With the railroad, came saloons, and following saloons, as a natural sequence, came fights and drunken brawls in which a large number of fatalities occurred.

The past fifteen years have witnessed the disappearance of much of this eruptive influence. The people have entered upon a life of real progress, and to one who had travelled in this country fifty years ago and had beheld the rude manners and customs, it would seem that the day of miracles had not yet passed. He would gaze upon a country all but stripped of its wealth of timber, the destruction of which gave employment to its people and added comfort to their homes, and all the tillable portion converted into productive and well kept farms. He would see its small settlements grown to good sized villages alive with enterprise and industry. He would contemplate that of which the most optimistic had never dreamed, the lifting from its hills of their mighty blocks of stone to be transported to foreign parts and transformed into massive walls and beautiful homes for the abode of man, a great industry but now in its infancy and a Golconda for future capitalists.

Officers.

The first officers of this township were: Trustees, S. S. Blosser, Milton Mustard and William Keese; Clerk, D. A. Gardner; Treasurer, William Newman; Constables, William M. Burnett and William Hackworth; Justices of the Peace, A. B. McBride and J. N. Kates; Assessor, T. F. Freeman. The present officers, 1902, are: Trustees, Martin B. Wharf, T. S. Riley and Charles Freeman; Clerk, George B. Coakly; Treasurer, D. T. Blackburn; Constable, John W. Newman; Assessor, William J. Thompson; Justices of the Peace, J. N. Kates and O. E. Foster.

Rarden.

As above stated this place was given the name of "Moccasin" by the early Pennsylvania settlers. It is located on the north side of the Brush Creek Valley near where it receives the waters of Rarden and Dunlap Creeks, and about one and a half miles from the Adams County line. The first store was opened by Asa L. Williams about 1846. Later came Aaron Moore, William Brooks, Eli Rigdon and Philip Leighly. Orville Grant, brother of Ulysses S., Andrew Montgomery and Milton Morrison built a tanyard here before 1850. During the war they made cavalry saddles for the government. Grant and Williams became the owners, about 1865. After four or five years they sold to S. S. Jones, who operated it until 1878 when it was turned into a pump factory. It burned about 1885.

Orville Grant gave the place the name of "Galena" for his former home in Galena, Illinois. This name was adopted when the first plat of the town was made October 10, 1850. This plat contained 12 acres, taken from surveys, 7,808, 2,850 and 2,345, owned by B. Edwards, Aaron Moore and the heirs of Jesse Edwards. There were forty-five lots in the plat numbered from 1 to 45. Four additions were made July 5, 1883: lots 46 and 49 to 59, by Thomas Newman; lots 47 and 48, by John Williams; lots 60 to 65, by E. D. L. Morgan; lots 66 to 73, by Grafton Windle. These additions aggregate a little over ten acres. On April 14, 1891, Amos and Ella Jenkins platted an addition containing 7 acres. The lots were numbered 74 to 79 and were part of Survey 7,808. The town was incorporated in 1886 and the first officers were Michael Freeman, Mayor; D. A. Gardner, Clerk; R. W. McNeal, Solicitor; and Scott Foster, Marshall. Its present officers are: J. J. Forsythe, Mayor; J. M. Wikoff, Clerk; D. T. Blackburn, Treasurer. The members of the council are: L. A. Scott, John W. Newman, Bert Scott, William Burnett, Clark W. Waller and F. W. Ballangee.

The assessed value of real estate in Rarden Corporation in 1900 was $20,990; personal property, $21,522; total, $42,512. The value of real estate in the Special School District outside of Rarden Corporation was $18,390; personal property, $10,064; total, $28,454.

The town received the name Rarden after Thomas Rarden, one of the earliest settlers in that vicinity.

The business is at present done by the following: L. Taylor, D. T. Blackburn & Son, William T. Hackworth, General Merchants; Bert Scott, Blacksmith; Ed. Abbott, Livery and Feed Stable; Sarah Abbott and Mrs. D. M. Stewart, Hotels; Doctors, J. H. Windle and H. F. Clark.

The Rarden Stone Company.

This is one of the representative firms of stone industry of the county. Their quarries are located about one mile west of Rarden on the Norfolk and Western Railway, and are equipped with all the latest improved machinery for handling earth, quarrying and handling stone rapidly at a minimum expense. It uses a Barnhardt Steam Shovel and a large traveling crane designed by Kaltenbach and Greiss of Cleveland, in uncovering stone. It uses the Ingersoll-Sergeant Drill Company's steam drills and the Knox system of drilling and blasting in quarrying stone. Its machinery is so far perfected that it splits stone either with or across the grain, as evenly as wood.

The present capacity of the Company, while greatly hampered on account of the inability of the Railroad Company to furnish sufficient equipment to handle its output, is from fifteen to twenty thousand cubic yards per year.

The stone produced by this company quarried from two ledges sixty and sixty-six inches respectively, is a sand stone locally known as freestone, and is of a light buff color. It is used for building, paving and bridge purposes. It is free from iron or alkali, and does not disintegrate from extreme exposure.

The Company commenced business in 1895 and consisted of C. C., F. M. and C. W. Waller, who came to this county from Fairfield County, Ohio, where they had operated a sandstone quarry, and on finding a suitable location for a quarry interested Mr. L. Taylor in the enterprise, who purchased the land on which the quarry was located and with the Waller Brothers organized and incorporated The Rarden Stone Company in July, 1895.

The officers of the Company are: V. E. Taylor, President; C. W. Waller, Vice-president; F. M. Waller, Secretary; L. Taylor, Treasurer and C. C. Waller, Superintendent.

The success of the business since its organization has been remarkable. It has most encouraging prospects for the future and the management is fully able to take care of it.

THE TAYLOR STONE SAW MILL, RARDEN, OHIO.

The Forsythe Quarry

was the first quarry opened at Rarden about twelve years ago, and is now lying idle. It produces the same quality of stone as that of The Rarden Stone Company, and a great quantity of rough stone was formerly shipped from this quarry. It is owned by Abraham Forsythe.

The Cooper Shops

are owned and operated by The Taylor Cooperage Company. These shops were established shortly after the railroad was built and were at first merely a stave mill owned by Guilford Marr. Later the manufacture of barrels was begun. During its existence it has been destroyed by fire and rebuilt three times. It has been very much enlarged and is the only establishment of the kind in the county. It manufactures all kinds of tight cooperage and its output is 40,000 packages, worth from $30,00 to $40,000 annually. L. Taylor and Charles S. Brown are owners and Mr. Brown is manager.

Schools, Churches and Lodges.

The first school house stood back of the Red Men's Hall and was built of logs. Another was built on the same spot and was burned in 1886. This year a two-story frame building was erected. There are four departments and the schools are among the best in the county.

The Rarden M. E. Church was begun in 1887 and completed in 1897. This church dates its organization back as far as 1820. The church cost $2,000. The minister is Rev. Phillips. The membership is 75 and average attendance at Sunday School is 70. The present trustees are: A. B. McBride, Charles C. Waller, Alex. Mullen, G. M. Wikoff and Charles S. Freeman.

The Rarden Christian Church was organized May 6, 1902, with 16 members and a Sunday School of 70. Its minister is Henry Canter. The congregation has not yet built an edifice but holds its meetings in the Red Men's Hall.

The lodges are No. 159 Improved Order of Red Men and Lodge No. 562, G. A. R.

Mt. Joy.

The region known as Mt. Joy received its name for Thomas Mt. Joy, an early land speculator who located about 2,000 acres covering this locality. Mt. Joy never lived here, but lived near Maysville, Kentucky. He made yearly visits to collect his rents and to look after his land. The name is also applied to a small settlement in the north-eastern part of this tract at the head of Bear Creek. The post office has this name also, and O. E. Davis is postmaster. The business of this place is carried on by H. Adams & Son and O. E. Davis, general merchants.

The Scioto County Agricultural Society, formerly known as the Mt. Joy Fair, was inaugurated under the auspices of the Mt. Joy Farmers' Institute. The first fair was held August 26 and 27, 1895. Its first officers were W. A. McGeorge, President; D. T. Blackburn, Secretary and Treasurer and they have continued as such since. The name was changed the following year to the Tri-County Fair Association. The old Scioto County Agricultural Society having become disorganized, by application of the managing board, to the State Agricultural Board, this Association was recognized as the Scioto County Agricultural Society in 1899.

Churches.

The United Presbyterian Church is about a quarter of a mile due west of Mt. Joy post office, and was built about 1855. Its first minister was Rev. Bonner. The church was once destroyed by fire but was afterwards rebuilt. It formerly had a very large membership, but of late years it has only about forty, and services are conducted by Rev. Joseph C. Hamilton, of Peebles. The trustees are W. J. Shannon, M. L. Bonner and W. A. McGeorge.

The Christian Church.—This organization dates its existence from 1854. Meetings were first held in the Mt. Joy school house and Rev. Matthew Gardner was its first minister. In 1867 a log church was built, which is still standing and in use, but has been weather-boarded. It stands on west Mt. Joy, about three miles from Rarden and the same distance from Mt. Joy. The first minister to preach in this church was Rev. John Shelton. Its members number 125 and its Sunday School has an average attendance of 50. Rev. Henry Canter is the pastor and David Day is Superintendent of the Sunday School.

The United Baptist Church, is known as the "Hackworth" church. The organization was effected about 1884 and a church was erected the following year on west Mt. Joy. The members number forty and the Sunday School averages about fifty. John Carry is Superintendent, Rev. Breech is the minister.

Harmon Christian Church, situated in the northwestern part of the township at the head of Rarden Creek, was built of logs about 1875 by an organization of Protestant Methodists. This organization ceased to exist about 1887 and by permission the Christian organization uses it. Its minister is John Q. Law. It has about 75 members and a Sunday School of 100.

United Baptist Church.—There are two organizations in the southern part of the township, one on Hoffer's Hill and one on Dunlap Creek. The former was organized in 1884 and the latter in 1901. They each have about forty members and a Sunday School of about 50. They hold their meetings in school houses and Rev. Breech is their minister.

Schools.

When the township was taken from Brush Creek in 1891 the school districts were re-numbered. The first meeting of the board was held at the Dry Run school-house and Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 13 were represented. There are seven districts well distributed over the township and the term of school averages only three months and one-half yearly. The salary paid the teachers is uniform, each district paying $35 per month. There are 309 pupils enumerated in 1902. Sub-district No. 1 is on East Mt. Joy. No. 2 is on West Mt. Joy. No. 3 is up Rarden Creek. No. 4 is up Dunlap Creek and the house was built in 1899. No. 5 is on Hoffer's Hill, but was not used last year. A new house is being erected this year. No. 6 is up Rarden. No. 7 is southwest of Mt. Joy.

Cemeteries.

The only township cemetery is the one near what is known as the Log Church on West Mt. Joy. It is about three miles northeast of Rarden and contains one-half an acre, a part of the James M. Scott farm. It is a commanding spot, high above the surrounding country, from which, in summer, the succession of green hills melt away in the distance enwrapped in a misty haze. In this spot and in the one on East Mt. Joy rest the mortal remains of more soldiers of the civil war than are found in all the other cemeteries in Brush Creek and Rarden Townships.

The Newman Cemetery situated about one and a half miles west of Rarden in Adams County is one of the oldest burial grounds in this locality. It was made a joint cemetery in 1899. Franklin Township, in Adams County, and this township each pay half the expense of keeping it in condition. It contains two acres and was formerly a part of Garrett Newman's farm. A number of the early pioneers are buried here.

The Duke Cemetery is up the dry fork of Rarden Creek and about three miles from Rarden.

Besides the above named cemeteries there is one on Mt. Joy which contains the remains of many of the earliest settlers. A new cemetery has recently been opened on Hoffer's Hill.

RUSH TOWNSHIP.

Rush Township is the youngest of all the townships but two, and was organized from a part of the territory of Union, June 3, 1867. A petition was presented by Levi Kirkendall and others to the Commissioners praying for the formation of a new township from the territory of Union. Another petition or remonstrance was presented by Milburn Coe and others against this procedure. The Commissioners after due consideration found that the petition for forming a new township had been signed by a majority of the householders of Union Township; that the territory proposed for a new township contained 22 square miles; that the territory of Union after such division was 22 square miles; and that it was necessary and expedient to form a new township, so it was "Ordered, That a new Township be, and the same is, hereby laid off designated from the territory of said Union Township as prayed for in said petition; and it is further ordered, that said new township be known by the name of 'Rush.' And it is further ordered, that the County Surveyor, or other competent surveyor proceed immediately to survey and establish the line dividing the said new from the said old township as nearly in accordance with the prayers of the petitioners as practicable, and forthwith report the boundaries of said new township to this board and that the same be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, and it is further ordered, that an election be held at the school house near the mouth of Brush Creek in said new township on the 17th day of June, 1867, for the election of township officers for said new township of 'Rush.' "The Commissioners appointed James Boldman, Surveyor, in accordance with the foregoing order and further ordered that the Auditor issue an order to James Boldman directing him to make said survey. June 3, 1867.

The township as it now stands, and no changes of any consequence have been made since the organization, is bounded on the north by Morgan, on the east by the Scioto, on the south by Washington and on the west by Union Township.

Surface, Drainage, Etc.

This township has much valuable farming land most of which lies along the Scioto River. Other farm land, though not so productive, lies along Brush Creek, Pond Creek and Duck Run. Besides this there is some terrace land along the Scioto Valley that produces well for upland. That part of the township south of Brush Creek is very hilly, while there is much rolling land in the northern part, affording excellent upland farms. Though the whole township was formerly well wooded, the timber has practically disappeared. Much of it had been shipped on the Canal previous to the building of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad. Since that it has disappeared very rapidly.

Brush Creek crosses the middle of the township from west to east. Pond Creek enters toward the southwest corner and flows across the southern end and empties its waters at the north end of the Big Island into the Scioto River. Duck Run enters the township from Morgan and flows southeasterly and empties into Brush Creek at Rushtown. The Ohio Canal crosses it from north to south following the border of the hills. The Norfolk & Western R. R. crosses the township along the valley of Brush Creek and the Ohio Canal and has three stations within the township, to-wit: McDermott, Rushtown and Wharton.

Early Settlers.

The township was named for Dr. Benjamin Rush. The first settlement must have been about 1796 or 1797 by Abraham Wykoff, who died in the township "August 11, 1799, aged thirty-eight years." His tombstone with this inscription on it is found on the river bank about three hundred yards north of the Bethany Brick Church. Gen. William Kendall built boats and ran a mill near the mouth of Brush Creek. The first boat ever built inland was constructed here in 1818 by William Lodwick. The Utts came in 1797. Later came Samuel G. Jones, George Heroedh, Thomas Arnold, James Wallace, Thomas Jones, William Russell, John Shultz and Daniel Kirkendall.

Summer Resorts.

Creighton Inn is near the station on the Norfolk and Western at Rushtown and is beautifully located in a quiet, shady and secluded spot overlooking the Scioto Valley.

Camps Arion and McCulloch are equally attractive in their rustic surroundings and are ideal resorts for summer outings.

Valuation, Area and Rank.

The assessed value of real estate in 1902 was $142,540; personal property, $59,134; total, $201,674. The rank among the townships outside of Wayne in each respective valuation, is tenth, twelfth and tenth. It contains 14,300 acres and ranks fifteenth outside of Wayne in size.

McDermott

was platted July 28, 1898, by the McDermott Stone Company, James Barker and Honor Barker. The plat contained 27 acres sub-divided into 113 lots numbered serially from 1 to 113, and is a part of Survey No. 7,630. The chief business enterprise here is the McDermott Stone Company.

The McDermott Stone Company.

The general offices, mills and quarries of this Company are at McDermott, a thriving town on the Cincinnati division of the Norfolk & Western Railway, ten miles northwest of Portsmouth. The properties owned by The McDermott Stone Co. a large acreage underlaid with Ohio's best sandstone deposit, had been operated separately, and on a small scale for more than forty years, until the year 1897 when they were presented to the attention of William and Michael McDermott, two successful and expert quarry operators of National reputation. After a thorough investigation, they decided to purchase the different properties and organize them into one Company, equipped with modern facilities, so that the Stone could be produced promptly and shipped in large quantities. As a basis for carrying out this plan, the lands were purchased, in the year 1897, the mills were erected and the standard gauge railroad tracks were built, connecting the various quarries with the main line of the Norfolk & Western Railway. The property was then taken over by the McDermott Stone Company, which was organized and incorporated under the laws of Ohio, March 23, 1898, with an authorized and paid up capital stock of $100,000.00. The improvements in methods and equipment have continued under the management of R. B. Eglin, President; George A. Dickens, Vice President and John S. Smith, Superintendent, until at the present time this Company and its product ranks among the highest in the building and architectural trade. The mills are equipped with a special idea of quick and accurate work, all material being handled automatically into and out of the mills and loaded on the cars ready for shipment to the most distant points.

The gangs which do the sawing are screw feed and pipe sides of the latest designs. The sand and water for cutting the stone are distributed by a sand pump and conducted to their proper position for doing the work under the steel saws without human assistance. The property is also equipped with an electric light plant so that sawing and shipping are carried on constantly night and day, throughout the entire season. The branch railroad which is owned and equipped by the Company consists of over three miles or standard gauge railroad track built of 56 pound rails, with rock ballasted road bed throughout its entire length. It is a perfect sample of railroad construction. The motive power employed is a standard, ten wheel, Brooks locomotive, and the equipment consists of numerous flat cars and side dump cars. In the quarries, the same complete manner of equipment is followed, all derricks are operated by steam hoisters from a central power station, and all are of thirty ton capacity, very heavily guyed to insure strength and safety. Steam drills and channeling machines are employed in quarrying the rock from its natural formation. A steam shovel is used in removing the top soil which overlays the stone. Owing to the large amount of machinery used by them they have now established a model machine and blacksmith shop at the plant for their own use, which is prepared to do all classes of work in that line. The Company employs a very large force of men, a majority of whom have acquired their own property and built homes at or near the town of McDermott, giving the place a very active and thriving appearance.

McDERMOTT STONE CO.

Since the quarries have been operated by this Company, the stone is known and sold from Boston to the Missouri River and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. The Company has salesmen on the road constantly, visiting new territory and increasing the demand for the McDermott Stone which has secured an enviable reputation and has become recognized as a standard material for building and sidewalk work. It is greatly admired for its durability and attractive appearance. Many buildings both public and private have been built or trimmed from it, a few of which may be mentioned as follows: The Court House at Williamson, West Virginia; The Kentwood Bank, Kentwood, Louisiana; St. Mary's Home, Green Bay, Wisconsin; City Hall, Whitewater, Wisconsin; Baptist Church, Portsmouth, Virginia; Insane Asylum, Topeka, Kansas; and many others of equal importance. The quarries present a remarkably interesting appearance to the visitor, the stone being formed in natural ledges, varying in thickness up to five feet, all of which is overlaid by a covering of earth averaging from ten to twelve feet in depth. The heavier ledges are sawed to size, for steps, caps, sills, etc., or shipped in rough dimension blocks to destination where it is prepared by the stone cutters for its final position in the building. The few thin ledges in the quarry, known to the trade as Flat Rock, are used for footing stone and similar work. The flat rock used for the footings in the Neave Building at Cincinnati, Ohio, upon which the weight of the ten story walls rest, came from these quarries. Over three hundred cars of flat rock used in the stone retaining walls of the Miami Canal when it was rebuilt through the city of Cincinnati in 1901, came from McDermott. The stone is used for bridge abutments and piers at various places along the line of the Norfolk & Western Railway between Cincinnati, Columbus and Norfolk, Virginia. It has also been used extensively by the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton and the Pennsylvania Railroads.

Churches.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at McDermott was organized in 1899 and a church building was erected. The membership is 25 and the average attendance of the Sunday School is 40. Rev. W. Phillips is the pastor. F. C. Smith is Superintendent of the Sunday School. The trustees are Mrs. C. C. Hulett, Miss Magnolia Smith and Miss Emma Dodds. In this place the women, as elsewhere, have a monopoly of religious affairs.

A suspension foot bridge was constructed across Brush Creek near the Arnold school house for school purposes in 1884 at an expense of $495. James M. Russell was the contractor. The bridge is 312 feet long and 4 feet wide.

The organization of Bethany Baptist Church dates its existence from November 30, 1834. Mr. George Heroedh built the brick church and donated it to the society. It was incorporated this year with 127 members. Mr. Heroedh was the first Clerk. Elder Burnett was the first regular preacher. In 1898 Rev. A. K. Murphy led a movement to build a new church. A beautiful and modern structure was soon completed and dedicated on the second Sunday of May, 1900, costing $3,000. The Rev. Willis is pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Rushtown was organized in 1868. J. D. Baker was the first pastor. The organization remained intact until 1895 and during that time the following is a list of the pastors: E. V. Bing, Samuel Bateman, C. M. Pryor, C. B. Lewis, Thomas Leslie, W. F. Filler, S. A. Crossley, William Donelson and H. Burkstresser, J. H. Rogers, Thomas Hass, J. W. Blair, Rev. Kling and W. A. Hunter. The charge was discontinued in 1895.

Schools.

There were originally five school districts in Rush Township when it was created, and there are now seven. The different school houses are located as follows: No. 1 is on Pond Creek; No. 2 is on Duck Run near the old R. M. Owen place, on the Rickey farm; No. 3 is the Upper Pond Creek school; No. 4 is the Kirkendall place; No. 5 is on Brush Creek on the George Arnold place; No. 6 is on Upper Duck Run close to the Inskeep Stone Mill, called the Hannah School House; No. 7 was originally located on Dever's Run, but now stands on the Doll farm, close to the Lucasville bridge.

Cemeteries.

The Heroedh burial ground became a township cemetery April 13, 1881. It is near the mouth of Brush Creek on an elevated piece of ground. George Heroedh and William Russell located it and the latter was to be the first interred therein. Russell and his son Robert died September 25, 1845, and were both interred in the same grave. From this time on it became a general burying ground. It contains 1.68 acres and was donated to the township by Levi and Sarah Kirkendall. On July 14, 1899, Mrs. Kirkendall deeded one additional acre to this cemetery for a consideration of $200.

The Hayman or Lucas graveyard is on Pond Creek. Some of the burials are: William Lucas, Jr., died October 23, 1837, aged 31 years, 7 months and 14 days; Gen. William Lucas, died September 10, 1805, in the 32nd year of his age; Joseph Lucas, (Associate Judge), died August 12, 1808, aged 37 years; Hannah Lucas, (his wife,) died April 8, 1857, aged 82 years, 10 months and 18 days; Elizabeth Lucas, consort of William Lucas, died August 16, 1835, aged 37 years; William Lucas, born November 20, 1799, died March 15, 1854; Samuel Lucas, died April 4, 1885, aged 55 years, 7 months and 24 days; Sarah Noel, consort of Andrew Noel, died January 21, 1841, aged 32 years, 2 days. This burial ground is no longer used.

At the Brick Church is another burial ground.

There are three burial grounds on the Wilson farm now owned by the Crow Brothers.

UNION TOWNSHIP.Organization and Boundary.

Union Township was one of the four original townships laid out at the house of Judge John Collins in Alexandria on August 9, 1803. It was then the second largest township in the county and included all that territory now belonging to the following townships; Brush Creek, Rarden, Union, Wayne and Clay, and portions of Morgan, Nile, Jefferson, Valley, Madison, Harrison and Porter. Its boundary was as follows:—Beginning at the mouth of Feurt's, now Carey's Run, thence up the Ohio river to the mouth of the Little Scioto; thence up said river to old Mr. Monroe's; thence west to the twelve mile tree on the Big Scioto; thence in a westerly direction to strike the dividing ridge between Brush Creek and Bear Creek; thence including all the water of Brush Creek to the county line; thence south with said county line to the dividing ridge between the Ohio river and Brush Creek; thence with said ridge to the head of Carey's Run; thence down the said Run to the Ohio river.

By reference to the separate histories of each of the above townships, knowledge can be had of the successive and frequent changes in its boundary and the curtailment of its territory. From one of the largest it has shrunk in size from the second rank to the fifth and contains at present 29,918 acres. Portsmouth was in Union Township until 1812 when it was first divided. On November 6, 1814, a part of Seal Township was attached to Union. Prior to 1878, the eastern and southern boundaries of the township were as at present and the northern and western boundaries were the east fork of McCullough, Brush Creek and Bear Creek and it contained 19,118 acres. On September 26, 1898, a portion was taken from Brush Creek Township and Union became as it is at present. Numerous slight changes have been made to accommodate persons along the border, for school purposes and various other reasons. It is now bounded by Rush, Washington, Nile and Brush Creek. Assessed value of real estate, $85,390, rank fourteenth; personal property, $37,361, rank fourteenth; total, $122,751, rank fifteenth.

Officers.

In 1809 the trustees were Perry Liston, James Norris and Peter Noel; Clerk, S. G. James; 1810, Trustees, James Norris, Peter Noel and Benjamin

Rankin; Treasurer, Benjamin Feurt; Clerk, S. G. James; Overseers of the Poor, Philip Moore and John White; Fence Viewers, John R. Turner and Warren Johnston; Constable, William Howell.

The above are not the first officers but are the first that could be found as all the early records up to 1873 have been lost or destroyed.

Surface, Drainage and Productions.

The surface is very much cut up by Brush Creek and its tributaries. This creek passes by a winding course from west to east through the township and receives Bear Creek from the South, near Henley, and McCullough Creek from the north. Before leaving the township, it makes a tortuous bend to the north, then to the southeast and then to the southwest. This is called the "horse-shoe bend." Bear Creek takes its rise in the southwest and flows northeast. McCullough enters the township from the north by two branches called the east and west forks and flows south. These tributaries flow through narrow valleys and have in many places very rapid descents. The land along them is of average productiveness and most of it is farmed. The chief farming region of the township is the Brush Creek Valley which has an average width of about a quarter of a mile, passing entirely across the township. All this valley has been cleared up and converted into farms. The soil is gravelly and loose and produces abundantly of corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, hay, tobacco, etc. There is a region of good farm land about Lombardville known as the "flats" which was the first portion of the township settled. This is a high region, shut in by hills on all sides and drained by Pine Creek, a small tributary to Bear Creek. Scattered over the township are good hill farms which are well adapted to fruit raising.

Twenty-five years ago this region was almost a wilderness of forest, and even up to the time the Cincinnati and Eastern was built there were thousands of acres that had scarcely been touched by the woodman's axe. The same can be said of all the region watered by Brush Creek, west of the Scioto. The terminal of the Cincinnati and Eastern Railroad was at Henley in 1883; and the years following this witnessed the conversion of the forests into lumber of all descriptions and its shipment to foreign parts. There yet remain a few tracts of good timber in different parts of the township, the largest of which is known as the "Peebles Tract," and lies in the southwest corner at the head waters of Bear Creek.

The great industry for the future in this region, which is now but in its infancy, is the stone business. The whole township is underlaid with fine sandstone suitable for building purposes, and only lies waiting the advent of capitalists to open up the numerous quarry sites, many of which are convenient to the Norfolk and Western Railroad. For many years this stone has been used for local building purposes but not until 1890 was any extended effort made to open up a large quarry. This year the Henley Stone Company was organized. It was composed of the following: John Peebles, Robert Peebles, Richard Peebles, President; T. N. Martin, Secretary and Charles McDonough. The quarry was opened the same year and continued in operation until 1898, when the company suspended work on account of the failing health of Richard Peebles, its manager.

The Wellmann Stone Company.

composed of A. J. Wellmann, President and Manager; E. M. Wellmann, Secretary and Treasurer; Henry Wellmann, Edward Grieve and John Baron, was organized and incorporated under the laws of Ohio in February, 1901, with a capital stock of $25,000. This company immediately purchased stone land and opened up two quarries northeast of Henley, about a quarter of a mile. Though just beginning, it is working twenty ledges, ranging from one to six feet in thickness, and is shipping very rapidly. Its channelers, drills, etc., are manufactured by the Ingersoll-Sargeant Company, and all the latest and up-to-date methods are used in quarrying. It has for hoisting purposes, large steam derricks, controlled wholly by the engineer. This point promises to have one of the largest stone industries in the county.

Henley

is located near the junction of Bear Creek with Brush Creek, and is on the line of the Norfolk and Western Ry. Since the construction of the railroad it has been the shipping point for lumber and timber products of all kinds.

The first store was conducted by J. W. O'Brien in 1882. The same year Peebles, Terry & Co., came and opened up a general store, and dealt in lumber. Deitrich & Co. came at the same time, and had a general merchandise store. The post office was established in 1883, and J. W. O'Brien is postmaster.

Lombardville.

The first settler in this vicinity was Benjamin Feurt, who built a still at a place called Stony Hill, and the country around was called "Feurt's Flats." This was about 1802. William Drake entered this land. Among the first settlers here were John McConnell and William Jewett. The place received its present name from Francis Lombard, who located there about 1862. The post-office was established in 1868. Julius Johnly built a cooper shop about 1870 and ran it for sixteen years. The place was settled along in the sixties by French and Swiss people. Julius Johnly is the present postmaster.

Other postoffices in the township are Crabtree, Comstock, Freestone and Arlon. Glen Hunt, McCullough and Arlon are camping sites.

Churches.

As late as 1883 there were no churches or church organizations in the township, and the only meetings were held at residences mostly by local preachers. At present there are five churches in the township and several other organizations have risen and declined in that time.

St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church was built in 1902 at a cost of $800. It is situated on the west fork of McCullough and is about four miles from Henley. There was a former church erected in 1876 on the same site. This church has 110 communicants and services are held three Sundays each month and Sunday School each Sunday. Rev. Joseph Mertian is the Priest.

Holy Trinity Roman Catholic Church was built in 1854. Ferrole Levrey donated an acre of land for the location of the church and other members donated money. The house is a frame to which has been added two additions. Its value is about $700.00. For twenty years it had no regular minister. It is visited by a priest from Portsmouth, once a month during the summer season, and sometimes by priests travelling. The incumbent priest is Father Joseph Mertian, who resides at McCullough. The membership now is about twenty-four families, about one-half what it was twenty years ago, the others having moved to the City, or gone West, principally to Illinois. The Sunday School is under the supervision of the church directors, who appoint a teacher to teach the children. The trustees are Eugene Cattee, Julius Simon and T. J. Vernier.

Singer Chapel, Methodist Episcopal Church was built by Rev. A. D. Singer in 1889 at a cost of $450. The church is about three-fourths of a mile from Crabtree. The organization was effected in 1884. Rev. Singer was the first and last pastor. The membership was at one time thirty members.

Lombardville Methodist Episcopal Church—The building now used by this organization was built by the Brothers of Liberty, and was later used by the Farmer's Alliance and G. A. R. It was bought for church purposes in 1899. The first trustees were John Oney, David M. Jewett and A. J. Cooper. A. D. Singer is pastor and superintendent of the Sunday School. The membership numbers 43 and the average attendance of Sunday School is about 30.

The Baptist Church on Pond Creek, organized about 1880 under the leadership of visiting ministers, built a church on the farm of John C. Swords in 1891. The minister at that time and for about five years was Rev. Hackworth. The building is a box frame in a fine location, put up by the members of the congregation, some furnishing lumber and money and others doing the work. It cost six hundred dollars. The present minister is Rev. A. J. Holly.

Schools.

There are seven school districts in the township all with good school houses. The term of school averages about six months in each year and a uniform salary of $35 per month is paid its teachers. The districts are No. 1, Pleasant Hill; No. 2, Arion; No. 3, Lombardville; No. 4, Pond Creek; No. 5, Henley, having the finest building in the township, costing about $1,000. No. 6, Comstock; No. 7, Laurel Point.

Cemeteries.

The only township cemetery is about one mile north of Lombardville on the Thomas Garvin farm and was given to the township by Mary Garvin. It is probably the oldest burial ground in the township and has interred in it some of the earliest settlers, most of whom have only rough slabs to mark their graves.

The Thornton cemetery is on Bear Creek, one mile southeast of Henley. Other cemeteries are the Sword, Mershon and the Catholic Cemetery on Pond Creek. Most of the earliest burials on Pond Creek have no headstones and are forgotten or unknown by those living there now.

In the Mershon cemetery are interred Henry Mershon, one of the pioneers of Pond Creek, his son, Samuel, a soldier of the Civil War, and Robert Morehouse, an Englishman and a soldier of the Civil War.

The Holy Trinity cemetery is near the church of that name.

VALLEY TOWNSHIP.Organization and Boundary.

It was formed June 4, 1860, from Jefferson Township and was so named on account of its location. Its territory was originally a part of Seal Township. In 1815, Seal disappeared from the map of Scioto County. On June 4, 1860, a petition was presented to the Commissioners favoring a separate Township to be called "Valley." The question had been voted on in the Spring election and the ticket favoring separation had carried, therefore on presentation of the petition by A. F. Miller, the following action was taken:

"It is now ordered, That a new Township be, and the same is hereby laid off and designated from the territory of the said Jefferson Township as prayed for in said application. And it is further ordered, That the said new Township be known by the name of and called "Valley." And it is further ordered, That the boundaries of the said new Township be recorded in the book kept for that purpose. And it is also further ordered, That an election be held at the tavern of John McCown, in the town of Lucasville, in said Township, on Saturday, June 16, 1860, for the election of Township officers for the said Township of Valley."

The boundaries were: Beginning at the Scioto river where the County line between Scioto and Pike Counties strikes the said river; thence east on said County line between said two Counties to the section line between sections 3 and 4 in Township 3 in said Scioto County; thence south on said line between sections 3 and 4 and between sections 15 and 16 to the southeast corner of section 16; thence west on the south line of said section 16, to the splitting corner on the south line of said section 16; thence south on the north and south splitting line of sections 21, 28 and 33, in said township 3 and of sections 4 and 9, in said township 2 to the south line of said section 9; thence west with the south line of said sections 9, 8 and 7 to the Scioto river; thence north running with the meanders of the Scioto river to the place of beginning.

Topography.

Lying as it does almost entirely in the Scioto Valley, it is without doubt the best of all the townships for agriculture. There are no large streams except the Scioto which bounds it on the west. Millar's Run crosses it from northeast to southwest near the center. Marsh's Run and Davis's Run cross the township near the southern end. The eastern border is rough and some of the hillsides are too steep for cultivation, but the proportion of rough lands is smaller than in any other township in the county. The Scioto Valley contains the best corn land in the county, and seven-eighths of Valley Township is of this quality of land.

The value of the Township real estate is $283,550; personal property, $175,601, and the total valuation is $459,151. Among the Townships it ranks eleventh in population; fourth in value of real estate; fifth in personal property; and fourth in total value of both. It is thirteenth in size and has an area of 15,560 acres.

Early Settlers.

Hezekiah Merritt was the first settler in Valley Township. He raised a crop of corn in the summer of 1796. He was the first Justice of the Peace, in Valley, (then a part of Seal), Township in 1804. Jacob Groniger came in 1798. Some others who followed in the next five years were: James O. and Isaac N. Johnson, William Marsh, A. F. Millar, Mark Snyder, Henry Spangler. Some other old settlers were: Leonard Groniger, James D. Thomas, Joseph Brant, Sr., John L. Jones, David Jones, Captain John Lucas, Charles T. Mastin, Reason Rouse, Benjamin Thomas, Jacob Thomas, Joseph Corns, Abraham Miller, Doctor Finley, Adron Lucas, Robert Buckles, Henry Jeffords, Dennis Hill (colored) and John Lancaster.

Lucasville.

In the first few years after its beginning, Lucasville promised to be a large town, thence the population dwindled until it was predicted that the place would be abandoned. This was at the time when the inhabitants were disappointed and disgusted at the canal being built on the west side of the river. Lucasville is now one of the best business locations in the County. Great quantities of lumber and cross ties are shipped from it, while the excellent farming country around furnishes a good healthy trade for the merchants. Lucasville has an elevator owned by H. S. Grimes of Portsmouth, a steam flour mill and four general stores: Joseph Brant's, C. J. Moulton's, Martindale & Edmunds' and P. T. McClelland's. Mr. Brant has a stock of drugs besides his general stock and Mr. McClelland keeps the Post Office. There are two livery stables. W. J. Thomas keeps a hotel. It has two blacksmiths, and two wagon makers, and one undertaker. The physicians are J. B. and C. M. Warwick and M. J. Beard. Lucasville was platted in June, 1819, by Colonel John Lucas from whom it received its name. The plat was recorded August 7, 1819. There were several houses and some business was done here before the town was platted. Colonel John Lucas lived here until his death, of a surfeit of green corn, July 31, 1825. The original plat contained 74 lots and 32 out lots, in all 88 acres. The James D. Thomas Addition made in 1880, contains 10 lots or 2 87-100 acres. The Charles W. Thomas Addition made in 1898, contains 11 lots or 3 1-10 acres.

The first officers of Valley Township were: Treasurer, W. A. Marsh; Clerk, Leonard Groniger; Justices of the Peace, John Wallace and A. F. Millar; Trustees, Clark Galligher, Mark Snyder; Constables, A. C. Turner and John Stewart. The first Board of Education was: Leonard Groniger, A. F. Millar, Mark Snyder, and James D. Thomas. The present officers are: Treasurer, Charles Martindale; Clerk, W. J. Thomas; Justices of the Peace, Adonijah Crain and Adam Turner; Trustees, Joseph Rockwell, James Appel, J. Berntholdt; Constables, James Crain and Charles Schoonover.

Churches.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Lucasville was organized in October, 1849, by Rev. Sheldon Parker and Rev. L. A. Atkinson, and a brick church built the same year. The lot on which the church was built was the gift of Doctor D. A. Belknap. His wife started the subscription for the building and secured most of the funds. The original Trustees were: William Marsh, James O. Johnson, and William Miller. The first Sunday School was organized in Lucasville in 1850. Mrs. Mary Moulton secured the money for the library, and was the first Sunday School Superintendent. The present trustees of the Methodist Church are: J. C. McKinley, J. W. Rockwell, J. H. Finney, J. B. Warwick, C. J. Moulton and J. H. Brant. The membership is about 50. The pastor is Rev. John W. Morgan.

Schools.

Valley Township schools are among the best in the County. It pays fair wages to its teachers and has from 8 to 10 months school. The Lucasville school is a sub-district but arrangements are made by which the principal receives better wages than the other teachers of the Township. Pupils from districts near attend the Lucasville school after finishing the shorter terms elsewhere, and the class is quite large for two or three months in the spring. In 1860, there were four organized school districts. In 1878, another was added. The schools are as follows: Sub-district No. 1, Johnson School; sub-district No. 2, Lucasville; sub-district No. 3, Cockrell School; sub-district No. 4, Marsh School; sub-district No. 5, Millar's Run School. The principal, C. D. Walden, receives $82.50 per month, the other male teachers receives $40.00 and the females $35.00 per month. The average attendance is 30 pupils for each school. The school property is worth about $4,000.

Lodges.

Lucasville Lodge, No. 465, F. and A. M. was organized October 16, 1872. The charter members were: Leonard Groniger, A. L. Groniger, Isaac Fullerton, W. M. Thomas, Charles E. Wolf, J. Johnson, J. W. Wakefield, Jacob Fisher, John B. Warwick, M. J. Noel and Nathan James. The first officers were: Thomas J. Pursell, W. M.; A. L. Groniger, S. W.; J. W. Wakefield, J. W.; W. M. Thomas, Secretary and John B. Warwick, Treasurer. The first meetings of the lodge were held in a room over W. J. Thomas's store. In 1883, a two story hall was erected. The lower story is owned and used by Valley Township as a townhouse. The upper story was fitted up for a lodge room at a cost of $2,700. The membership is about 80. The officers: R. J. Smith, W. M.; Charles Wolf, S. W.; Milton Martin, J. W.; G. L. Bricker, Secretary; Joseph Rockwell, Treasurer; C. M. Warwick, S. D.; Jesse Pyles, J. D.; Tyler, L. J. Wood.

Reminiscences.

Charles F. Mastin kept a store in Lucasville in 1813. Peter Logan had a blacksmith shop in Lucasville in 1815. In 1813, Dennis Hill had a large tannery in Lucasville. Colonel John Lucas kept tavern in Lucasville from 1819 to 1825. In 1824, Reason Rouse kept tavern and sold liquor in Lucasville. Abraham Miller & Son, in 1824, started a large general store which was for a time the best in the County. In 1825-6 Joseph Corns kept a store and sold liquor. From 1820 to 1826 Henry Jeffords conducted the stage line and kept tavern at Scioto Inn near Lucasville. In 1824, David Jones kept tavern in Lucasville. He also had a collection of fast horses, and a race track was built and regular races were had for several years. John Lancaster, in 1829, ran a carding machine in Lucasville.

John Dever from the west side, in 1824, rode to Lucasville and spent the day at the tavern. During the day the Scioto river rose rapidly. Members of his family went to the ford in the evening and waited for him to come. When he arrived they warned him not to venture. He said that his horse could jump Big Scioto any time, and he plunged into the water when he and the horse disappeared. The horse rose to the surface and swam out, when Dever's dead body was seen hanging by one foot to the stirrup of the saddle on his horse.

In 1821, a man by the name of Robert Buckles got into a dispute with Doctor Finley at Rouse's Tavern. Buckles had been drinking and Finley being quick tempered struck him with a chair and followed up the blows after he had fallen, until his head was crushed to jelly. Finley was charged with murder, arrested and bound over to appear at the next term of court to answer the charge. J. O. Johnson and others were bondsmen for him. When released on bail he went to Texas, leaving his bondsmen to settle the score.

Before 1824, Abraham Miller and John Miller were engaged rather extensively in the distilling business near Lucasville.

In 1842, Mrs. Thomas, mother of James L., John and Jacob Thomas, was burned to death at her home below Lucasville. When the fire was discovered, all the family left the building. Mrs. Thomas, thinking of some money which was kept upstairs, returned intending to save it. The fire cut off her retreat by destroying the stairway and it was impossible to rescue her. Near her charred remains in the wreck of the building, was found a mass of melted silver weighing 28 pounds. A monument marks the spot where she met her death. It stands near the railroad and to the right of the pike going north to Lucasville.

Lucasville Cemetery.

A few of the inscriptions taken from the gravestones are as follows: "In memory of Colonel John Lucas, who died 1825, aged 38 years." Was Colonel in the war of 1812. "In memory of Captain William Lucas, who departed this life, July A. D. 1814, in the 72d year of his age." (A Revolutionary Soldier.) "Susannah Lucas, wife of William Lucas, who departed this life May A. D. 1809, aged 64 years." "Rachel Kendall, wife of General William Kendall, departed this life in 1820."

A Remarkable Tree.

On the south bank of Millar's Run and immediately on the east side of the Norfolk & Western Railroad track, at the point where it crosses this Run, there stood at the incoming of the nineteenth century, a sycamore of probably two centuries growth. One might probably have searched in vain for another of such immense proportions east of the Sierras and the Cascades, "the land of the monster sequoia." When first discovered by white men, this tree was in a state of decay, with an immense cavity in the trunk extending from the root up into the diverging forks. It measured at the base twenty-one feet in diameter and sixty feet in circumference, and tapered abruptly upward. At a point five feet from the ground it measured forty-two feet in circumference. The opening of the cavity at the base was ten feet wide, at the height of five feet it was seven feet wide, and the top of the opening was nine and one-half feet above the ground. The fork was about eight feet from the ground. This enormous tree stood on the farm originally owned by Abraham Miller, later by Thomas Dugan, and at a point about two hundred yards above what is known as Dugan's Grove. It was a natural curiosity often visited by travellers and was the wonder and admiration of all the surrounding country. Many visitors inclined to literary diversion wrote accounts and descriptions of it for publication. One of these articles published in an old Cincinnati Almanac in 1810 tells of a party of fourteen on horseback making a visit to this prodigy of nature and testing the capacity of its cavernous trunk, by all attempting to ride within. One after another rode in until it came the turn of the last of the fourteen. It was said that he could have found room, but his horse, being a little capricious, could not be induced to enter. This took place June 5, 1808. Those who composed the company were: E. W. Hall and wife, William Trimmer and wife, William Headley, Elizabeth Miller, John Hayes and wife and Cornelius Millar. James Lane remained outside the tree with his skittish horse. The rest of the party were children who came with their parents. This tree stood until the farm fell into Thomas Dugan's hands. One of the large forks was broken off at the time of the incident related above. Dugan had it chopped down and a few years afterwards had the stump removed.

VERNON TOWNSHIP

is in the southeastern part of the County. It was organized in 1818, from land which had formerly been Upper Township. It is bounded on the north by Bloom Township, on the east by Bloom Township and Lawrence County, on the south by Lawrence County and Green Township, and on the west by Green and Porter Townships. The first settlements were in Pine Creek Valley. Some of the first settlers were Shadrack Chaffin, David Salladay, Reuben Chaffin, Nathan Searl, Reuben Smith, Lemuel Cadot, Claudius Cadot, Timothy S. Hayward, Richard Malone, Edward Barklow, Francis Duteil, James Thompson and Lawrence DeLouder.

Officers.

The first Township officers were: Clerk, Reuben Smith; Treasurer, Moses Hayward; Justice of the Peace, James Thompson; Trustees, Edward Barklow, Reuben Smith and James Thompson; Supervisors, Richard Malone, William Munyon and Richard Sheldon; Constables, William Smith and Lawrence DeLouder; Overseer of the Poor and Fence Viewer, Richard Sheldon and Robert Thompson; Lister, William Smith.

Surface, Drainage, Etc.

The Township has considerable mineral wealth, but it is undeveloped. More than two-thirds of the land is tillable although the greater part of the township is hilly. Pine Creek enters the township from Bloom and runs nearly south across it east of the center. In the valley are found some fine farm lands, equal to any in the County. There are also some good farms in Lick Run and Turkey Foot Valleys.

Area, Valuation and Rank.

The area of the township is 22,026 acres. The value of real estate is $114,930, the value of personal property is $43,015, and the total valuation is $157,945. It ranks eighth in area, fourteenth in population, eleventh in real estate, thirteenth in personal property and twelfth in total value of both.

Schools.

Amazah Welcher taught the first school in Vernon Township in a log school house near Chaffin's Mill before 1817. The school house had slab seats, puncheon floors and greased paper windows. Vernon Township has at present six schools with an average attendance of forty pupils, and the term of school is six months, and the salary of the teachers is $35 per month. The schools are as follows:—District No. 1, Chaffin's School; District No. 2, Vernon School; District No. 3, Clinton Furnace School; District No. 4, Empire Furnace School, District No. 5, 6 and 7 are abandoned; District No. 8, Kettle's School; District No. 9, Upper Lick Run School.

Churches.

Rufus Chaney preached at Vernon in December, 1818. Eli Chesley also preached there the same winter. Cadot Church, (the old Howard Furnace M. E. Church) was organized by Henry Berkstresser in 1880. It has a membership of about twenty-five. The pastor is Rev. H. K. Wishon.

The Chaffin's Mills Free Will Baptist Church (Antioch Chapel) was organized in 1875 by Revs. Searl, Chabot and Swain. It has a membership of about seventy-five. Rev. John Sheppard is the pastor.

The Union Free Will Baptist Church was organized September 19, 1857, by Revs. David Topping and Jordan Nye. It has a membership of about fifty. The pastor is Rev. John Sheppard.

The Vernon Regular Baptist Church was organized in 1841 by Rev. John Kelley and J. Bennett. It has a membership of about twenty-five. Rev. Wilson is the pastor.

The Mt. Hope Free Will Baptist Church was organized in 1864, by Revs. Jordan Nye and Isaac Fullerton. It has a membership of about 100. Rev. Isaiah Smith is the pastor.

St. John the Baptist Church. The Catholic people, who lived at Harrison, Scioto and Bloom Furnace, with Rev. Father Karge of Portsmouth as pastor, in 1861, built a frame church costing $800.00. It was located on Tick Ridge on the farm of Mr. Philip Dill. Ten years after, a parsonage was built beside the church. The members of the building committee were Xavier Shepherd, Benedict Seidel, Lawrence Karl and Joseph Spitznagel. This Church which is called that of St John the Baptist, Lilly, P. O., had a resident pastor a few years. It has been and is now attended by the priest from Wheelersburg.

Mills and Furnaces.

John Shope built the first mill in 1816, which remains standing to the present time. It was owned by Henry Summer in 1819, by Thomas Burke in 1820, by Timothy S. Hayward in 1823 and Reuben Chaffin in 1830 and remained in his possession for thirty-three years, hence its name. It passed to Dearborn Emory, Willis Newland, Aaron Hollenshed, Jacob Newland, J. C. Cadot, and is now owned by the widow of Dearborn Emory.

The old Clinton Furnace Company started the first store in 1832. There are no public works or factories in the township.

Cemeteries.

The Turkey Foot Township Cemetery is well cared for. The first interment here was Mrs. Lucinda Perry, died April 27, 1840, aged 35 years, 7 months.

The Cadot private Cemetery lies west of the Cadot homestead, while south of it are five cemeteries, (Clinton, Patton, Mt. Hope, Duteil and Cable.) The Newland Cemetery also lies near the Cadot farm. This farm alone has four cemeteries.

Mt. Hope Cemetery contains about one acre. It is public, but not a township cemetery.

Duteil Cemetery contains one acre and is about one-half mile from Mt. Hope Church.

Patton Cemetery contains about one acre, and is in sight of Duteil and Cable cemeteries.

Cadot Cemetery. Some of the burials are: Cinthian, wife of Claudius Cadot, died May 21, 1841, aged 25 years; Nancy, died August 25, 1827, aged 5 years; Nancy B. wife of Claudius Cadot, died June 9, 1835, aged 36 years; Juliet Cadot, daughter of Claudius Cadot and Nancy Cadot, died November 6, 1858; Sophronia Cadot, died August 26, 1827; Claudius Cadot a soldier of 1812, died May 16, 1875, aged 82 years, 4 months.

Newland or Hayward Cemetery is abandoned, but many graves are to be seen and some of the stones are standing. Several old pioneers are buried here. The only records are: Moses Hayward, died Nov. 30, 1838, aged 39 years, 1 mo; Moses Hayward, senior, died October 2, 1862, aged 94 years, 4 days; Moses Hayward, died 1840, aged 1 year, 5 months; Lucy Hayward, died November 21, 1835; Hannah, wife of Moses Hayward, died August 2, 1834, aged 63 years, 3 months, 3 days; Horace, son of Moses Hayward, died October 6, 1882, aged 15 years 2 months; Orange Hayward died October 1, 1822; Elizabeth, wife of Philip S. Hayward, died January 21, 1827, aged 20 years, 1 month.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Organization and Boundary.

Though not organized until 1814, Washington was one of the first townships settled. Alexandria was one of the first three settlements in the county and among the first along the Ohio. There is only a few months between the settlements at the mouth of the Little Scioto, the French Grant settlement and this one.

A petition for a new township to be formed from parts of Nile and Union came before the Commissioners in August, 1814. The petition was granted and it was ordered that the new township be bounded as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of Turkey Creek; thence up the Ohio river with the meanderings thereof to the mouth of the Scioto River; thence up the Scioto river to the mouth of Pond Creek; thence a westerly course with Thomas Wil-coxon's line to the dividing line between Pond Creek and Carey's Run and following said ridge to the head of Stony Creek; thence down said creek to Turkey Creek; thence down Turkey Creek to the Ohio river; and it is further ordered that said township be called Washington."

When the Ohio canal was constructed it was found necessary to change the mouth of the Scioto up the river about a mile. This alteration threw a part of Wayne Township on the west side of the Scioto and there being no bridge between the two parts, the land owners so cut off, asked to be included in Washington Township, which was granted by the following order of the County Commissioners:

"It is therefore ordered that the boundaries of Washington Township be so changed that all the portion of territory lying west of the present termination of the Ohio canal and east of the old mouth of the Scioto river, and between the old bed of said Scioto river and the present course of said river, be stricken off from the township of Wayne, and attached to the township of Washington, and that the Auditor of this county issue a copy of this order to the Clerks of each of the townships aforesaid, and make the necessary record thereof in his office." December 6, 1842.

Valuation, Area and Rank.

Though the smallest among the townships outside of Wayne, it takes eighth rank in the separate valuation of its real and of its personal property, and holds ninth place in the aggregate of both. The value of the real estate in 1901, was $223,460; of personal property, $77,234; total, $300,694. It includes within its territory 14,235 acres, with a population of 1,269, the same as Harrison Township, which has almost twice the area.

Surface, Drainage, Productions, Etc.

Situated as it is, at the juncture of the Scioto with the Ohio, it contains a large expanse of valuable bottom land. There are no streams of any considerable size in the township, except Carey's Run, which has its source in the northwest corner, and flows in a southeasterly direction down a narrow valley to the Ohio.

The Ohio and Scioto valleys are from a mile to two miles broad and much of the land is inundated each year by the annual floods which leave a heavy deposit of alluvium. The hilly portion of the township is very rough and stony and not suited to cultivation. Some terrace land along the border of the Scioto valley affords good upland farms and a pleasant locality for residences. The whole Scioto valley is planted with corn each year and when the flood does not come at the wrong time the harvest is bounteous. The Ohio valley is not flooded so much as the Scioto and excellent wheat crops are grown as well as corn. For several weeks each winter and spring the "west side," as this is commonly called, is cut off from the east side of the Scioto, by an expanse of water reaching from hill to hill, from two to three miles wide and twenty to thirty feet deep. During these times the inhabitants of the west side, who make many and frequent trips to Portsmouth, are compelled to take to boats.

The first tract of land entered in the township was by Larkin Smith, number 475, August 3, 1787. The survey was made November 21, 1787. The tract lay just above the mouth of Turkey Creek and was afterward owned by Major John Belli.

Alexandria.

The tract upon which Alexandria was platted was Survey Number 508, containing six hundred acres, located by Alexander Parker for his brother, Col. Thomas Parker, of Frederick County, Virginia, August 3, 1787. The survey was made by John O'Bannon, Deputy Surveyor, John Williams and Sylvester Murroney, Chainmen; Thomas Parker, Marker. It is said that a part of the land on which Alexandria was laid out had been partly cleared and cultivated in corn by the Indians. The site seems to have been chosen for a town some time before the town was platted and named Alexandria for Alexandria, Va. Benjamin Feurt said that when his father landed there it was called Alexandria. Just when the lots were surveyed and sold is somewhat uncertain. All we find of record on that point is in the following:

"I hereby certify that this plat contains the in and out lots in the town of Alexandria, laid out by me, and laid down by a scale of twenty poles to an inch, done by order of Col. Thomas Parker of Frederick County, Virginia.—E. Langham. Alexandria, June 3, 1799."

We find on the same plat the following: "I do hereby certify that the plan contains the in and out lots in the town of Alexandria, which I sold as such, for Col. Thomas Parker, of Frederick County, Virginia, situated in the County of Adams in the Territory northwest of the Ohio.—A. Parker."

"Sale of the lots in Alexandria will commence at 12 o'clock, at the corner on the river, of Thomas Street, lot No. 19.

"Filed in the Recorder's office, June 4, 1799.—John Belli, Recorder."

When and by whom the first settlements were made by permanent inhabitants here is uncertain, but that it was settled before the above dates is beyond all doubt. There were eighty-eight lots, numbered serially from 1 to 88 and 35 out-lots numbered from 1 to 35. A copy of this plat is recorded in Plat Book 1, page 33. Scioto County Record of Plats. The streets running back from the river ran north 58 degrees west and were named, beginning on the northeast side and going down the river: Scioto, Thomas, Middle and South Streets. Those running at right angles and with the Ohio river were Water, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth. There was a tier of twenty lots along the river front and another tier of lots numbered from 69 to 88 back of Sixth street. The remaining lots were arranged in a double tier on the northeast side of Thomas street, with an alley between them, and another double tier on the southwest side of Thomas street, with no alley between them. This last group was in the eastern corner of the town and between Second and Fourth streets. All the rest of the town was outlots.

First Inhabitants.

Among the first inhabitants in Alexandria were Judge John Collins, William Russell, John Russell, Joseph Parrish, John Logan, William Lowry, Stephen Smith, James Munn and William Brady. These settled in the town and James Edison, James Hamilton, John Worley, Anthony Worley, John West, Philip Moore, Peter Noel and Martin Funk landed at Alexandria and located within eight miles of the place.

Between 1801 and 1804, David Gharky, John Simpson, Elijah Glover, William Jones and Samuel G. Jones settled in the place. Dr. Thomas Waller, John Simpson, Stephen Carey, William Carey, Patrick Timmonds, and Samuel Gunn, settled in the township between the same dates.

Growth and Decay.

When the town flourished at its height those who owned houses were: David Gharky, who owned a two-story house with a cabinet shop attached; Fletcher had a dwelling house and blacksmith shop; this was burned in 1806; Stephen Smith built and owned a stone house completed in 1815; E. Langham owned a one-story frame house afterwards converted into a warehouse; Judge John Collins kept a place of entertainment and accommodated travellers; Silas Cole owned a two-story double log house; Captain Samuel Gunn owned a two-story frame dwelling. The school house stood back of Alexandria at the foot of the hill. Barlow Aldrich owned a two-story wooden building; Patrick Timmonds lived in a large two-story house, before which he hung out a sign with a green tree painted on it. Here he kept a hotel. There were a few other buildings but these were the most prominent.

Up to the time Portsmouth was laid out and for some time after, Alexandria held the undisputed claim of being the business center of the county. Here the first court was held. The first county-seat and the first postoffice were here. The post office was established in 1805 and William Russell was the first postmaster. His first report was dated June 30, 1805. Three years afterward, the post office was abandoned and one was established at Portsmouth. John Collins, one of the first Associate Judges, lived here. The last Indian was killed by John McDonald, or his brother, near John Craig's, a mile below this place. One of the first, if not the first, grist mill built and put in service was built by Stephen Carey on Carey's Run. Vats were afterward sunk and some tanning was done. This was the first tannery in the county.

The first ferry was established across the mouth of the Scioto in 1809 by Stephen Smith. On Christmas Day, 1808, the water was 37 inches deep in the houses, making two floods in that month.

From the first and in the very nature of things the fate of the place was sealed, its destiny was manifest. The floods came up each year and invaded the settlers' houses, compelling the inmates to flee to the hills. After a few repetitions of this ordeal, it was seen to be impossible for a town to grow and prosper under such conditions and one by one, they moved over to Henry Massie's town, now Portsmouth, a mile above the mouth of the Scioto, until by 1810, Portsmouth had gained the ascendancy and Alexandria gradually dwindled away, until not a vestige of it is left at the present day.

Mill and Distillery.

The grist mill at Union Mills was built in 1834 by Lemuel Moss; William Waller and Samuel Coles rented it and operated it until 1838 when it was destroyed by fire. They rebuilt it near the old site and continued to manage it until about 1851, when it was sold to L. N. Robinson, who conducted the business until 1860. Then George Davis became proprietor and owned and operated it till his death. Since then it has been destroyed.

The distillery at this place was built in 1857 by David Gibson, L. N. Robinson, Louis Robinson, Joshua Robinson and Joseph Cheesman, who operated it until 1859, when it was purchased by George Davis. He owned and operated it, in connection with the mill and cooper shops, until the organization of the Cattle Feeders' Trust.

Stone Industry.

The site of the first stone quarry is disputed. From a quarry on the land originally owned by Levi Moore, but now owned by Michael Gazele, was furnished stone for the construction of the canal. Soon afterwards another was opened on Hygean Run, the stone from which was used for the same purpose. Another early quarry on the land owned by W. C. Brouse furnished stone for building a dam in the Licking River. From the same stone quarry, stone was used in the construction of one of the court houses in Cincinnati. It was opened by Joshua and Silas Phillips. At present the Carey's Run Free-stone Company supplies building and paving stone for a good portion of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia. In the years 1898 and 1899 about 50,000 cubic yards of stone were sent from these quarries to be used in the construction of the Cincinnati Water Works. The quarries are situated up Carey's Run and yield as good stone as is found in the County. Their flagging and dimension stone are sawed at the Reitz Mill in Portsmouth, Ohio. The whole township is underlaid with this sandstone.

Tempevale

is more of a name than a town, although there have been two additions made to it. It is located on lower Carey's Run and was first platted by Roswell and Ora Crain January 28, 1834. The plat contained 38.1 acres, sub-divided into eight lots and three outlots. The first addition was platted by Roswell Crain February 25, 1848. This plat contained 3.23 acres sub-divided into eight lots. The third addition was platted by Crane, April 14, 1851, and contained 4.9 acres sub-divided into 12 lots. There are a few houses here but no business is carried on.

The Davis and Nauvoo Tract was platted May 8, 1895, by A. T. Holcomb, Administrator of George Davis, deceased, by an order of the Probate Court of Scioto County. The plat contained 29 lots. This is a little hamlet of about seventy-five souls, and lies just back of Bertha postoffice. Cornelius H. Barbee is the post-master.

An addition called Rapp's Addition was platted by John S. and Elizabeth Rapp December 31, 1900. The plat contains 60 lots and 1.39 acres.

The Portsmouth Dry Dock and Steamboat Basin Company.

The Portsmouth Dry Dock and Steamboat Basin Company opened its books at No. 5, Pine street, New York, May 20, 1839, at 11 a. m. The Ports-major investors were John Craighead, John Glover, Thomas Gibbons, James Jackson and E. Hamilton. It was organized for trading purposes and a large warehouse was built near the Cotton Woods, which stood until the war. A town was platted containing 11 acres subdivided into 88 lots. The company built a wooden bridge across the Scioto which was later blown down.

The Great Fraud of Scioto Heights.

Platted June 2, 1890, by George A. Slough, consisted of two plats. The first consisting of 944 lots numbered serially from 1 to 944. The second contained 476. The land platted is a part of Survey No. 13,513 and contains 166.9 acres. The name "Scioto Heights" has become proverbial and synonymous with the word "swindle." A veritable Eden for "suckers" and "land sharks," and an inevitable disappointment to the purchaser in good faith. The site is a wilderness and so high that those who should so far lose their mental equilibrium as to ever build there would be compelled to use a balloon and parachute to get to and away from their retreat! Both sides of the town could be formed as it stands on edge, the economy of nature! A house built there would have to be anchored to prevent its tumbling down the hill. Many persons from other parts have been induced to buy here by unprincipled land agents.

Churches.

The Old Town M. E. Church organization dates its existence back to 1837 when the first edifice was erected. The first board of trustees were: George Graves, John D. Smith, Philip Moore, Isaiah Smith, Charles Hunt, Thomas Williamson and Isaac Williams. The building was destroyed by fire in 1851 and a new building was erected that year and dedicated by Bishop Clark. The church was remodeled in 1897. John M. Chandler is the pastor and the board of trustees is as follows: George Williamson, Leroy Smith, George Salladay, Dr. G. W. Osborne and David Lewis.

The Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church dates its beginning in 1870, and the first pastor was Rev. William Bateman. A new edifice was constructed in 1897 and dedicated by Rev. H. S. Alkire. The pastor is John M. Chandler. The trustees are John M. Vaughters, W. C. Brouse, John R. Foster, Charles H. Morris, and Frederick Becker.

Morris Chapel is a Mission Station of the First Baptist Church of Portsmouth and was built in 1894. It is situated at Union Mills and cost $1,500. It was remodeled in 1902 and has a seating capacity of 225. It is a model country church building with excellent baptistry and disrobing rooms. Sunday School and church services are held on Sunday afternoons. The membership numbers forty and the Sunday School averages 75. Rev. W. C. Stevenson, Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Portsmouth has charge of it.

Schools.

The Washington Township schools are among the best in the county. It employs the best teachers and pays them well. The term of school averages eight months in the year. The township enjoys the distinction of having had a school within its borders so early as 1800. This was taught by one William Jones. Capt. Samuel Green taught a school back of Alexandria, at the foot of the hill, shortly after this. Other early teachers who followed them were Andrew McClaren, Samuel Williamson, Traverse Reed, Joshua Nurse and Abraham Barnes.

Sub-district No. 1 is known as the Dry Run school. The first building erected here was about 1839 on a lot purchased of Joseph Williamson. This lot was exchanged for a new one and a two-roomed building was constructed on it in 1890. There are two teachers with salaries of $45 and $40 per month respectively. Enrollment 75.

Sub-district No. 2 is known as the Hygean School from its location. This is a commodious two-room building erected on land purchased from George Davis in 1869. The teachers have salaries of $45 and $40 per month. Enrollment 75.

Sub-district No. 3 is on Lower Carey's Run. A school lot was purchased of Roswell Crane in Tempevale, March 7, 1834. The present building recently erected stands on a lot bought of Anna Becker, August 3, 1895. The teacher has a salary of $45 per month. Enrollment 31.

Sub-district No. 4, commonly known as "Sugar Grove" is in the lower end of the township near the river. The first house was built in 1854 on land donated by Andrew Brouse. A new and modern structure was built in 1895. Thomas L. Bratten was the first teacher in this building. The teacher has a salary of $45 per month. The enrollment is 35.

Sub-District No. 5, known as Upper Carey's Run erected a building on land purchased of James Andrews in 1839. A new stone house was constructed in 1893 on land bought of Chris Grumme. This is the only stone school house in the county. The salary of the teacher is $45 per month.

Cemeteries.

This locality being the most ancient in the county naturally contains some of the most ancient burial grounds. There are three township cemeteries, all of which have some of the early notables interred in them, as a glance over the following will show.

The Carey's Run Cemetery was given to the township by Alexander Parker April 8, 1816, and it is situated on a point near the Infirmary. The following are some of the inscriptions: William Pyles, born Sept. 27, 1802, died March 11, 1853; Roswell Crain, born Oct. 3, 1816, died March 2, 1853; Horace Crain, born Oct. 3, 1816, died May 15, 1892; John G. Gharky, born May 27, 1808, died April 26, 1889; David Gharky, born February 13, 1775, died Aug. 9, 1850; William Journey, died August 1, 1883, aged 73 years, 2 months, 2 days; Thomas Waller, born September 17, 1774, died July 19, 1823; John F. Smith died August 21, 1846, aged 53 years, 6 months, 2 days; Stephen Smith died October 22, 1861, aged 43 years, 6 days; Otho D. Foster, born August 18, 1836, died December 16, 1894.

Vaughters' Cemetery. The Vaughters Cemetery was bought of William Vaughters August 15, 1878. It is located near the residence of J. M. Vaughters. The following are some of the inscriptions: James Edison, died January 21, 1828, aged 87 years; Aaron Hall, died Oct. 16, 1845, aged 53 years, 7 months; Isaac Worley, born April 16, 1792, died March 29, 1839; John Worley, died January 16, 1840; aged 72 years, 4 months; Joshua Nourse, died August 10, 1823, aged 79 years; Samuel R. Nourse, died July 29, 1845, aged 75 years; John A. Brouse, died May 10, 1858; aged 68 years, 3 months, 1 day; William H. Vaughters, born August 9, 1817, died July 26, 1880.

Turner's Cemetery near Union Mills was a private burial ground until 1884, when it was bought of William Turner for $110. The following are some of the inscriptions: Hugh B. Calvert, born June 22, 1808, died August 1, 1879; Caleb Wilcoxon, died July 9, 1849, aged 59 years, 3 months, 13 days; Philip Moore, died September 4, 1823, aged 62 years. On this grave stands a twenty inch locust tree; Jemima Moore, died December 26, 1826, aged 62 years.

In addition to these there are a number of soldiers of the Civil War buried here. Besides the above named township cemeteries there are a number of private burial grounds. One of these is on the Infirmary farm; another is on the farm of George Williamson, and has been used since 1849. Another is on the east bank of the canal near Dry Run. Among those buried here are: Ruth Wilcoxon, wife of John Wilcoxon, born January 21, 1770, died August 21, 1828; Rebecca M. Smith, died February 19, 1849, aged 69 years, 2 months, 25 days; William P. Oard, died October 9, 1845, aged 39 years, 8 months; Thomas H. Wilcoxon, died June 17, 1824, at New Orleans, was interred there and afterward re-interred here April 22, A. D. 1828, aged 34 years, 8 months, 2 days; Sarah, wife of Thomas H. Wilcoxon, died December 27, 1828, aged 29 years, 8 months, 21 days; Joseph Oard, died March 29, 1838, aged 57 years, 1 month, 12 days; Joel W. Smith, died February 4, 1826, aged 49 years; Joseph Williamson, died September 16, 1812, aged 47 years.

A Remarkable Prize Fight.

George Beedle Mershon was born May 1, 1825, in Adams County near Locust Grove. His father's name was Henry Mershon, born in Flemingsburg, Kentucky. His grandfather was Timothy Mershon. His mother's maiden name was Cassie Ann Hibbs.

that office. Dr. Offnere was a very useful man,—more reliable than the bank of England, and was in great demand for an office like Treasurer.

In 1824, James Lodwick was elected a Trustee. This was his first appearance in his long career before the public in Portsmouth. He was a good Democrat and always ready to hold any public office.

He was not a native born Virginian but came very near being. His sister next older than he, was born in Virginia, but he inherited the Virginia taste for office from his father, Col. John Lodwick.

In 1826, 129 persons voted at the Township election. Cornelius McCoy appeared on the scene, for the first time, and was elected Overseer of the Poor. John Peebles was elected House Appraiser and John H. Thornton, Lister. A township duplicate was made each year. In this year the township taxes were $288.92½. William Lodwick was the largest land owner in the Township, and Henry Massie next.

In 1826, 113 votes were cast at the Township election. The receipts of the township for the previous year were $161.40½. John M. McDowell appears, officially, this year as an Overseer of the Poor, as was John Peebles. William Peebles and John R. Turner were elected Fence Viewers. This shows that at that time they were regarded as the principal citizens of the Township.

On May 20, 1826, our friend, John Brown, Senior, tried for the office of Justice of the Peace. He had 48 votes, but Ezra Osborn who was always ready for an office, received 71 votes and was elected.

On June 26, 1826, John Peebles and Samuel M. Tracy were appointed Township Trustees in place of Asa A. Andrews and Gabriel Feurt who had been set off into Clay Township. Samuel G. Jones was made Supervisor in place of Samuel C. Briggs, set off into the new township of Clay.

In 1827, there were three school districts with householders as follows: first, 38; second, 43; third, 13. In this year, Giles S. B. Hempstead was made Supervisor. Silas W. Cole and Levi C. Barker were Overseers of the Poor.

In 1828, there were 37 electors at the Township election. Samuel M. Tracy, John Peebles and Havillah Gunn were elected Trustees. On December 28, 1828, Edward Hamilton was elected a Justice of the Peace. There were 110 votes cast, Hamilton had 59 and John Noel, 51.

On April 6, 1829, 69 votes were cast at the election. Wm. Hall and Enos Gunn were elected Fence Viewers. This was simply to remind them that they were mortal. This office, except in the case of Martin Funk, was always conferred on some one who did not want it and would not have it. In 1830, John H. Thornton and Ezra Osborn had it; in 1831, M. B. Ross and Samuel Huston; in 1834, Henry Buchanan had it; in 1837, John Waller, and B. F. Conway; in 1838, Joseph Riggs and Elias Barber.

In 1830, John Peebles, Samuel M. Tracy and Washington Kinney were elected Trustees. They served a number of years before and after that.

In 1831, 89 votes were cast. Simon DeLong was elected Constable this year and a number of times before and after. He liked the office and was fitted for it. He was a butcher by trade and never failed to make an arrest.

In 1835, the township expenditures were $320.

In 1836, 132 votes were cast.

In 1837, John C. Ashley, who has a picture and sketch herein, was elected a Trustee. William Jones, the first school teacher, was elected Clerk.

In 1837, John C. Ashley and Jacob P. Noel were elected Justices of the Peace. The budget for this year was $873.65.

In 1838, our old Irish friend, Lorenzo C. Goff, was elected Justice of the Peace. It was a specimen of his mode of administering justice which induced Hon. W. A. Hutchins to locate in Portsmouth.

In 1839, there were four school districts in Wayne Township. The budget was $1,225.97.

In 1840, George H. Gharky and Thomas Burt were elected Constables. They refused to serve and were fined $2.00 each. J. V. Robinson was one of the trustees elected at this election.

In 1841, the Budget was $717.66.

In 1842, Robert Montgomery, Wilson Gates and L. C. Goff were elected Trustees. Joseph W. Glidden was elected Supervisor and John Armstrong, As-essor. John P. Terry and Cornelius McCoy were elected Fence Viewers. The latter were elected simply to remind them they should honor the lowest office in the land.

In 1843, Cornelius McCoy was elected Justice of the Peace for the first time. This was the beginning of his long career in that office. He was enamoured of the office and was a candidate for it at all times.

In 1845, the budget was $901.61. In this year William Kendall was elected Justice of the Peace for the Township and John L. Ward and Thomas Kendall, two of the trustees.

In 1846, Cornelius McCoy was re-elected a Justice of the Peace. In this year there were three Assessors elected in Portsmouth for three wards, James Lodwick, Washington Kinney and Isaac Kirby.

In 1847, the budget was $1,092.11. There were 358 men of military age in the Township.

In 1848, the township election took two days Cornelius McCoy again secured the place of Justice of the Peace.

In 1850, the budget was 573.96. John L. Ward, S. S. Fuller and R. B. Alford were elected Trustees. Conrad Overturf was Assessor and Wash White and Giles Gilbert, Jr., were elected Constables.

In 1851, the budget was $1,353.56.

In 1855, Moses Thompson was elected Justice of the Peace. On July 18, 1855, Cornelius McCoy was elected a Justice of the Peace at a special election.

In 1858, Wm. H. Raynor was elected Treasurer and Henry Hope, Clerk. The latter resigned June 26, 1858.

As Portsmouth had become a City in 1851 and had about absorbed Wayne Township, the latter's affairs became uninteresting. Fernando C. Searl was elected a Justice of the Peace October 19, 1859. He resigned February 4, 1861, to accept the Probate Judge's office. On April 6, 1868, all of Wayne Township was annexed to the City of Portsmouth by a vote of 1,370 for, to 20 against.

ACTS OF INCORPORATION.

The town plat of Portsmouth was made by Major Henry Massie in April, 1803. He was the original proprietor of the entire town site, that is, the land was patented to him by the Government; but he had purchased entries made by others, William Lawson, Nathaniel Willis, Jeremiah McClain and Gen. Thomas Parker, who had made entries of portions of the site of Portsmouth before Massie, but who had not carried their titles into patent before they sold out to Massie. It is said that the name of the town was given it by Massie at the request of Captain Josiah Shackford, who was on the ground when Massie made his purchase. He requested Massie to name it for Portsmouth, N. H., and promised in case Massie did, he would help build up the town. Massie accepted his proposition and gave it the name. Massie had a great deal of difficulty to make his town go. It was a mere locality until the 1st of March, 1815. He aimed to sell the land in bulk, and the outlots adjoining at $10.00 per acre, and then complained that the sale was slow at that.

Dec. 29, 1814, the Legislature passed an act to incorporate the Town of Portsmouth in the County of Scioto. The taking effect of this act was postponed until the 1st of March, 1815. It contained 14 Sections. Section 2, provided that the white male free-holders and house-keepers should meet on the second Monday of March, and choose nine persons as President, Recorder and Common Councilmen of the town. The nine elected were to choose among themselves a President, a Recorder and Treasurer, and three were to retire each year, and three to be elected each year. Section 3, gave the nine Councilmen corporate succession, and all of them were required to take an oath of office. Section 5, provided that they should appoint an Assessor, a Town Marshal, and a Clerk of the Market, and such other officers as they might deem necessary, and they might fine persons refusing to accept offices. Section 6, gave the Council the right to lay a tax, but no tax on real property was to be over one per cent on its value. This provision unhappily has not survived until the present time. Section 7, gave the Council power to erect wharves to make laws and ordinances, but they were to pass no laws subjecting hogs, cattle or sheep, not belonging to the town, to be abused therein or sold for coming into the corporation. No person was to be imprisoned over 24 hours. This liberal provision has not survived. Section 8, made the Town Marshal collector of the town taxes, and gave him authority to sell lands for non-payment. Section 10, provided that anyone aggrieved at the action of the Town Council could appear to the Court of Common Pleas, but no such appeal was ever heard of. Section 11, required an annual election to be held on the second Monday in March each year between ten in the morning and four in the afternoon. Section 14, gave the use of the County jail to the corporation. This law was amended on January 23, 1823. Section 1 of the amendatory law gave the President of Council the powers of a Justice of the Peace. Section 2 conferred the power to pass ordinances, etc., but excepted the country cattle, hogs and sheep from the jurisdiction of the town. Evidently the Legislature feared that the town authorities wanted to confiscate the cattle, hogs and sheep of the country people. Section 4 provided for an appeal from the decision of the members of the Council to the Court of Common Pleas. Section 5 required every able bodied male and house-holder or land-holder to work the roads two days, and authorized a tax on dogs and other property.

In March, 1838, the original act to incorporate the town was amended by an act of 23 Sections. Section 2 provided for the election of the Mayor on the second Monday of March, 1838, and prescribed his duties. His term was two years. Section 3 provided for the election of the Town Marshal for one year, and the Town Treasurer for two years. Section 5 provided for the President of the Town Council also a Recorder and Town Clerk. Section 8 provided for licensing taverns, coffee houses, and ferries across the Scioto and Ohio rivers. Section 9, provides for three wards and each ward was to elect three councilmen. Section 10 provided for authority for the town to borrow $100,000 at not over 7 per cent, and to borrow $10,000 without public vote. Section 11 required six weeks newspaper notice of improving the property of non-residents. Section 12 provided for lighting the town. Section 13 provided for vacancies in office. Section 14 provided for Common Schools. Section 15 provided for purchasing sites for a school house in each district. Section 16 provided for taxation, for school trustees and management. On May 4, 1838, three wards were established, and an ordinance June 19, 1838, provided for a street commissioner. The ordinance of September 21, 1838, provided for three school districts.

TOWN COUNCIL JOURNAL—1815-1835.

The first Journal of the Common Council of the Town of Portsmouth, is found in an old book, not paged, but containing about 150 pages, not ruled, and yellow with age. It opens the "Journal" with the proceedings of the President and Common Council of the Town of Portsmouth.

The first meeting was held at the Court House March 15, 1815. Thomas Waller, Nathan Glover, John Brown, David Gharky, Samuel B. Burt, William Huston, William Kendall, Nathan K. Clough and Josiah Shackford, nine in all were the first City Fathers. They organized by electing Thomas Waller, President, Nathan K. Clough, Recorder and David Gharky, Treasurer. They drew lots for terms, and Thomas Waller, Josiah Shackford and Nathan Glover drew the one year term. John Brown, William Huston and David Gharky drew the two year term. Samuel B. Burt, William Kendall and Nathan K. Clough were appointed a committee to draft rules. William Swords was elected Marshal. They adjourned until May 1, 1815. At that time, William Kendall and Samuel B. Burt were appointed a Committee to bring in a bill on executions. David Gharky and Nathan Glover were appointed a committee to levy a corporation tax. Samuel B. Burt and Josiah Shackford were appointed a committee to bring in a bill to tax shows. They adjourned until the next day at the house of Henry Sheeley. On that date, they passed an ordinance in regard to streets, stud horses, indecent conduct of boatmen and others, to regulate the objects of taxation, creating the office of Supervisor, in regard to the duties of Marshal and regulating shows. The Council met the third day and finished up their business in passing ordinances, regulating taxation, executions and removing nuisances. A bill was ordered brought in for draining non-residents' lots, and the Council then adjourned until the second Monday in June. Two orders were issued at this meeting. It was agreed that all orders should be signed by the President and Recorder. There was no meeting in June; but in July the Council met and resolved to build a school house. On July 8, at a meeting, N. K. Clough was allowed $2.00 for copying laws, and Henry Sheeley $2.50 for the use of his house. On the same date, William Kendall and William Huston were ordered to contract with Samuel B. Burt for a school house.

July 14, 1815, the Council met and resolved to manage the school and school lands; and at this time, Council also resolved to build a Market House.

July 28, 1815, at 9 o'clock in the morning the Council met at the house of Henry Sheeley, but adjourned until the 5th day of August at 2 P. M., without doing any business. Leases were ordered made of the school lots in order to raise money to build the school house. John Brown and Nathan K. Clough were appointed a committee to lease school lands. The contract was made with John Brown for the Market House.

August 11, 1815, they met at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, but it does not appear what they did.

On Monday, September 11, 1815, a committee was appointed to bring in a bill in regard to keeping dogs, also a bill respecting fires. The tax question seemed very important at that time, for on the 10th of November, 1815, the committee on the keeping of dogs, asked for more time and for another member of the committee, making three, which request was granted.

December 29, 1815, John Young was elected in place of Nathan Glover, who had removed, and several bills were introduced, read and passed the next meeting.

January 5, 1816, an ordinance to prevent the keeping of dogs was passed also the ordinances in respect to the streets, to prevent making fires in the streets, in regard to issuing bills. The Council then adjourned until the 19th of January, 1816, to the house of John Brown. It does not appear what was done at this meeting.

February 16, 1816, it was resolved to push the building of the Market House. Josiah Shackford and John Young were appointed a committee to bring in a bill regulating the public well.

March 1, 1816, David Jones was allowed $35.00 balance, for building the Market House. This was the lower Market House.

March 15, 1816, Thomas Waller, John R. Turner, William Lodwick, came in as the new Councilmen. Thomas Waller was elected President; John Thornton, Supervisor; and Jacob Moore, Marshal. An ordinance was passed to drain the slough. This was Third street from Chillicothe to the west end of the street.

May 1, 1816, Council met at the house of John Brown, William Huston's seat was declared vacant because he failed to attend, and Philip Moore was elected in his place. On the same date, Thomas Waller was appointed Town Surveyor, the first one. This was the beginning of the office of City Civil Engineer. A bill for the surveying of lumber was ordered to be brought in by a committee appointed for that purpose, also a bill to regulate Markets.

May 10, 1816, Ezra Osborn was allowed $4.00 for assessing the property in Portsmouth. An ordinance for the measuring of lumber was made a law, and the Town bought a plow and scraper. Usually a special committee was appointed to bring in each bill and all were introduced as reports. An ordinance was passed to prevent the improper use of water from the public wells, and also creating a Town Supervisor. John Young was appointed Surveyor of lumber. Samuel Wilson was allowed $63.00 in balance for building the market house.

June 5, 1835, a bier was ordered for the public graveyard.

Aug. 5, 1835, licenses were issued to R. Lloyd to keep a grocery and sell liquors.

Sept. 4, 1835, there was a lease made Thomas G. Gaylord, and terms prescribed for 30 years.

Dec. 4, 1835, a Committee was appointed in regard to the termination of the Ohio Canal; Isaac Noel, C. A. M. Damarin and M. B. Ross.

TOWN ORDINANCES.

Among the old publications of city laws which have survived is a copy of the laws of Incorporation and Ordinances of the town of Portsmouth. It was published in 1829 by the authority of the Council.

On May 12, 1823, an ordinance was passed authorizing the President of the Council to call extra or special meetings. Any member not attending was to be fined $1.00. Committees neglecting or refusing to report were to be dismissed.

On the same date, an ordinance was passed defining the duties of Town Marshal. He was to attend all meetings of the Council and be at the President's office during all trials, to collect all fines, etc., and to be fined not more than $20.00 and not less than $1.00 for any neglect of official duty.

It seems that in the dawn of Portsmouth, boatmen were a source of trouble to the town. An ordinance was passed, May 11, 1829, to prevent indecent conduct of Boatmen. Misconduct on their part was to be punished by a fine of $2.00 to $10.00. Any person, over ten years of age, divesting themselves of clothing to go in bathing, inside the Corporation, was to be fined from $1.00 to $10.00. On May 19, 1823, an ordinance was passed to prevent swine from running at large. Ducks, geese, game, or dung hill fowls were to be kept up from April 1 to August 31. Evidently the townsmen believed in gardens and proposed to protect them.

The fathers evidently looked after Showmen.

On May 11, 1829, an ordinance was passed requiring a show license of $5.00 to $26.00. The fine for showing without license was $75.00, but theatrical performances by citizens of the town for their own amusement were to be free. On May 11, 1829, an ordinance was passed forbidding the keeping of any female dog in the town, except by butchers. This was special legislation with a vengeance. The penalty was $5.00 every twenty-four hours if such animal was kept. Why the butchers were so privileged does not now appear.

August 13, 1824, an ordinance to create Health Officers was passed. There were three persons, and they were to inspect the streets and alleys once a week from April 1 to October 1, and as much oftener as they thought fit. Each Health Officer was to be sworn and each person who was appointed such and refused to serve was to pay $5.00 fine. Their duties were otherwise such as are now performed by the Sanitary Police.

May 11, 1829, an ordinance was passed for the protection of the public wells. The water from them was not to be used for washing clothes, or watering horses or cattle.

On the same date, an ordinance was passed regulating the Market in the town of Portsmouth. Wednesday and Saturday were Market days. Daylight to 10 a. m. were Market hours. The Clerk of the Market was to ring a bell at the opening and closing. Articles of marketing were not to be sold during market hours at any place in the town outside of market, under a penalty of $.50 to $2.00. Buyers of marketing, outside of market, during market hours, were to be fined $1.00 to $5.00. Hence, it was a greater offense to buy than to sell. The Clerk of the Market was to furnish measures and weights, and to use them in case of dispute. Butcher's stalls were rented at $8.00 per year, $6.00 for six months, or 50 cents per market day; and no one was allowed to sell fresh meat in the market except from a butcher stall. An ordinance in relation to nuisances was passed May 11, 1829. Slaughter houses were forbidden in the town. Tan yards were required to observe certain regulations, and throwing refuse on the streets and alleys was forbidden. The streets and alleys were protected by an ordinance of May 11, 1829. Racing in the streets was forbidden. Driving faster than a walk or trot was forbidden. Allowing a team to run off was a fine of $1.00 to $10.00. Shooting at a mark or discharging firearms was an offense. Fires in the streets of any kind were forbidden. Brick or lime kilns were forbidden in the town and to ride or drive a horse on a pavement was a fine of 20c to $1.00. The Fathers were particular as to their eating and drinking. They had an Inspector of Domestic Spirits and of Flour. He was appointed by the Council and sworn. The ordinance was passed May 18, 1829, and the Inspector was paid for by fees. The selling of liquors and flour without inspection was not penal.

An ordinance of May 18, 1829, created the office of Supervisor. There were to be two or more appointed by the Council annually. They were to be sworn and to be fined $5.00 each if they refused to serve. They were to be paid in April each year for the year past. They were to require all the men above 21 to work the streets. Lot owners were compelled to fill up or drain their lots. If they failed to do so, the Supervisors could have it done.

An ordinance of date May 18, 1829, created the office of Wood Measurer. He was paid by fees, but it was not obligatory on parties to call him.

On May 18, 1829, Council passed an ordinance designating the objects of taxation. All property and dogs were declared the objects of taxation, but all mills, all woolen and cotton manufactures and all manufactures of iron or glass were exempted from taxation. Horses and cattle were separately taxed. The property tax on land and mercantile capital was one-fourth of one percent. Horses were taxed at 15 cents each, cattle at 5 cents each, dogs at 25 cents each.

The Town Recorder made out the tax duplicates and gave them to the Town Marshal.

On May 18, 1829, the Council passed an ordinance in regard to pavements. Pavements on Front street were to be 12 feet wide. The other side walks were 10 feet wide. Alley sidewalks were 2½ feet wide. Projecting steps and cellar doors in the pavement were regulated. Any one paving his own side could have one-fourth of the cost refunded by the city.

The foregoing comprised the publication of 1829. In the publication of the ordinances in 1838, the Committee on Claims demands attention. There were three in number elected by the Council. They met once a month. They audited all accounts, and had a general supervision of the city finances. They were to see to it that all claims due the City were collected. They prepared the budget each year. They allowed the per diems to Councilmen, and were paid $1.00 per day each for their services. A Coffee House ordinance was passed, May 4, 1838. It included groceries, and nearly all groceries at that time sold liquors. Twelve householders had to recommend the license. Notice of the application had to be published. A license cost $50.00, Coffee Houses could not open on Sundays and were required to keep order on other days and could not sell to minors.

On May 4, 1838, the names of the streets were changed by ordinance. Water street was changed to Front, Front street was changed to Second, Second to Third, Third to Fourth, and Fourth to Fifth, and so on till Ninth street. East street to Court, First East to Washington, Second East to Chillicothe, West Street was changed to Jefferson, First West to Madison, and Second West to Massie street. Scioto and Market streets remained unchanged. The alleys were also named but it is not worth while to mention them. The publications of 1838 and 1844 contained the usual and necessary ordinances, and only peculiar features will be noticed.

There was an ordinance to prevent indecent conduct, passed July 14, 1838. An ordinance to establish a general system of wharfrage was passed July 21, 1838. Steamboats under 200 tons were to pay $2.00 for a landing, and those over, $3.00 per landing, except regular packets which might pay $1.00 per landing. Canal boats paid 50 cents. Barges paid 50 cents, except boats loaded with firewood. Rafts paid 25 cents per 1,000 feet, and rafts of logs 12½ cents per log. An ordinance passed August 17, 1838, for preventing and extinguishing fires shows that there were two Volunteer Fire Companies in Portsmouth, the Fire Dispatch Engine and Neptune Hose Companies. There were two Fire Wardens in each ward, appointed by the Council yearly. Their duties were in the nature of Inspectors for the prevention of fires. The building of hearths and flues was regulated by this ordinance.

An ordinance of September 21, 1838, divided the town of Portsmouth into three school districts, according to the three wards then in existence, in each of which a School Trustee was elected annually on the third Friday of September. The Markets were regulated by an ordinance of October 19, 1838. Markets were held Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays from daylight till 9 a. m., from September to April and the remainder of the year on the same mornings, but closed at 8 a. m. Only white persons were allowed to rent Market stalls.

Cuffee was not yet recognized as a man and brother. The Market ordinance in other respects was like the original one first passed and which this superseded. Dogs were forbidden in the Market.

August 17, 1838, was the date of a ferry ordinance. Ferries were required to be licensed by the Council, which fixed ferry rates, and the ferry was required to be kept in operation from daylight until dark. The license was to be annual. The rates were high, one horse vehicle 50 cents, two to four horses 75 cents, four or more horses $1.00. A riding or led horse was 25 cents and a foot passenger 10 cents. These rates were for crossing the Ohio river. The ferry rates for the Scioto were one-half of the foregoing.

On July 5, 1839, the Council passed a Savage Dog ordinance. Each person was allowed to keep one dog by paying a tax of $1.00. If he or she wanted to keep a second dog as company for the first, the cruel hearted Councilmen required an annual tax of $5.00, and to keep a female dog was $8.00.

The Marshal was charged with the collection of the tax and he found it a very important measure. The people of Portsmouth were never opposed to dogs, except theoretically. This dog ordinance was never enforced to any extent, and neither has any before or since.

The fathers were very much opposed to horse racing, at least within the limits of the town. On the 3rd of July, 1840, an ordinance was passed to prevent horse racing within the limits of the town of Portsmouth, and no race track or course could be established within the town or run upon any course within the town or in any part of the town. The penalty was a forfeiture $.25 to $1.00 for each offense.

On the 6th of May, 1841, Council passed an ordinance regulating taverns. The sale of liquors of any kind to minors was forbidden to any taverns and sales on Sunday. Games were also forbidden at the taverns, except athletic exercises. Keepers of Coffee Houses or taverns were forbidden to sell liquors to be drunk, which were sold in a less quantity than one quart.

On the 10th of October, 1842, by a proper ordinance, canal boats were freed from wharfage.

On October 14, 1842, a new ordinance was passed as to ferries, and the rates of ferriage were changed, 5 cents for foot passengers, 13 cents for horse and rider. One horse conveyance 20 cents and up to four horses was 30 cents. More than four or more horses was 50 cents. The ferriage across the Scioto was 3 cents, for a person and 5 cents for a horse and rider. For led animals 5 cents each, 10 cents for one horse conveyance, 15 cents for two, four horses or more 25 cents.

By an ordinance passed March 15, 1844, horses and cattle and hogs were forbidden to run at large in the City of Portsmouth, and the Coffee House ordinance was repealed and re-enacted.

April 5, 1845, the rates for keeping Coffee Houses were, below Market street, $50.00, between Market and Madison $60.00, Madison and Jefferson $75.00, Jefferson and Court $100.00, between Court and Washington streets $75.00, between Washington and the east limits of the town, $50.00. All games and Sunday selling were forbidden, as well as selling to minors.

April 17, 1845, an ordinance was passed for the appointment of Town Guards and night watch. There was a Town Guard in each ward. He was sworn to support the Constitution of the United States and the State of Ohio and faithfully perform the duties of his office. The Town Guards were required to go through the town at night and notice whether the night watchmen performed their duties or not. They were Inspectors of the Police with Police powers.

On the 1st of May, 1846, Council passed an ordinance licensing hackney coaches, wagons, carts, drays and vehicles. The hackney coaches, $3.00; drays or carts, $5.00 each; two or four horse wagon $2.00; every four wheeled vehicle $2.00. Licenses were issued on the first day of June for the year.

RESIDENTS OF PORTSMOUTH, 1819-1821.

This was made out by the late John G. Peebles, about the year 1892, to accompany a map prepared by him, based on the plat prepared by Henry Massie, in June, 1807. When Henry Massie made his first plat in 1803, he calculated that the town would extend back as far north as Fifth street and as far east as Chillicothe street, but June, 1807, his hopes were blasted, and he vacated his former plat, from the rear of the lots fronting on the north side of Second street back to Fifth street and in the place of which in-lots, made out-lots of about three acres each. At that time, there were practically but two streets in Portsmouth. Front street which was then called Water street and Back street now called Second. Where Third street now is was "a swail" and all back of that was woods, and east of Chillicothe was woods.

This article of Mr. Peebles should be used with reference to his map. Each building is marked with a black square and where there is a well it is marked with a black dot.

In-lot, No. 280, lies on the west side of Scioto street, between Front and Second streets. It had a blacksmith shop which was owned and operated by Richard McDougal, a brother of Mrs. Thomas Morgan.

In-lots, Nos. 281, 282, 283 and 284, were owned by David Gharky. Lot 284 of these was used as his residence and was convenient to the ferry which he maintained across the Scioto at this point. His upper ferry was at the north end of Scioto street. The place of his lower ferry is now in the channel of the Scioto river where it meets the Ohio. There stood a big sycamore tree which was hollow and used by the boys for shelter in times of storm and cold weather.

In-lot, No. 279, on the southwest corner of Second and Scioto streets, was a two story log house built by Uriah Barber. It was the original house used by John Brown, Sr. It was used by Patrick Timmonds, who had a son, Andrew whose principal occupation was fishing and street promenading.

In-lot, No. 274, which adjoined 279 on the east, was occupied by John Brown, Jr., and used by him as a boarding house. He was married at that time but had no children though a number were born afterwards.

In-lot, No. 273, adjoining John Brown, Jr., was occupied by Elijah Glover who kept a boarding house. His wife was a sister of William and Samuel G. Jones. He had a family of eight children, seven boys and one girl. Mr. Glover at that time owned lot 188 on the southeast corner of Jefferson and Front streets, on which he was building a house for a hotel.

In-lot, No. 273, also had a house which was occupied by William Byers, a baker.

In-lot, No. 267, next east of 273, had a row of long one story buildings, occupied by Samuel Gunn, the cooper, of whom there is a separate sketch in the book.

In-lot, No. 259, which was on the southeast corner of Massie and Front streets, had a two story brick house, occupied by a man by the name of Henry Core, son-in-law of Col. John McDonald, who kept a tavern. This tavern was sold to John Peebles, in April, 1819, and he kept a hotel there until the Glover building was finished on lot 188. Mr. Peebles moved to the building on lot 188 in 1820.

In-lot, No. 258, on the southwest corner of Massie and Front streets, had a small brick store house on the corner, which was occupied by William Dailey as a mercantile store. On the east part of the same lot was a two story log house which he used as a residence. His daughter Mary, married Samuel M. Tracy.

In-lot, No. 249, next east of 258, had a house on the east side, which was occupied by Doctor Thomas Hersey, who had a specialty in his practice. It was curing the itch and he made and sold an itch ointment.

In-lot, No. 248, next east of 249, was occupied by Henry Sheeley, a teamster, who hauled goods up and down the river bank on a sled. He was the step-father of Moses Gregory.

In-lot, No. 239, next east of 248, was used by Jacob Noel as a residence and hatter shop. His brother David Noel was one of his apprentices and so was Azel Glover. On the same lot was a small cabin in which Cornelius McCoy kept a tailor shop. Jacob Leonard learned the trade under him.

In-lot, No. 238, was used by John Peebles for the manufacture of cut nails. The east side of this lot had a small frame house, in which Marcus Bosworth resided. He was a brickmaker and had a brickyard in out lot No. 4, as shown on the map. He was an uncle of Mark B. Wells, who was named for him.

In-lot, No. 229, on the southeast corner of Jefferson and Front streets, was occupied by Hugh Cook as a residence.

In-lot, No. 228, is on the southwest corner of Second and Jefferson streets. William Lodwick had a store on this corner with a ware house and stable. It was the largest house in the lower valley of the Scioto. He married Eliza, a daughter of Benjamin Wood. He had as clerks, his brother James Lodwick and William Wood and Robert Wood, his brother-in-law. He had a residence on the same lot, which also contained a frame house in which Samuel Tracy and Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead had their offices.

In-lot, No. 217, "Old Smoking Johnnie Smith" had a cabinet maker's shop here. On the east part of the lot, Peter Kehoe, father of Murtaugh, had a shoe maker shop, in which Thomas Burt, father of William, learned his trade.

In-lot, No. 202, had a one story building in which Allen Moore kept a general retail store.

In-lot, No. 189, had a brick house, the brick from which it was built was brought from Maysville. It was built by Jacob Clingman but occupied by Daniel Corwin as a residence. On the remainder of the lot, Corwin had a retail dry goods and grocery store. He was married twice, his wives were sisters of James Hammitt. He had a bakery back of his brick house, conducted by William Burt, to whom Robert Montgomery was an apprentice. On the rear of the lot was a soap and candle factory, conducted by a man by the name of Cairns. He was an old bachelor, intimate with Martin Funk, who called him the "Soap Biler."

In-lot, No. 175, had a small frame building in which Peter Cunningham had a shoe shop.

In-lot, No. 188, was on the southeast corner of Jefferson and Front streets and had a house built and furnished by Elijah Glover for a hotel. John Peebles occupied it as such from 1820. He opened the Portsmouth Hotel there and conducted it until 1830.

In-lot, No. 174, had a small one story frame house, where David Knight Cady moved his school. The school had previously been conducted in Samuel Gunn's house on lot No. 267.

In-lot, No. 161, was east of 174 and had a large two story house owned by Joseph Waddle, in which was kept a dry goods store. He had an adopted daughter, Anna Boline, who married Thomas McConnell.

In-lot, No. 160, had a two story frame house occupied by William Kendall in which he kept a dry goods and grocery store. In the second story was the Commercial Bank of Scioto, of which Thomas Waller was President and Jacob Clingman, was cashier. On the east side of the lot, was a one story frame house in which Charles Hopkins conducted the Portsmouth Gazette, and a man by the name of De Carteret established a book store and bindery.

In-lot, No. 145, is now occupied and covered by the present Biggs House. On the west side of this lot, John Thornton built a two story log house and the building extended to the rear end of the lot. In that he conducted a carding machine and fulling mill. He had Seymore Pixley as a Manager and John Lancaster and Southey Copes as helpers. Afterwards Seymore Pixley went to Wheelersburg and worked in the Young's factory. On this same in-lot 145, was a dry goods store. Opposite this same in-lot in the center of Market street stood the court house, about a hundred feet south of it was a public well, thirty feet deep.

In-lot, No. 1, was on the southeast corner of Front and Market streets and is known as the McDowell corner. On this lot, John Smith had a small log house about where the Portsmouth National Bank stands. He was the father of Charles S. Luke P. N. and Joseph W. Smith. In 1820, he built a large three story brick house on the corner to be used as a hotel. He died before the house was completed. The house was completed by Abraham Hall and James Marsh. On this same lot was a small brick house built by Aaron Kinney, for his son-in-law and was used as a residence.

In-lot, No. 16, adjoined No. 1, on the east. Jacob Offner lived in a small frame house on the east part of the lot where Reed & Jordan now have a store. Some time afterwards, he built a two story brick on the west side of the lot and used it as a residence, until after his wife died.

In-lot, No. 17, was on Front street just east of the first alley above Market and was the residence of Captain Josiah Shackford.

In-lot, No. 32, east of Shackford's lot was owned by Johnson Lloyd, a hatter. He had his hat shop on the same lot and his shop and residence were both built of logs.

In-lot, No. 33, next east of in-lot No. 32, had a large two story house built by Dr. James B. Prescott, and used by Nathaniel Head as a hotel. The sign was a big tin ball. In the same lot Alexander Caldwell had a residence. The Prescott House was the most noted in the city, it had in front of it a large elm tree. Around it was the place for the militia to meet. In 1823, John Peebles removed from the Glover House to the Prescott House and kept it until 1830 as a hotel. In this hotel Dr. Richard Peebles lost his left eye, in 1827.

In-lot, No. 49, was on the southeast corner of Court and Front streets and had a two-story house built by the father of John and Samuel McConnell, in which John Hamilton kept a hotel and boarding house.

In-lot, No. 65, east of the first alley east of Court street was occupied by William Huston and he built his log cabin on this lot. His wife was a great weaver. His three daughters were married respectively to Uriah White, Jacob Anderson and Silas W. Cole. His sons were James Marcus, John, Samuel J., Uriah and Sidney.

In-lot, No. 80, adjoining No. 65, was the original residence of Dr. Thomas Waller in the city.

In-lot, No. 96, on the southeast corner of Washington and Front streets was owned by Sanders Darby, he also owned No. 95 north of it. He had a two story log house on each. On the one fronting on Front street, he used to make boat poles and oars for keel boats, and on lot No. 95, now occupied by the Gilbert Grocery Co., he resided. He also owned lot No. 94, where Anderson's store now is.

In-lot, No. 113, was the residence of John R. Turner, an account of which will be found in his sketch.

In-lot, No. 128, east of 113, was occupied by John Noel, who married Amanda Hammitt. A sketch of John Noel is found herein.

In-lot, No. 129, east of 128, was occupied by Thomas Morgan, who married Miss McDougall.

In-lot, No. 144, which was on the southeast corner of Second and Front was occupied by Uriah White, who had a frame house. His wife was Mary Huston, to whom he was married July 8, 1808. He had four children, two sons and one daughter. One of his daughters married John Butt, a printer who worked in the Western Times office. His sons were Jefferson and Israel. He had a blacksmith shop on in-lot No. 67, on the north side of Second street between Court and Washington.

In-lot, No. 114, is the George O. Newman residence. Eli Kelsey lived here and had a wife and four children. His daughter Mary Jane married Richard C. Slaughter, a clerk for J. V. Robinson. His sons were Fitch, Edson and Eli B. Kelsey.

In-lot, No. 111, where Mrs. Ann Reed now resides, was a small log cabin where Jacob Moore lived.

In-lot, No. 98, was directly opposite the Peebles residence, occupied by Robert Scott, a hatter.

In-lot, No. 95, was occupied by Sanders Darby.

In-lot, No. 82, on Second street, now occupied by the Peebles and Hamilton Reading Room, was occupied by the Rev. Stephen Lindsley, pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

In-lot, No. 79, is the one on which is situated the building of C. P. Tracy, on the east side was a shop occupied by Levi J. McDowell as a wheel wright in which Samuel Huston learned his trade. On the west part of this lot Samuel J. McCloud and H. H. Parker had a wagon-maker's shop and paint shop. On part of lot No. 66, was Wilson Gates' residence. He married Elizabeth Kinney on November 30, 1820.

In-lot, No. 63, where stands the Daehler Furniture Co. had a two story house built by Elijah McInteer, first Cashier of the Commercial Bank. He died on the 21st of August, 1827, aged fifty-eight, and was buried in the Funk Cemetery. He was never married. This residence was also occupied by the family of Ruloff Whitney, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this book.

In-lot, No. 63, on the west half of this lot resided Judge Ezra Osborn and wife.

In-lot, No. 50, which is where John M. Stockham now conducts his business as feed store, lived Mrs. Tomlinson, the mother of Jacob, George W. and John Clingman and Mrs. Aaron Kinney.

In-lot, No. 47, was unoccupied between 1819 and 1821. On this corner the Elk Building stands.

In-lot, No. 34, next west was a small frame house in which James Abbott lived. He built where John Neill resides on the corner of Third and Market and sold it to Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead in 1823. On part of this same lot was kept a school by James G. Hamlin, a brother of Hannibal G. Hamlin. He was the second school teacher of Mr. John G. Peebles. He studied medicine with Dr. Hempstead and died in Gallipolis, on August 4, 1844.

In-lot, No. 31, is the Brodbeck property, now occupied by Storck & Hopkins. It was occupied by different persons. One Joseph Johnson, a barber and a dog trainer, held forth there. He usually performed with his dogs when court was in session for the pleasure of the judges. On the west half of this lot was a one story brick house, owned and occupied by Charles Rand. He was the finest skater in the town of Portsmouth and could write his name on the ice. He removed to Cincinnati, Ohio.

In-lot, No. 18, where the Gerlach property now is, had a brick and wooden house, occupied by Arnold Sargeant.

In-lots, Nos. 2 and 15, where the Hotel Washington now stands, were unoccupied.

In-lot, No. 159, was a building just east of Lynn's livery stable.

In-lot, No. 162, where Lynn's stable now stands, was a swamp, which had a large Elm growing in it, which is marked on Mr. Peebles' map. There was a pond where Dice's Carriage Factory now stands, it was used by all the neighbors for watering their stock and was alive with mussel shells.

In-lot, No. 176, had a shop used by James Lynn as a cabinet maker's shop. He was a brother-in-law of Elijah Glover, Sr., having married a sister of William and Samuel G. Jones. On this lot a school was kept by a man by the name of Brown. Mr. Peebles attended this school.

In-lot, No. 201, on the south side of Second street, west of Jefferson had a two story frame house built by Allen Moore and used as a residence. It was afterwards occupied by Mrs. Montgomery, who kept a boarding house. Her daughter Hettie married George Stevenson. The next occupant was Dr. N. W. Andrews. James L. McVey was married to his daughter Emily there. Dr. Andrews died in that house.

In-lot, No. 215, was used by William Lodwick for a stable in connection with lots 216, in front of it on Front street, and 203 and 204.

In-lot, No. 218, belonged to "Old Smoking Johnnie Smith" and was used as a stable and store house. His dwelling was on lot No. 217 in front.

In-lot, No. 227, on the southeast corner of Madison and Second streets, had a small brick house in which James Salisbury lived after his marriage to Nancy Kehoe.

In-lot, No. 230, on the southwest corner of Madison and Second streets, was a small frame house in which Ezekiel Blue lived and was associated with John Clough in the blacksmith business.

In-lot, No. 237, was a blacksmith's shop and residence occupied by John Clough. He had an apprentice by the name of Uriah Slack, and had the principal blacksmith shop in the town.

In-lot, No. 240, resided Mrs. Elizabeth Leonard, the mother of two sons, Adam and Jacob, and six daughters: Polly, Nancy, Betsy, Margaret, Susan and Sarah. They resided here until 1824. Nancy married Levi Barker; Betsy married Samuel J. Huston. Margaret and Susan married Arthur C. Davis; Sarah married James G. Caldwell.

In-lot, No. 257, on the southeast corner of Madison and Massie, was a cabin in which Nathan Wheeler, the Sheriff of the County lived. On the south part of the same lot was a cabin in which Peter Kehoe, father of Murtaugh Kehoe lived.

In-lot, No. 272, this was a lot which was given by Henry Massie to William Jones, for services in carrying the chain in laying out the town. William liam Jones sold it in 1806, and at the time we are describing the town of Portsmouth, David Gharky and Edward Cranston had a carding machine, which was afterward sold to John and Dan Young and taken to Wheelersburg. Mr. Edward Cranston was interested in it at Wheelersburg. The Youngs sold out their interest and built Franklin Furnace. Pixley married Major Smith's daughter and went to farming. Cranston continued the woolen business until his death.

In-lots, Nos. 269, 271, 276 and 277, on the north side of the street, lying four together, were occupied by John Waddle and Amaziah Davidson. On lot No. 269, they had a large butcher shop, where hogs were butchered and shipped to New Orleans. General Worthington, afterwards Governor, was a large operator in that business and spent several winters in Portsmouth, boarding at the Peebles Hotel. Lots No. 271, 276 and 277 were used to keep the hogs in until butchered. These lots are now in the Scioto river. In this slaughter house, James Davis, uncle of George Davis, cut and quartered the hogs. He received $1.25 a day, which was regarded as extra large compensation.

In-lot, No. 271, was owned by Captain Samuel Gunn, a cooper. He had a large cooper shop. Three of his sons were coopers: Zina, Enos and Bela and he employed three others, Perin Bachelor, Ezekiel Powers and a Scotchman by the name of Burns. He also had two apprentices: J. Smith Folsom and Elias DeLong, a son of the old Jailer. Mr. Gunn manufactured the entire cooorage of the lower end of the Scioto Valley.

In-lot, No. 251, was a small frame house occupied by a widow named Lydia Lewis, whose husband was a butcher.

In-lot, No. 246, was a small house occupied by the widow Slack, who had a son Uriah, a blacksmith who worked with John Clough.

In-lot, No. 241, was a small house occupied by two women by the name of Lewis.

In-lot, No. 236, had a story and a half house in which John Timmonds resided. He married a daughter of Martin Funk. He was a butcher and a teamster. He had four children, Martin, James, Maria and Samuel. Mr. Timmonds was an honest, hard working man, but not a financier. He died leaving his children helpless, with but one old white horse, with which at the suggestion of Mr. Peebles, his son, Martin made a small sled and put a barrel on it, in which he and his brother James conducted the water supply for a number of families, who had no wells. He charged for each barrel a "flip" and with the receipts of the same, the family was raised honorably. At the death of her father, Martin Funk, Mrs. Timmonds' share of the estate made her comfortable for life. Martin Timmonds learned the trade of baking from James Lodwick and Robert Montgomery, and made a fortune.

In-lot, No. 226, on the northeast corner of Madison and Second streets, had a two story frame house built by Eben Abbott, a carpenter. He removed to Cincinnati, at the instance of William Lodwick, in 1824.

In-lot, No. 214, was occupied by a tannery, built by Aaron Kinney. It was situated where the Gas Works are now. Washington Kinney bought it of his father and paid for the lot and tannery out of his profits. Mr. Washington Kinney made quite a sum of money out of the business conducted on this lot.

In-lot, No. 205, was unoccupied.

In-lot, No. 200, was the residence of Samuel G. Jones. He had five children; three sons: Nathan, Samuel and Elijah and two daughters.

In-lot, No. 191, on the northwest corner of Jefferson and Second streets, was a brick house occupied by George Tolston, a tailor, who married a daughter of George Hammitt.

In-lot, No. 186, on the northeast corner of Second and Jefferson streets, had a small brick house, in which Washington Kinney lived after his marriage to Mary Waller, on December 14, 1820. He lived there until 1823, when he built on the same lot a one-story house as a residence and lived there until 1830, when he built the brick house on lot No. 172, in which he died. A sketch of Mr. Kinney will be found in the book.

In-lot, No. 177, was a frame house which was not entirely finished. In it resided the family of William Montgomery. He had a wife and four chilaren, one son Robert and three daughters: Hester, Nancy and Maria. In 1819, Robert's principal accomplishment was fishing. He married Harriet Long in 1827. Hettie married George Stephenson. Nancy and Maria lived to be very old, and never married.

In-lot, No. 163, contained a small one story house, of which Dr. Hempstead was the first occupant. On the east half of the same lot, was a two story frame house, in which Jacob Clingman, Cashier of the Commercial Bank, lived. He had no children. He left Portsmouth under unpleasant circumstances.

In-lot, No. 147, on the northeast corner of Front and Second streets, was given by Henry Massie to the town, and at the time covered by this narrative, was used as a store house for a small six pound cannon, which was kept in a small frame house on this lot.

In-lot, No. 3, on the northeast corner of Second and Market, was given by the County to be used as a Jail, and was used as the Jail lot for fifteen years. Simon DeLong was the Jailer. He was a very muscular man and a butcher by trade. He had a large family of children, three of whom were boys.

In-lot, No. 14, on this lot was a one story frame house, in which John Hatch, Sr., lived. He had three sons: Thomas, John and Calvin, and two daughters. On the east half of this lot was a two story brick house occupied by Nathan K. Clough, a lawyer.

In-lot, No. 19, had two small houses, in one of which a Mr. Brooks lived.

In-lot, No. 30, had a small brick house which stood back some distance from the front, in which James Hammitt lived and had a silversmith and tin shop.

In-lot, No. 35, had a double log house, in which William Oldfield lived.

In-lot, No. 46, on the northeast corner of Court and Second streets, had a small frame house, owned and occupied by Dr. Jacob Offnere as a nail factory, but not used as such very long as the business did not pay. On the same lot were two other buildings, one was used as a blacksmith shop by Wesley Goodwin. In a two story log house on this corner John G. Peebles finished his education under the tuition of Eben Corwin.

In-lot, No. 51, on the west corner of this lot Eben Corwin lived. Also on this lot were two frame houses in one of which, William Shaw lived.

In-lot, No. 62, was occupied by a small frame house in which resided William Jones, the first school teacher of Portsmouth. He had three daughters: Emily, Patience and Mary. Emily married John Hatch. Patience married Dudley Day, and Mary married Daniel McIntire.

In-lots, Nos. 67, 78, 83, 94, 99 and 110, were not occupied at the date covered by this narrative.

In-lot, No. 115, had a two story frame house, in which Benjamin Melcher resided. He did a large shoe business, had journeymen and apprentices, among the latter were John McConnell, Isaac Coriell, Richard and Thomas Lloyd. He was highly respected and well thought of, but was not successful in business.

In-lot, No. 126, had a frame house occupied by Abraham Hall, a brick and stone mason.

In-lot, No. 131, where the Cycle and Seel's buildings stand was occupied by Isaac Evans, a well digger.

Out-lot, No. 27, belonged to Thomas Morgan.

Out-lot, No. 26, belonged to Mrs. Mary McConnell and she resided on it. On this lot was a swamp which furnished all the flag which the coopers needed in making tight barrels.

Out-lot, No. 23, was a brick house built by John Brown, Sr., and used for a hotel. This was where the Post Office now stands.

Out-lot, No. 22, where the Sixth Street Church now stands, was used by John Brown as a horse mill. Peter Weaver, a noted colored man had a residence on this lot.

Out-lot, No. 29, had a cabin occupied by William Degear & Sons, well diggers. They were good customers of the product of Mr. Oldfield's Distillery. In front of Degear's cabin, was a large pond situated on the north side of Gallia street, east of Gay, and between Gay and the High School. There was a pottery on the opposite side of Gallia street, above the High School alley. It was conducted by a Mr. Dennis, who married a daughter of George Hammitt.

He died and his widow married Isaac Barber. They had two children: I. N. Barber and Hannah Amanda, the widow of Washington White.

On the Waller tract of one hundred acres, extending from the first alley crossing Third street, east of Gay, to Union street, and from Eighth street to the Ohio river, there were two cabins, one was south of the Gallipolis Road and used by tenants of the tract.

George Offnere Tract. Of twenty-five acres, which is now the Glover Addition. There was a two story log house in which he resided. His daughter Sarah Jane married Eli Glover.

William Kendall Tract. Of eighty-four acres, as marked on the map. There was a small cabin on Gallia street, where a colored man by the name of Henry Brown lived.

Martin Funk Tract.—Of twenty-five acres, had a small cabin occupied by Jack Funk. He was a fifer in the war of 1812. He had but two tunes in his repertory: "Yankee Doodle" and "Duncan Davy", but these two tunes gave him the position of Fife Major. After holding it awhile, he wanted to resign his commission and was permitted to do so.

A. Kinney Tract.—Of 104 acres, was, at the time of which we write, entirely covered with timber.

Uriah Barber Tract.—was also timber. His son John resided on it and the whole family were keel boat men.

Waller Tract.—Of 100 acres, was mostly heavy timbered. It had a small creek on it which was called Waller's Gut, and was used by the boys as a swimming pond.

Out-lot, No. 49, which is now about the corner of Fourth and Market. There was a two story house, built and occupied by Greenleaf Dole, a son of Mrs. Nabby Dole. The Dr. Hempstead homestead was a part of this out-lot.

Out-lot, No. 14, was owned by John H. Thornton and James March. The north part of it was owned by Thornton and the south part by March. Mr. March was a brickmason, and he sold his part to John McDowell and Fryer. Afterwards it was sold by McDowell to Hugh Cook.

Out-lot, No. 4, was owned by Charles Rand, the north part, and the south part by Samuel Dole and Marcus Bosworth, which was used as a brick-yard. This would be on Market street, about Sixth street.

Out-lots, Nos. 40 and 41, were owned by William Lodwick, and are now the yards of the B. & O. Railroad. There was an extensive swamp, and it was unoccupied for a long time, but was afterwards acquired by the Scioto & Hocking Valley Railroad.

Out-lot, No. 48, was owned by John H. Thornton. On the northeast part of this lot was built what was called Wheeler's Academy. It was sold to the Methodist Church, and was used as a house of worship until they built the Bigelow Church, on Second street, where Hibbs' Hardware store now stands.

The land marked "Old Grave Yard" was used as such until 1829, when the town purchased ground for the beginning of Green Lawn, and the bodies were removed to the new cemetery.

The names of the owners of the other out-lots, and parts of out-lots appear upon them.

The entire front of the town, except that portion in front of 203 and 216, to the river, belonged to Henry Massie. In front of 203 and 216, the river front belonged to William Lodwick, and he had made a grade and wharf as a public landing.

The first public well will be seen in front of lots Nos. 273 and 274.

January 10,—Harriet Stratton, aunt of Chas. Smith, died aged 18 years.

February 1,—Jacob Clingman was married to Susannah Frontair, at Picketon, by Rev. Eskridge Hall.

February 22,—Marcus Bosworth was married to Sarah Dole, by Rev. Stephen Lindsley.

February 18,—Edward Cranston was married to Nabby Cole, by Philip Moore, Esq.

March 4,—A flat boat loaded with missionaries for the Choctaw Nation arrived, among whom were the father and mother of Rev. Augustus Bridwell, who in the year 1842, became the Presbyterian preacher at Pine Grove Furnace. On the following morning, I found a pen knife and the river being high, Sandy dugouts came with the flood, and in my travels along the bank I espied Dennison Shaw in a small dugout. I proposed to give him my knife for the dugout, which he accepted. We both got into it and made our way up the river, to the front of our house, Pig Iron Corner, where we landed at the head of a log raft, above a flat boat. I stepped out on a log and it turned. I went into the river and Robert Montgomery, who was a fisherman, was coming along with his canoe. He grabbed me and gave both Shaw and myself a few spansks in the rear, and pushed my dugout into the stream, thus putting my boating career to an end, with the loss of pen knife and dugout.

April 11,—G. S. B. Hempstead married to Elizabeth Peebles, by Rev. Stephen Lindsley.

"Why man, she is my own,

And I as rich, in having such a jewel,

As twenty seas, if all their sands were pearls,

The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold."

May 27,—A sermon preached by Dan Young, at the house of Thomas B. King, of Kentucky, on the death of Benjamin Mead, of Virginia, who died April 19, 1821. Father of Armstead Mead of Greenup County, Kentucky.

1825.

February 1,—Hannibal G. Hamlin was married to Mary Whitney, daughter of Ruloff Whitney, by William Oldfield, Esquire.

February 27,—The first Methodist Sabbath School was commenced in the Methodist Church, known as Wheeler's Academy on Fourth and Market.

March 1,—Samuel R. Nurse, of French Grant, was married to Phebe Burdick, of this place, by Reuben Wait, Esquire, of Washington Township.

March 25,—The steamboat "Belvidere" made her first trip. Made the trip from Louisville in two days, with ninety tons freight, seventy cabin and one hundred and five deck passengers. She had the largest number of ladies and gentlemen passengers which ever arrived here on a boat bound eastward. She was built at Kendall's Mills, near the mouth of Brush Creek, she was commenced July and launched in December. She was built of clear locust timbers, and had an iron fastened cabin built at Cincinnati, by James and Eben Abbot.

May 8,—John McConnell was married to Sophia Oard, daughter of Joseph Oard, of Washington Township.

May 19,—General La Fayette arrived at Cincinnati, escorted by Governor Desha and a number of other citizens of Kentucky. On Friday 20th at 11 o'clock, a grand procession was formed and marched through the streets to the open plain in the rear of the town, where was erected a grand pavilion, decorated with flowers and evergreens. After the General was seated, and the crowd silenced, the "Marseilles Hymn" was sung, by Mr. Samuel M. Lee.

June 23,—The steamboat "Velocipede" sank on Buffalo Log, below the mouth of Scioto. No lives were lost in transferring the passengers to the shore. $1,000.00 which was in paper and silver, was thrown from the boat to the yawl, fell into the river, but was found afterwards by divers.

June 19,—Harriet Corwin, wife of Eben Corwin, died, aged thirty-three years and twenty-five days.

March 14,—A boat load of pork and lard belonging to John McCoy, of Chillicothe, Ohio, was sunk in the Scioto river, at the cut off, being insured by the Travelers Insurance Co., of New York. J. and W. Peebles, Commission Merchants, were authorized to pay 75 cents for each barrel of pork and 50 cents for each keg of lard. A large proportion of the same was delivered to them. The balance drifted down the river, and was lost or buried in the sand. Strange to tell, about fifty years afterwards, a barrel of this identical pork was found buried in the sand bar, some where near the mouth of the Scioto Mill Race, but the contents were not merchantable.

June 18,—Edward Hamilton, Attorney at Law, hung out his sign as an Attorney at Law. Office two doors west of C. McCoy's Hotel.

July 4,—Thomas Jefferson and John Adams died within a few hours of each other. Mr. Adams aged ninety-one years.

August 15,—Robert, a son of John Noel, was drowned in the Scioto river, a little above Gharky's Ferry, aged nine years.

Aged thirty-five years. He came from Louisville. His horse was kept by us until its keeping and the expenses of his sickness amounted to the value of the horse, which was kept by my brother William. After keeping it for some time, he sold it to Henry Massie, for $100.00. The amount being one of the payments on lot No. 48, of said Massie.

October 19,—Advertisement of Moses Gregory, Sheriff, calling the people as collector to pay their taxes. The taxes were then collected by the Sheriff, there being no Treasurer.

December 2,—The steamboat "Merchant" arrived here, having in tow, an elegant and commodious barge, fitted up as a safety barge, with a cabin the entire length of the barge, and to accomodate one hundred passengers. It was made as an experiment, and commanded by Captain Robert Wallace, father-in-law of John Shillito of Cincinnati, Ohio. It was found that it was inexpedient and difficult to manage in storms and landings, and was abandoned the first trip down.

During the year 1826, Hall & Thomas and S. Nixon & Co., opened stores in Portsmouth, Ohio. The former in Allen Morris' old store house, Damarin's upper store room, and Nixon's in George Clark's store house, corner of Market and Front, where the Biggs House now stands.

July 4, 1827—Had a public dinner, under the Old Elm Tree, furnished by William Peebles. Declaration read by Edward Hamilton and address by Charles Oscar Tracy, in the Presbyterian Church.

March 28, 1829—J. V. Robinson opened his first store in the house formerly occupied by J. P. Noel near corner of Jefferson and Front.

April 4, 1829—David Scott commenced the cabinet business on the lot now owned and occupied by T. M. Lynn as a livery stable.

December 6, 1848—The steamboat "Relief", Captain William F. Davidson, left here for Tomlinson's dam, four miles below Chillicothe, with sixty tons freight and several passengers. She left here at one o'clock P. M. The principal part of the freight was for Messrs. J. R. and C. Brown.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF THE LATE JOHN G. PEEBLES, WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

In order that the life and history of the Peebles family of Portsmouth, Ohio, as to their origin and past history, may be better understood, I have thought proper and it may prove advantageous to give an account of their rise and progress to the present, and in giving an account of this family from my earliest recollections of each and every member of same, in order to give character to same, I may deviate from a close and connected account of the ages, connections and daily lives of each, and connect with it a more particular account of their history after their arrival at Chillicothe, Ohio, together with such memorandums of various births, marriages and deaths, and also of many notices of important matters which occurred during the time which probably may be forgotten by some, and unknown by many of those who are now living here. Having a fond recollection of the past, and having in my possession documentary evidence of what I shall relate and not relying on my own memory exclusively for dates, facts, etc., I will try to give such an account as ought to be considered valuable without egotistical embellishments.

Commencing with the history of my parents and their offspring.—My father, John Peebles, son of William and Elizabeth Peebles, was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, November 20, 1769. My mother, Margaret Rodgers, daughter of Richard and Rachel Rodgers, was born in the same County, May 13, 1777. They were married in said County, by the Rev. Doctor Cooper, November 17, 1795. William Peebles, my grandfather, was wounded in the battle of Long Island or Flat Bush and died of the wound September 5, 1776. The increase of my father's family was as follows: William Peebles was born in Shippensburg, Cumberland County, Pa., on November 16, 1796. Rachel Rodgers Peebles, born same place July 18, 1798. Betsy Peebles, born same place, September 1, 1800. Fanny Denny Peebles, born same place, July 3, 1803 and died November 11, 1804, aged 11 months, 48 days, was buried in Middle-spring Cemetery, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. Jane Frisby Peebles, born same place, February 23, 1806. During the month of May, 1807, my father with his family started from Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, for what was called the far west (Ohio) and came as far as Brownsville, Pennsylvania, in wagons, (bringing with him his sister Jane McCracken,) where he purchased a small flat boat and put all his household goods and family in it and came as far as Pittsburg. Some of the family were sick, so he remained there until they were in a situation to travel. During his stay there, he became acquainted with a man by the name of Andrews, (father of the late Hon. Watt Andrews). A merchant from Mt. Sterling, Kentucky, who had his goods in a flat boat, and my father lashed his boat to Mr. Andrews's boat, and they came to Portsmouth, Ohio, in the forepart of June, 1807, where my father stopped and put his household goods and family in wagons and started for Chillicothe, Ohio, arriving there after three days hard travel.

My father was a cabinet maker by trade and he practised his trade for five years. While here, he bought land now occupied as a cemetery near Paint Creek. Here he built a distillery, which was not a success and later burned down. At this place my brother Richard Rodgers Peebles was born January 10, 1810. After this loss of the distillery, he removed to town and lived in a house on Paint street, across the alley from what was then known as the Fitch tavern, now Valley House. In this house my sister, Margaret Rodgers Peebles was born November 10, 1811. Not being satisfied, but of a restless disposition, he bought a small farm some five or six miles from Chillicothe, Ohio, on Lick Run, which was heavily timbered, it had a large quantity of walnut and cherry timber on it together with an uncertain supply of water in the creek. He built a saw mill and started off to manufacture furniture largely. Not being very successful in this business he concluded to build another distillery, which was not successful and burned down.

Miss Jane McCracken, who came with my father from Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, was not long in Chillicothe, before she married Mr. John McCoy, a prominent merchant. Three of their children: Mrs. Dr. Foulke, Mrs. Dr. Waddle and Judge Samuel F. McCoy are still in Chillicothe and William McCoy and John L. McCoy are in Independence, Missouri.

At this place, I was born November 30, 1813. We did not live long on the farm and my father traded it to Daniel W. Hearn for the house situated on Second street and adjoining (east) the house now owned and occupied by Dr. William Waddle. In this house, my brother, Joseph Scott Peebles was born June 19, 1817. After living in this house for three or four years, he sold it to William Creighton, Sr., and moved into a house on said Second street, east of Paint street, about opposite to the old Bank and Masonic Lodge house, where he lived until he became restless again.

With the persuasion of Doctor McDowell, father of John McDowell, and a man by the name of Haines, who had considerable property in the town of Mount Carmel, Illinois, he was persuaded to pack his household goods to go to Mount Carmel. My mother was not favorably disposed towards the expedition but concluded to leave Chillicothe and go to some place where there would not be so many attractive speculations offered. The Scioto river was then navigable for keel boats with a moderate stage of water. It was decided to put the household goods in a keel boat which was owned by a man by the name of Pangburn and piloted or steered by Caleb Armitage of Scioto County, Ohio.

On Friday morning, April 2, 1819, we left Chillicothe, Ohio, in the keel-boat. Miss Jane Douglas, sister of William H. Douglas, a prominent merchant, came with us to Portsmouth. It was understood by my mother, that, if she were pleased with Portsmouth, they would go no farther. Mr. Francis Campbell and James Culbertson accompanied us as far as Kilgour's Mill. The river was high and the boat went rapidly along. We stopped in the evening at Piketon, laid all night, and were visited by Mr. and Mrs. Fitch who were then living there. They brought a good warm supper to the boat for us. We started early the next morning and made a speedy run, being the first boat that ever passed through the "cut-off", and in passing through it, the steering oar struck a snag, which threw Mr. Armitage overboard; but he was soon on board again and at his position.

We landed at Gharky's lower ferry landing about three o'clock, Saturday afternoon. Shortly after our arrival, we all went up into town to a hotel on the corner of Front and Massie streets, kept by Henry Core. We had not been there long until my father had made an arrangement with Mr. Core to take the hotel on Monday morning. The house was a brick structure, two stories high, with two rooms below and two above, and had a good sized one and one half story house in the rear. The lower story was used as a dining room and kitchen and the upper part was used as a sleeping department. It was occupied by our family until Monday morning.

During the Sabbath, we children stayed in that department all day; and the time was spent principally in learning and saying the Shorter Catechism. Father and mother attended Presbyterian Church in the Court House which was located in the middle of Market street about half way between Front and Back street (now Second street). My father having determined to stay here, presented his and mother's letters to the church. Stephen Lindsley was the pastor. On the next Sabbath, we children attended a Sabbath School which was kept in the middle room of a house owned and occupied by Samuel Gunn. The teachers were Samuel Gunn, James Abbott, Dr. Hersey and Dr. Thos. Waller. Elijah Glover was keeping a Hotel on the same street, a short distance below ours. William Byers was a baker and we obtained our first supply of bread from him.

Our schoolmaster was David Knight Cady, and he kept his school for a short time in one of the rooms of the Gunn mansion and removed later to a small frame house on the lot above where C. McCoy afterwards built a brick house which he turned into a hotel. This school was kept in this house about one year, when he moved into what was called Wheeler's Academy, situated on Thornton's out lot on the extension of Market street. He kept there but a short time and quit keeping school. As there are some still living who went to school in that house under the tutorship of Mr. Cady, and others who will often hear the name of Wheeler's Academy mentioned, I will give a short description of the building taken from an advertisement in the Portsmouth Gazette, August 19, 1820, which says that "the house is as well lighted and well calculated and finished for the convenience of scholars as any where, and large enough to accommodate 150 scholars at a time. It is handsomely situated on Market street, about thirty perches north of the Court House" (which then stood in the middle of Market street, half way between Front and Second street) "adjoining the open fields, embracing the free circulation of air, and retired from the noise and temptations incident to a town, calculated to draw the attention of scholars from their studies; and free also from the dangers to which small scholars are exposed from being near the water of the Ohio river during the intermissions of school."

My father had business capacity but lacked in judgment and skill in selecting and managing outside investments. He was easily led into outside speculations which generally proved unsuccessful, but being of a mechanical turn he delighted in manufacturing enterprises and before he left Chillicothe, he bought from Isaac Cook, the machinery of a nail factory, which had not proved to be a success in Chillicothe, but which he thought could be successfully operated in Portsmouth. He brought with him a man by the name of Thomas Tipton, to operate it. The iron to make the nails had to come from Pittsburg.

The process of making nails then was all done by man power. The product was small and the expense of making them was large, compared with what it is now. The stock used to make them was Juniata Hoop Iron, the width of same was such, that when cut into nail shape it would make the various sizes from 3's to 10's. The Hoop Iron had to be heated and then pushed through a shear worked by hand and reversed so as to make head and point. They did not turn the plate as the feeders do now, but moved the hand that held the Hoop Iron just enough to make the bevel of the nail, having a guide on each side so as to make the bevel and side alike. This was a slow process. The worst operation was to head them which was done in a spring vise operated by the tramp of the foot. The nail was held in the fingers of the nailer and dropped into the vise, having enough outside to make the head and the heading was done by a lick of hammer in the hands of a nailer. It was a drop, a move of the foot and a blow of the hammer, that made a nail; and from this process, the phrase of "hit the nail on the head" originated. The work of a man and machine was about 25 pounds a day and the price of them ranged from 50 to 75 cents per pound. This manufactory was started in a small house that stood just above where the old James Lodwick building stands, but the manufactory did not last long as it was not profitable. This was the first and the last nail factory of that kind in the Ohio Valley.

Portsmouth being the point where all the merchandise sold in the Scioto Valley as far as Columbus was landed, to be hauled or boated up to Chillicothe, Circleville and Columbus, my father was induced to open a commission house for storage, which business was more remunerative than any of his previous operations. There being at that time no warehouses for the storage of goods, we had to use stables and vacant houses for that purpose.

In the spring of 1819, I saw a steamboat, for the first time. The name of it was "Basil Wells," named after a prominent man who lived in Steubenville, Ohio. The boat did not land or come to shore, but anchored out in the stream opposite the Elm Tree. The Captain was afraid of the natives. He came to our Hotel and was received so kindly that he invited our family to come on board and see the boat. None of them had ever seen a steamboat. My father engaged Mr. Gharky to bring his ferry flat around. The mouth of the Scioto was then at Alexandria, and the flat had to come around and go up to the boat. I was small and my feet had an unusual amount of dirt on them, so that the colored Steward, as soon as I set my feet on the boat, picked me up and set me back in the flat. I was deprived of seeing that boat.

We remained in the Core house until the fall of 1820, when we moved into a large frame house which was built during that year and owned by Elijah Glover. This house was situated on the corner of Front and First West Street (now Jefferson), in which house my sister Betsy, was married on the 11th day of April, 1821, to Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead. Margaret Jane Hempstead (now Gaylord), was born in this house, January 22, 1822 and my sister Margaret Rodgers Peebles died in this house, September 27, 1822, and was buried in the graveyard, then situated where the Burgess Iron and Steel Works was afterwards located. Dr. Hempstead was absent from home at the time of the birth of his daughter, attending a course of lectures, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and shortly after his return, he moved into a one-story house on Back street (now Second street) owned by Jacob Clingman. The same house was afterward occupied by Mrs. Wertz. He removed in the spring of 1823, to the Daily House on Front Street, now occupied by Mr. Eberhardt, where on June 18, 1823, Samuel B. Hempstead was born.

On the next day, 19th, the steamboat "Scioto," which was built by William Lodwick and others, superintended by Captain Stephen Butler, made a trial trip to Greenupsburgh, Kentucky, loaded with castings from the Old Steam Furnace, (Shreve & Co.) for Cincinnati, Ohio. My father took my brother Richard and myself along on that trip. On the return of the boat to this place, David K. Cady, and wife moved to Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Cady was clerk of the boat. My sisters, Rachel and Jane went on the boat to visit Mr. and Mrs. William Barr and John F. Keys.

In the early part of 1822, Melancthon Rodgers, a sharp, keen Yankee, came out from Vermont, and was employed as a school teacher, boarding at our house. The younger children: Richard, Margaret, myself and Joseph went to his school. He was our teacher for two or three years, during which time he studied Medicine with Doctor Hempstead, attended a course of Lectures at Cincinnati, and afterwards removed to Cincinnati and became one of the most skillful and prominent dentists.

In the spring of 1823, we moved from the Glover House up to the Prescott house on Front street, which was situated on the alley below First East street (now Court), and in front of the "old elm tree". This Hotel had previously been kept by Nathan Head, "Sign of the Golden Ball". Soon after we moved into the Prescott House in the spring of 1823, James Hamlin, a brother-in-law of Alexander Caldwell, who lived in the east end of the house, (this same house is now owned and the residence of H. Vincent on Sixth street), opened a school in a small one-story frame house situated in the rear of our hotel, on the lot on which the Adams Express office is at present located. In this house James Abbot lived until in 1822, when he built the house situated on the Shackford out lot, which he sold to Doctor Hempstead and is the same afterwards owned and occupied by John Neill. I went to this school for about a year when it was closed, as Mr. Hamlin concluded to study medicine with Doctor Hempstead which he did. He attended a course of lectures at Cincinnati, graduated and settled in Gallipolis, Ohio, where during the year 1824, he died. My next schoolmaster was a Mr. Brown, who kept school in a one story house on Second street, which was the residence of John Hatch, Sr., and was situated about where Mr. Glockner's hardware store now stands. My next school master was the Rev. Joseph Wood, then the Presbyterian preacher, who taught in a small brick house that stood about where E. Miller's store now stands. We frequently had itinerant school teachers who came, and for a short time taught Grammar and writing schools. The first of this class taught a special Grammar class composed of pupils ranking from twelve to twenty-six years old. I was the youngest scholar admitted, on account of the teacher boarding at our house. This school was taught in the then Masonic Lodge, situated in the Smith building (now McDowell Corner) and in the Presbyterian Church, which stood on Second or Back street, on the lot west of the Massie building. The next teacher was a man by the name of Noble, who taught a writing school. His system was what was called the running hand system. He had a large class of pupils, taking in all the young and aged ladies and gentlemen. I was the youngest and Murtaugh Kehoe was the oldest. I was favored on account of the teacher boarding at our hotel.

The years 1822, 1823 and 1824 were termed the sickly years. Fever and ague and all other kinds of fevers prevailed to a large extent and business was exceedingly dull, not much building nor increase of population, but on the other hand, the business of the grave diggers was very prosperous, and the undergrowth of jimson and dog fennel was very luxuriant, so much so, that it was deemed advisable by the physicians that these luxuriant plants be cut down. The Council met and posted an order, that the dog fennel and jimson must be mowed down, which was done, by a colored man by the name of Simon Grass (he had been a slave of Elijah Glover's) who then lived with us as stable boy, etc. The Council also passed an ordinance creating a Board of Health. My father, Jacob Offnere and Eben Corwin were said Board, and they were authorized to drain the town, which had to be done by taking levels, and as there were no spirit levels or theodolites in the town, they had to make a level. My father being a mechanic, he undertook the job and made one that answered the purpose. It was a somewhat crude three legged stand. Across the upright center post was a two inch cross piece of board two inches thick, being in the center so as to vibrate to make a level, and in the upper edge of the cross piece was a groove which was filled with water and when the groove was full of water from end to end, it was supposed to be level. On each end of this cross piece was a piece of tin tacked with holes in them to sight through. My father was engineer and had the pleasure of carrying the instrument. Mr. Corwin was Rodman, and Doctor Offnere projected the movement and carried the material to supply the groove, which was a tin coffee pot of water. This board was a very efficient one and their labors were somewhat more laborious than an ordinary corps of Engineers, but gave good satisfaction. Money was scarce and labor cheap, so they dug ditches and drained the ponds, as the greater part of the land from Market street to Gay street and from Third to Fourth was what was called a "slash." There was a small ridge running from Market street up to Chillicothe road or street which was dry, but the land from Madison to Chillicothe, between Fifth and Sixth streets was at times a pond of water and during the winter or wet season Chillicothe street was at times impassable. The work done by the Board of Health proved successful, and we had not a return the next year of the former prevailing fevers. I will say, that, in the winter, Chillicothe street and Back street, now Second street, was the main thoroughfare for the driving of hogs to the slaughter house at the lower end of Second street. This was the place for butchering hogs from the Scioto valley as far north as Columbus. It was considered cheapest to drive the hogs here and butcher them. From here the product could be shipped direct to New Orleans, the principal market for a number of years. Waddle and Davidson and Governor Worthington, were the butchers and packers, and Samuel Gunn & Sons made the cooperage. It was in these slaughter houses that James Davis, uncle of our George Davis, got his first start in business. He came down one winter and worked in the slaughter house. Being a very competent hand, he had charge of the cleaver and his wages were more than any other hand. He got $1.25 a day while others got from 75 cents to $1.00. My father continued hotel keeping and the commission business, and it was in this hotel, a short time before Christmas 1826, that my brother Richard lost his eye by an explosion of a bottle of Aqua fortis, while dissolving some quick silver for the purpose of making fulminating or explosive crackers. The burn was so deep that he was laid up all winter. I had the same material to practice on but preferred to let Dr. Hempstead attend to the dissolving process.

The winter of 1826 and 1827 was very long and cold. There was a great deal of snow that winter as well as ice and the river closed early. The ice stopped running on Sunday afternoon, during the time my father was engaged in hearing us answer the Shorter Catechism. There was a great rejoicing by us children to see that the ice had stopped for then the asking of questions stopped also. We were in a room up stairs in the back part of the house and could see and give more attention to the stoppage of the ice than we did to answering the questions correctly.

This was the year that William Hall came here. He was a very active man and was fond of skating and sleighing. It was not long after the ice stopped until Mr. Hall, C. Oscar Tracy, Edward Hamilton and a man by the name of Hazleton, who was boarding at our house, got a long pole and made a hole in the ice and shoved it down to the bottom of the river, letting it stick about four or five feet above the ice. On it they put a long sweep pole, with a rope to one end of it, to which they attached a sleigh and loaded it with girls. The young men at the other end of the sweep, acted as motive power to make the sleigh describe the circle. For several days and nights this whirling preformance was kept up.

During the freeze up my father and John H. Thornton measured the width of the river, which was 653 feet, at a low stage. It was during this time that the accident to my brother Richard happened. After he got well, he concluded to study medicine with Dr. Hempstead and had an easy time from that time until he finished his course of study.

It was in the house that my sister Jane F. Peebles was married to Robert Wood, by the Rev. Joseph Wood, a Presbyterian minister who succeeded Rev. Stephen Lindsley, which occurred on the 16th day of May 1827. The next evening there was an infair given to the newly married couple, at the house of Kennedy and Caroline Lodwick, the latter a sister of the groom. The next day the new couple in company with several others started on horseback for their new home, Piketon, Ohio.

Having gone to all the various schools that had been taught in the town from 1819 to 1827, my oldest brother, William, thought that I was not sufficiently competent in the studies of Arithmetic and Writing to fit me for a successful business life, and as a man by the name of Eben Corwin was keeping a school, in a log house that stood on the corner of First East or Court street and Second street, I was sent to him to be taught exclusively the branches of Writing and Arithmetic. Mr. Corwin was a good penman. I, like all the boys of my age, had considerable vanity, particularly as to my qualifications in penmanship, but I had not seated myself long at the writing desk until all that vanity was taken out of me. My brother had given him particular instructions as to my writing. The teacher soon saw that I needed to go back to first principles. He took my copy book away from me and he gave me a copy of what was called straight marks, rather humiliating to me, but I had to stand it. My next copy was right and left curves. I was kept at that copy for some time, when after some days, he was standing behind me watching my progress, he discovered that I had succeeded in obtaining the art. He snatched up my copy book and set me a regular copy, in what was called large hand. I soon satisfied him that I had not only obtained the art he possessed, but he acknowledged that I was the master writer.

I will here say that I learned more in those short lessons of straight marks and curves, or as they were called in that day "pot hooks," than I did in all the former schools, and I am still of the opinion that not enough attention is, or has been given by teachers to the rudiments of writing; hence the cause of so many poor writers not only in pupils but in teachers. The art is somewhat mechanical, but mechanics who are suffered to cut, bore, hammer, saw or plane, without having sufficient teaching will not succeed, or become good workmen. I have dwelt longer on this last schooling of mine than I had intended but as it was the closing of my school career, I love to think of it and would say to all young men who expect to go out into the world to make a living for themselves and provide for others, pay particular attention to the rudiments, particularly Writing and Arithmetic. Do not be too anxious to take outside studies. These studies are the most important as to a business education. Other branches you will learn in the course of business.

Having graduated at this log school house with slab seats, long writing desks attached to the wall by a pin driven into an auger hole in the wall, the light obtained by greased paper substituted for a missing log, I soon after learned that this last schooling was to prepare me for a mercantile life. My uncle, John McCoy, who lived in Chillicothe and was regarded as one of the best and most successful merchants, kindly agreed to take me into the store, and I was provided with an outfit of clothing and sent up to Chillicothe in the month of April, 1828. Arriving at Chillicothe in the evening, I spent that evening in looking around the store. The next morning, I commenced work and my first work towards keeping store was to make a fire and sweep out the store. After breakfast, the cost and selling mark was given to me to learn, and it was not long until I had it thoroughly, and I have used that mark in all the stores I have kept and run since. I staid in Chillicothe until the fall of 1829.

My brother, William Peebles, who had been sick for a number of years with a pulmonary disease, contracted by overwork while learning his trade (cabinet maker) and working in a saw mill and distillery, died at the house of Dr. Hempstead on the corner of Third and Market streets, on Friday, July 24, 1829, aged 32 years 8 months and 28 days, and was taken to the Hotel, where on Sunday the 29th, the funeral services were performed by the Rev. E. Brainard, who was then the pastor of the Presbyterian Church. He was buried in lot number 1 of the new cemetery, now called Green Lawn. This ground was purchased a short time before his death and he was very active in locating and laying off the lots. He solicited this lot and he was the first person buried in that cemetery. The next person buried in there was Captain Josiah Shackford and the third was James Marcus Huston. During the sickness of my brother, William, the letting of the contracts for the building of the lower division of the Ohio Canal was made, which made it necessary to move my brother to Dr. Hempstead's, the hotel being full of contractors, etc.

Shortly after his death, or in the fall of 1829, it was thought necessary for me to return home, to assist my father in the business of keeping the hotel and the commission business. After the letting of the contracts, for the building of the Ohio Canal, the location of our hotel was considered out of the way; and my father concluded to remove to the Glover House again, which change was made in the fall of 1829.

I will say here that my sister Jane F. Wood did not stay long at Picketon. There was so much fever and ague there that Mr. Wood concluded to move away. He put his stock of goods in a boat and went down the Scioto and coasted along the Ohio, as far as Rockport, Indiana. When he wanted to sell out and return, he put his goods in a store house in Rockport and proposed to stay and pack pork and buy products of all kinds, much to the annoyance of merchants there. This scheme was successful in finding a customer to buy him out. He came back and opened a store in Dayton, but did not stay long there. He removed to Cincinnati, and opened a store there on Lower Market street. While living there, he had an addition to his family, a son, named William Benjamin Wood, born January 29, 1830. I think he sold out his interest in the store to William Lodwick; and he returned to Portsmouth and went into partnership with my father in the commission business.

In the year 1830, my father was appointed Deputy Marshal and took the census, which made it necessary to employ some additional help to keep the hotel. A man by the name of Parker was boarding with us at that time, and he was employed to superintend the hotel, which he did until the spring of 1831, when my father sold out the hotel lease and furniture to Mr. Parker.

In the summer of 1831, I went on the steamboat "Hermit," as clerk, along with Captain Stewart Irwin and quit the boat December 11, 1831. On the 12th day of said month, I went into the employ of A. B. Ellison, Agent for John T. Barr, in the big saw mill situated east of Madison street. The ground is now occupied as Third street. I remained in the employ of Ellison until the spring of 1833. My next employment was with Charles Scarborough, a nephew of Elijah Pearson, who proceeded Mr. Ellison in the mill until August 20, 1831. Mr. Scarborough kept a wholesale grocery in the house built by Pearson, situated on lot No. 202, Front street. Mr. Scarborough and his wife, had not been here long until they were taken sick, and Mrs. Scarborough died. I remained with him until the midsummer, being out of a situation. I spent the summer looking around. My brother, Richard, quit the practice of Medicine and got employment at Hanging Rock as keeper of the Pine Grove Furnace Landing, during which time I was offered a clerkship at Pine Grove Furnace, and for sundry reasons I declined the situation. On November 4, 1833, I went to live with Lemuel Moss as clerk and manager at the Quarry Mills, in the manufacture of flour and sawing free stone. On the 10th day of June, 1835, I was married by the Rev. E. Brainard, to Miss Martha Steele, daughter of Robert and Martha Rose Steele, and in the latter part of May and fore part of June, 1836, I loaded two flat boats with sawed stone at the mill, and on the 5th of June, started with these boats for New Orleans. Isaac Barber was my pilot. After my return, I remained in the employ of Lemuel Moss until October, 1836, when Capt. Francis Cleveland and I started a store on the lands formerly owned by Levi Moore, on the west side of the Scioto River, which we kept until the panic of 1837, when all the banks and the business operations of the New York Company suspended, so that I concluded to put my goods in a flat boat and close out the stock. On the 5th day of May, 1837, our first child, William Peebles was born, and being feeble, it was thought prudent and best to leave the child in the care of my mother and not take it on the boat. On the 3rd day of September, 1837, it died at Wheelersburg, Ohio, and was buried in the cemetery at Portsmouth, Ohio. I continued trading on the river, my wife being along until we came to Evansville, Ind. From there she went back to Portsmouth and on the 15th day of April, 1838, another son was born, but only lived twelve hours. I went on from Evansville, Indiana, to Paducah, Kentucky, where I packed the remnant of my goods and returned to Portsmouth. In the fore part of July of the same year, I was employed by Colonel John Row to take charge of his commission business, while he made a business trip to New York. On his return from said trip, he concluded to retain me as permanent assistant in the management of his business. I remained in his employ until July, 1842.

At the request of Mr. Robert Hamilton, my brother-in-law, I went up to Pine Grove Furnace and worked at the carpenter business, building houses and gaining insight in the business of the management of the Furnace. The business and location suited my inclinations and my services being acceptable to him, I concluded to remove my family to the Furnace, which I did on February 9, 1843, and continued the carpenter business until January 1, 1844, when I was employed as General Manager of the Furnace. My first business was the rebuilding of a new stack, and the repairing and remodeling of the Furnace generally, which was completed December 20, 1844. The Furnace started on that day. Having had considerable difficulty in getting the pump to work for the supply of water and the weather being extremely cold and the burden being on the furnace for eight or ten days without letting out iron, it was not deemed prudent to stop up the Furnace on the first Sunday, but every Sunday after that the furnace was stopped. I may say here that in order to make the stopping of the Furnace a success, difficulties of many kinds were thrown in the way, if possible, to deter Mr. Hamilton from carrying out his determination, but having watched the business and workings of the furnace very attentively, I assured Mr. Hamilton that there were no difficulties but what could be overcome. His determination to do it put an end to the obstacles thrown in the way by the hands and their outside advisers. It was not long afterwards until other furnaces adopted the plan of stopping. The stoppage of this furnace on the Sabbath was not only a moral success but it proved a financial success.

Having proved myself capable of managing the Furnace, Mr. Hamilton concluded on the 1st of January, to rent the Furnace to John F. Steele and Samuel B. Hempstead and myself for the term of three years, at an annual rent of $5,000.00 per year. At the end of the first year, John F. Steele died, and the partnership was continued by the remaining partners until April 1, 1854, when Mr. Hamilton sold, Samuel Coles and Joseph S. Peebles and me, an equal one-half of the Pine Grove Furnace and the Hanging Rock Coal Works, which partnership continued for ten years or until April 1, 1864, myself owning one-fourth and Samuel Coles and J. S. Peebles one-eighth each. The business of the Furnace during my continuance with it proved very successful. In 1864, G. W. Norton, F. D. Norton and L. T. Brown came down from Wheeling and purchased the Star Nail Works, now Belfont. My brother, Joseph S. Peebles and I bought $25,000 of the stock which proved a very profitable investment. My share of the stock was at the start $12,500.00 and it increased largely, not only in paying dividends but in increase of stock until it invoiced to myself and family over $100,000.00.

On April 1, 1864, I left Pine Grove Furnace, having sold it to Thomas W. Means and others. In July, 1864, I in company with Samuel Coles, J. S. Peebles, B. B. Gaylord, A. S. Winslow, Lewis Worthington, J. C. Butler, John Means and William Biggs purchased the charter and franchise of the Lexington & Big Sandy Railroad, from Grayson to Catlettsburg, for the sum of $70,000.00. We entered into a joint partnership and increased the capital stock to $300,000.00. $80,000 of which I took. After having organized and continued under a joint partnership for about six months, it was thought advisable to apply to the Legislature of Kentucky for a charter, which was granted to said parties January 26, 1865. My stock in same with the exception of $500.00 was transferred to Robert Peebles, to be held by him during my natural life and any profit derived from same to be paid over to me and for my special use.

My business connections with the Belfont and Ashland Company has been very satisfactory. In 1860, I was elected President of the Iron Bank of Ironton, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death of James Rogers. I held this position until the First National Bank of Ironton was established, the Presidency of which I held until my removal or return to Portsmouth, O., Aug. 28, 1865, retaining my interests in the bank, Belfont, and Ashland Coal and Iron Company. In 1867, I in connection with Sherman G. Johnson and Benjamin B. Gaylord built the Hub and Spoke Factory, which we ran until 1872, when Mr. Gaylord and myself sold our interest in same to Sherman G. Johnson and Josiah H. Roads. Shortly after my sale of the Hub and Spoke Factory, myself, wife and daughters, Margaret and Mary, and son, Richard, made a tour through Ireland, Scotland, Wales, England, France, Switzerland, Prussia, Denmark, Germany, Austria and Italy, being absent eleven months. Theodore H. Nevin, wife and daughter accompanied us. Mr. Nevin and myself were delegates appointed by the states of Pennsylvania and Ohio to attend an International Prison Convention, which assembled in the Temple Bar Hall, at London, July 4, 1872.

[Note.—Within a week before the unfortunate and awful accidental death of Mr. Peebles, he furnished the Editor with the manuscript of the three last named topics of this Chapter. The Editor thought at first to abbreviate the last topic and attempted to do so, but gave it up. It is a pity that there are not more persons like Mr. Peebles. There is more real, interesting local history in his personal recollections than in any part of this work. For a few weeks prior to his death, he had taken a most wonderful interest in this work, and had called on the Editor almost daily. He had looked forward to its appearance with great interest and pleasure, but was destined never to read its pages. To his young readers, the Editor specially commends what Mr. Peebles has written. There is no more praiseworthy task than to preserve one's experiences for posterity. Mr. Peebles believed in doing this and did it in the most interesting manner.]

THE BUDGETS.

By the term Budget, we refer to the annual statements of receipts and expenditures, of the town and city. The revenues of the town were from wharfage, coffee houses, other licenses, rents of city property and the tax duplicate. The Annual Revenue governed the annual tax expenditures, except in cases of Bond issues.

The first city Budget of which we find any mention in the Council Journals was in:

1834.—The amount was $3,723. Of this $659.16 was in the duplicate of 1833. $354.17 was in the duplicate of 1831 and 1832. $557.12 was retail licenses. $779.35 was for wharfage. Of the expenditures, $1,637 was for Health Officers, $360 for hose and engine, $1,445.75 was expended on wharves, $131 for Councilmen, $36 to the Recorder, $2.20 to the Jailer and $1,756.02 for repairing the Engine House.

1835.—The Budget was $3,532.80 of which $996 was from Wharfage and $429.39 from grocery licenses.

1836.—The Budget was $13,401.61. $1,301.47 was from grocery licenses. $4,987.35 was from wharfage. $2,480.32 was from loans. $2,545.00 was from small bills issued. $1,365.00 was from the tax duplicate.

The expenditures the same year were $12,598.93. $2,599.79 was for work on the grade, $219 was for per diems to members of Council, $1,911.50 was spent on the streets and $250 for the Street Commissioners. $1,263.81 of corporation tickets were burned this year.

1839.—The Budget was $11,584.98. $4,043.12 was received and spent for a school house. This was the first school house on lower Fourth. $2,498.90 was received for schools and $2,408.99 expended. $1,177.52 was received for road purposes. $2,551.12 was received from wharfage and $883.12 from coffee houses. $1,650.17 was expended for building a new market house. Council issued $4,000 in scrip running 6, 9, 12, and 15 months. $249 was paid Councilmen. $3,399.05 was for work on the grade.

1839 to 1840.—The total receipts for corporation and roads was $16,011.40. For school house $1,322.24. Maintenance of schools, $1,126.73. The expenses of the corporation and roads were $12,247.96. The expenses of school houses, $2,817.52. Expenses for support of schools, $958.01. Total, $16,023.49. In this year the corporation had small bills issued, $3,195.31. Redeemed $2,825.46. Receipts from wharf, $3,263.64. From coffee houses, $764.09. Corporation scrip, $3,450. Loans, $6,011.35, expenditures on grade, $7,300.05, expenditures on turnpike, $2,600.

1841 to 1842.—The expenditures were $6,843.85. For schools, $1,919.33. The receipts were $13,370.52, and the expenditures were $727.16 less. There was a city indebtedness at that time of $16,706.

For March 20, 1843 to March 20, 1844.—The receipts were $11,764. Expenses the same. The schools had $1,913.33, expended. The indebtedness of the town was $15,712.61. City expenses were $4,628.58.

 Since then the County Treasurer has been City Treasurer ex officio.

Town and City Solicitors.

The first legal services rendered the town were on March 14, 1823, when Edward King was allowed an attorney's fee. In April, 1823, Samuel M. Tracy became Recorder and it is believed he attended to the legal business of the city. In that year, he had charge of the cases of the City vs. Henry Massie and was engaged in it until 1826. On January 4, 1839, Samuel M. Tracy was appointed Corporation Counsel at $50.00 per year. June 26, 1840, this employment was renewed. This arrangement appears to have been continued until April 16, 1847, when Council resolved it would not employ any lawyer by the year. The town either sponged its law, or paid for it on the installment plan. On April 18, 1851, Captain Cleveland, who had more sense than any man who ever sat in council and was given a certificate to that effect by council in November, 1872, introduced an ordinance to provide for a City Solicitor at $100.00 per annum. This ordinance was passed at once. There is no record of the several City Solicitors, but Colonel O. F. Moore is believed to have been the first. He was allowed $100.00 per year, as City Solicitor in 1853 and 1855. In 1857, Wells A. Hutchins was elected City Solicitor, and was re-elected in 1859. Those who followed were:

April 8, 1861—Martin Crain.
 April 13, 1863—John W. Collings.

Post Offices and Postmasters.

The first Postmaster in Portsmouth was John Brown, Sr. He was commissioned July 1, 1808, and served until March 7, 1812. Previous to that there had been a Post Office at Alexandria. John Brown was succeeded by Thomas Waller, M. D. who kept the office on Front street where Mr. Burt now resides. He kept the Post Office, a drug store and his residence all under one roof. He was a Whig. He died holding the office.

John R. Turner, his successor, kept the office where Mr. Waller had it most of the time and after in his office on Front street. His salary was $150.00 per year. He was removed without cause by President Jackson. The Western Times of July 11, 1829, makes a great deal of comment about it.

James Lodwick was then appointed Postmaster. He removed the office to the Buckeye House on Front street. Mr. Lodwick began the box system with 38 boxes. There were no stamps and no envelopes. Postage was cash from 5 to 25 cents. Letters were sealed with sealing wax.

General William Kendall was appointed by President Tyler. He moved the office to Second and Market streets in a building which had been a Market House. There was no river mail in his time. Mails to Columbus, Gallipolis, Jackson and West Union were carried overland.

The Portsmouth Post Office became Presidential, June 30, 1856.

William P. Camden was appointed under President Polk and held the office until his death. His wife, Margaret Camden was then appointed and held the office until April 17, 1861. Under Mrs. Camden, Leroy S. Brunn, a son of Mrs. Camden by a former marriage, attended the Post Office. Mrs. Doc Hurd, then Ann Brunn, assisted in the office.

From Second and Market the Post Office was removed to where Straus now has his clothing store, 133 West Second street. This was while the Massie Block was being built, after that it went back to Massie Block.

Max J. Becker was appointed by President Lincoln, and was the first Republican Postmaster. He was a comparative stranger in Portsmouth and was the Engineer who supervised the building of the "Suspension bridge." He kept the office in the Tracy Building 133 West Second street. He resigned January 14, 1863.

Colonel John Row was appointed January 14, 1863, and served until November 13, 1866, when the office was "Johnsonized." He kept the office in a frame building on the southeast corner of Court and Second streets.

William R. Smith was appointed by Andrew Johnson but was not confirmed.

Oliver Wood was appointed to succeed him and served until December 10, 1873. He removed the office to the Little Building, afterwards bought by George Davis. It was kept there until it was removed to the Government Building on Sixth and Chillicothe streets. The first boat to carry mail was the steamer "Guyandotte" between Cincinnati and Guyandotte. Horace Crain carried mail between Portsmouth and Carey's Run and took his pay in postage which he collected.

The following is the roster of Portsmouth Postmasters with dates of their appointments:

July 1, 1808—John Brown, Sr.

 February 2, 1898—Philo S. Clark.
 March 14, 1902—Philo S. Clark.

The Floods.

Every valley is bound to be flooded at sometime and the Ohio valley is no exception.

1772.

There was a great flood in the Ohio in this year, in February. No account of it has been preserved except at Wheeling. From the height at Wheeling it equaled the 1884 flood at Portsmouth.

1797.

In April of this year there was a great flood in the Ohio. It came suddenly from very heavy rains.

1805.

There was a flood in this year which covered Alexandria, an account of which was preserved by David Gharky.

1807.

In March of this year, Alexandria experienced another flood which settled its fate.

1808.

On Christmas, 1808, the stables and outbuildings in Alexandria suffered.

1809.

In January of this year, Alexandria was flooded and the "hegira" to Portsmouth began.

1823.

In the Fall, the water was quite high in Portsmouth, but the depth has not been preserved.

1832.

In this year there was not over 1,100 people in the village of Portsmouth and it had only been incorporated for 16 years. There was 3 inches of rainfall in January, 1832, and 4 inches in February. The mean annual temperature of January was 31.8 and of February 41.7. It was the "January thaw" which brought on the flood of 1832. The highest stage of water was reached February 17, 1832, 61 feet 8 inches. It was 21½ inches deep on the first floor of McCoy's Tavern. The accounts of this flood are very meagre.

1847.

This is the only December flood on record. The water reached its height on December 18, 1847, 61 feet 1½ inches. At this time Portsmouth had a population of about 4,000. The water on the floor of McCoy's Tavern at its height was 14½ inches deep. The rainfall in November, 1847, was 6.38 inches. In December, 1847, it was 5.44 inches. Mr. S. R. Ross had been moved into his new residence just south of All Saints Church on Court street but two weeks when the water invaded his home, and was about three feet deep.

1875.

On August 5, 1875, the river reached 55 feet 6 inches. This is the only summer flood which has occurred in the history of Portsmouth. All the growing corn on the Scioto low bottoms was destroyed. Beyond the destruction of crops, but little damage was done. The rainfall in June, 1875, was 5.81 inches. In July, 1875, it was 8.76 inches, the highest for any month of July from 1830 to 1887. July, 1837, was 8.20 inches and July, 1849, 8.75 inches. Had the same height of water occurred in March or April it would not have been regarded as a flood.

1883.

This flood was caused by a general precipitation over the Ohio valley when its surface was entirely ice bound. The precipitation in January was 3.54 inches. In February it was 8.03 inches, the greatest rainfall in that month in the 57 years from 1830 to 1887. All this rain fell between February 6 and 12. The height was reached on February 12, when the water was 60 feet and 6 inches deep. On February 7, 1883, the Ohio was rising a foot an hour. This was on Wednesday. On Thursday it rose, first 9 inches, and then 6 inches per hour. On Friday it rose an inch an hour. On February 8, at 10 a. m. the water works shut down. 200 families were driven out of their homes and the school houses and engine houses opened. All factories suspended operations. On Saturday, February 10, the waters were receding. It began to rain Saturday noon and at midnight Saturday night, the river began to rise and it raised until Tuesday morning, when it came to a stand. From Saturday until Wednesday the city had no mails. $1,304.80 was raised for relief. Chillicothe offered $500 for the relief of flood sufferers, but it was declined.

This was the greatest flood in the Ohio Valley since it had been settled by white men. There had been five snows one after another in January and they went off with seven rains one after another. The precipitation in January, 1884, was 5.34 inches and in February it was 6.11 inches. Wednesday, February 6, 1884, the river began to show signs of getting out of its banks. Alarming dispatches were received from up the river. At noon the river passed the forty foot mark. By evening it was over Slabtown. Skiffs, John-boats and gum boots appeared everywhere.

Thursday, February 7, 1884. The river rose three inches per hour. At 4 o'clock Thursday evening, it began to rise five inches per hour. In the evening it covered Front street and was in the gutters on Third street. The second rise was due to the Scioto which was the highest ever known.

Friday, February 8, 1884, the water was over Third street and ferries were established. The gas was turned off. At 9 P. M. sixty feet was reached. Thursday forenoon at 10:30 A. M. the water works shut down. 52 feet 6 inches shut the water works down.

Sunday, February 10, 1884. A rain set in. The water was rising at $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch an hour and Monday morning, February 11th, it was still rising. Monday morning the water was on Second street up to Washington and down to Gay. Horses, cows and mules were made to swim to Sixth street. Sixth street was out of water from Court to Gay. On Monday morning, it was the only part of the city out of water except a part of the ridge about George Davis' and W. A. Hutchins' residences, now the High School and Irving Drew's residence. Sixth street from Court to Gay had water in the gutters and the center of it was a sea of mud. The intersections of Court, Washington, Chillicothe and Gay streets were crowded with boats. Sunday morning the great cry was for nails and candle wick to make boats. The Steam Fire Engine was on a flat moored at Washington and Sixth streets. Tuesday, February 12, 1884, the flood reached its height. In the morning it was 66 feet, 4 feet and 2 inches higher than 1832, 4 feet 8 inches more than 1847, and 5 feet 4 inches more than 1883. On Monday evening, Sixth street was the only part of the city out of water. The Court House yard was filled with wagons, horses, cattle, men and women. On February 8th, John J. McFarlin, Mayor, telegraphed to the Mayor of New York asking relief, also to Chillicothe. The school houses, engine houses and Court House were thrown open and were filled by families driven from their homes. Box cars on the railroad tracks were also used for places of shelter. Chillicothe appropriated \$500 for Portsmouth. On the evening of February 6th, the mail train on the C. W. & B. came in on time, but went back to Sciotoville. The Scioto Valley trains were abandoned Monday owing to the bridge over Paint Creek being down, and the Scioto bridge at Chillicothe being injured. Wednesday morning all trains on the C. & E. were abandoned on account of high water between Batavia Junction and Newtown.

Tuesday, February 12, 1884, the weather turned bitterly cold and the water came to a stand.

On February 13, 1884, there was a citizens' meeting at the Court House. Hon. J. J. Harper presided and N. W. Evans was Secretary. Losses were reported amounting to $527,384, but the "Tribune" said this was not half. Clothing and money were sent from all parts of the country. Chillicothe sent a car load of provisions. Doctor G. S. B. Hempstead's report from 1830 to 1858, and Doctor D. B. Cotton's report from that time to the present.

In the winter of 1855 and 1856 the river remained frozen over forty-seven days. In December the thermometer fell to 2 or 3 deg. below zero. On December 24, 1855, the river closed and from that time for forty-seven days, it was as if there were no river. There was a regular roadway for sleighs and teams across the ice and skating was excellent. For weeks before the ice broke, the weather was warm and springlike. Many attempts were made to start the ice. Blasting was used but to no effect. The Bostona was frozen in at the foot of Jefferson street. She got up steam and undertook to start the ice but only cracked it. The river was open below the Scioto, and the Bostona cut a channel and backed to Indian Run. The ice was frozen to the bottom of her keel. She came back before the break up which was on the 9th of February 1856. The remarkable feature of that winter was the ice remaining during the mild weather.

In 1883 and 1884, the thermometer was below zero six days in January, and yet the river was open from Pittsburg to Cairo.

September 19, 1884,—At 2:45 p. m. there was an earthquake in Portsmouth. It lasted five seconds.

July 4, 1897,—Was the hottest day in Portsmouth for sixty-seven years. The thermometer reached 105 1-5 deg. Fahrenheit. The record had been kept since 1830. From July 9th to the 18th, 1859, there was a long hot spell, when it ranged from 92 deg. to 103 deg., having the latter figure for two days. The observing station in Portsmouth is the second oldest in the United States, and there are but two older stations in the world. It was established in 1830, two years after the station in Philadelphia. All the above from Doctor D. B. Cotton. July 16, 1879 and July 18, 1887 were the next hottest days, the mercury going to 101 deg. The following are recent ones:

1893, June 19,—100 degrees.

1894, June 23,—102 degrees.

1895, June 23,—102 degrees.

1896, July 29,—100 degrees.

1897, July 4,—105 1-5 degrees.

1898, July 2 and 3,—101 degrees each.

1899, June 23,—98 degrees.

1900, July 15,—99 3-4 degrees.

1901, July 22,—102 degrees.

February 9, 1899,—The thermometer was 10 degrees below zero.

February 10, 1899,—The thermometer was 17½ degrees below zero.

February 11, 1899,—The thermometer was 4 degrees below zero.

February 12, 1899,—The thermometer was 11 degrees below zero.

Rainfall.

July 20, 1896,—3.27 inches of rain fell in Portsmouth in twenty-four hours, the greatest rainfall ever known in the meteorological history of the county. It began the afternoon of the 20th. From 11 p. m. on the 20th until 6 a. m. on the 21st it poured. Chillicothe street was full of water from curb to curb. The Third street sewer could not carry off the water. Carey's Run broke all records. Turkey Creek and Pond Creek were out of their bonds. The east end was all under water. The canal was broken in a dozen places. There were washouts on the C. & O. and C. P. & V. Railroads.

February 22, 1897,—For twenty-four hours previous to 7 a. m. this day 2.42 inches of rain fell. The river rose twenty feet from 7 p. m. on the 21st to daylight on the 22nd.

February 23, 1897,—The river was 53 feet and 9 inches high.

February 24, 1897,—The river was 58 feet and 9 inches.

February 25, 1897,—The river reached 59 feet and stopped.

March 26, 1898,—The river at 3:30 p. m. was 56 feet 3 inches.

March 28, 1898,—It reached 57 feet and 9 inches, the highest point.

March 16, 1899,—The river was 53 feet and 8 inches.

April 28, 1899,—Electric storm and cloud burst at Lucasville. There was a high wind, a great down pour of rain and hail stones, some were as large as a hen's egg. Lightning struck a former house of John Kline and it was fired and burned down. The families occupying it escaped. The contents were burned. George Cook was struck by lightning at home and was unconscious for an hour. While hailing, the thermometer dropped 30 degrees and overcoats were in demand. Creeks all rose and bridges and trestles near by were swept out.

THE STAR SHOWER OF NOVEMBER 13, 1833.By Abraham G. Noel.

Dr. Andrews and Charley Tracy (a lawyer) of Portsmouth, my father and myself, went out hunting the first week in November. The hunt lasted a week or ten days. We took a wagon with a tent, provisions, etc. My home was about six miles northwest of Portsmouth, and we went about twelve miles west of my home to a place near the "Copperas Rock," (a great rocky bluff.) This was at the headwaters of Long Run, a branch of Bear Creek, which is a branch of Brush Creek. The weather was bright and clear, with cool nights. We kept a fire all night in front of the tent. We hunted in the daytime, killing in all, twenty-two deer. The deer seemed stupid during the whole time that we were out. We cooked for ourselves, having the heartiest meals in the morning and evening. Father roasted the meat, Tracy roasted the potatoes, the Doctor made the coffee, and I got water and wood and kept the fire going.

There was nothing unusual about the weather the day and evening before the star shower. On the third or fourth night of the hunt, I got up before three o'clock to make a fire, and saw a number of meteors falling. I called up the other men to see the display. At first, when there were only a few meteors falling, we could see them at a great height. They fell apparently to within thirty or forty feet of the earth, then seemed to burst and fragments flew in all directions. The shower rapidly increased until, in a few minutes, the whole atmosphere was full of them, and they fell or flew in all directions like sparks from a burning hickory log. The word "millions" would not tell the number. This lasted until four o'clock, but after that, a few meteors continued to fall until daylight. We could hear them making a crackling sound on the leaves and grass, and the next morning, we found little balls sticking to the leaves, which when crushed resembled a mixture of ashes and iron-rust. Between three and four o'clock it was so light that a man could see to shoot squirrels with a rifle. We were not frightened. Dr. Andrews was a learned man and he explained the phenomenon, saying that it occurred at regular periods of time.

Some of the people in the settlements near by, were so frightened that they prayed all the next day. They thought the end of the world was at hand. The day following, a heavy snow began at nine o'clock and continued till twelve. The snow was in balls from the size of a marble to a hulled walnut. It was soft and soon melted. All the afternoon there was an occasional light fall of snow. After that we had bright weather.

[Note.—The above was written by Mr. Abraham G. Noel from personal recollection. He dictated the above in his ninety-third year. He died February 5, 1902, at Joliet, Ills. He has a sketch herein.]

Description by James Emmitt.

It was a chilly night in the early winter of 1833. To be exact, it was on the evening of November 13, 1833, and our flat boat was ungracefully slipping down the Ohio river to Madison, Ind. At the particular hour in question, the boat was just passing the point where the little Miami river empties its amber flood into the Ohio.

The night was clear and frosty. Suddenly a great flood of light enveloped the earth to the uttermost bounds of the boatmen's vision. Earth and sky and river were lurid. The world was ablaze with a wonderful glory. And a moment later the whole firmament was filled with a terrible display—a deluge of falling stars, that came down to the earth, or traversed the flaming atmosphere from north to south, from west to east, from south to north, and from east to west. They fell in sheets of glorious flames; in groups of hundreds, in clouds of thousands. Their light was so intense and glaring that the river seemed a surging tide of blood; the boatmen like chief ferrymen on one of the main seething-hot rivers of hell. No man spoke.

It was an hour of terror, and knees quaked and tongues clave to the roof of the mouth. The "oldest inhabitant," seized with a terrible fear that the hour of deserved retribution had come to him, opened not reminiscent head, and related naught of what occurred "when I was a boy," to the disparagement of the magnificent, but terrorizing spectacle. It was a pyrotechnical display of appalling magnitude, of blinding brilliancy, and astounding characteristics. At times the air seemed absolutely crowded with gyrating and descending sky rockets. Then there would be a magnificent and dazzling burst of light—so bright that it was impossible to look heavenward. Then would come hundreds of luminous stars, chasing others that had gone before them, and streams of rolling fire, that illuminated the northern hemisphere. And during it all—during one of the greatest meteorological displays that ever startled the world, Emmitt's flat boat, with its alarmed crew, floated down the broad bosom of the Ohio.

THE GREAT STORM OF MAY 21, 1860.

At four P. M. a black cloud was seen coming from the southwest. There was thunder, but nothing unusual was anticipated. It came all of a sudden with the wind. Houses were unroofed, walls blown down, chimneys toppled over and trees prostrated. The air was filled with leaves, torn from the trees by the force of the wind, with shingles, pieces of roof, brickbats, etc. The streets and valleys were filled with rubbish torn from the buildings, and trees. The steeple of the First Presbyterian Church with the bell and clock tower in it, were thrown across the street between two houses and the roof of the church was nearly stripped off. Jefferson and Kepner's large brick store house just about completed, was wrecked, the wind got into it and crushed down every floor with bricks from near the roof. A part of the east wall was thrown on the Brown residence, next east, occupied by E. Jones and family, from Elmira, New York. A little girl, a daughter of four years, was crushed beneath the falling walls and instantly killed. The upper floors of the house were crushed through, destroying all the furniture. Men were working to finish the Jefferson building and one Henry McCallister was caught in the wreck and killed. The others escaped. David Price, a drayman, with his horse, was killed in front of Mr. Tewksbury's residence, by the roof of the Blake building being thrown on his horse and dray. The whole mass of the roof fell on him, his horse and dray, while the wheel of his dray was caught on a hitching post. A moment more and he would have escaped. Henry Davis's frame machine shop on Mill street, was totally demolished. Many roofs were torn off and the damages were quite extensive. Scarcely a house escaped without more or less damage. William McKinney, on the west side north of the distillery, was returning home when the storm overtook him. He was killed by a tree falling and crushing him. Everywhere the timber was prostrated and the roads were blocked with it. On this account, the Chillicothe coach, due that evening, did not arrive until the next day at 10 o'clock in the morning.

THE SCHOOLS.

There were no schools in Portsmouth supported by the public prior to 1839. That is really the beginning of the school history of Portsmouth. What occurred before that date is largely tradition. There are no public records to show what the Historian would like most to know. The charter of the town in 1814 said nothing about schools. It was not until March, 1833, the Legislature authorized the town council to provide for the support of the common schools, to create school districts, to build houses and to borrow money for that purpose. The same act authorized a levy of two mills on the dollar for school purposes. The Council was authorized to create the office of Trustee and Visitor of the common schools for one year. The Council was also to appoint five persons as Examiners and Inspectors of common schools for two years who granted certificates to teachers and examined the schools.

Pursuant to this law, the town council made three school districts, one of each of the three wards constituting a district. The electors were to meet on the second Friday of November, 1838, and the third Friday in September each year after and elect three Trustees and Visitors of Common Schools. The Treasurer of the town was to take charge of the school funds and the Recorder of the town to keep the school accounts. The first Trustees and Visitors of common schools were elected November 9, 1838. They were: First ward, James Lodwick; Second ward, Washington Kinney; Third ward, J. V. Robinson. This was the beginning of public schools in Portsmouth. We have first to deal with the period prior to 1839. There was a public school house built in Portsmouth in 1806 by John Brown, senior, but whether it was built by a public tax, or by voluntary contributions is matter of conjecture. Wayne Township had no existence until 1809 and the records of Union Township from 1803 to 1809 are lost. They are not even known to be in existence. The probability is, that the school house built by John Brown was built by voluntary labor and contributions. It stood where the "Buckeye House" now stands, or on the same lot.

Henry Massie in platting the town of Portsmouth, dedicated lots 130 and 143 to schools. These are the lots where the Second Street School House now stands. He also donated out-lot 39 which embraces three hundred and fifty-five feet on Court street and four hundred and forty-five feet on Fourth.

The Fourth Street School House was built on a part of this lot and the remainder of it was leased out perpetually. Lots 130 and 143 were first rented out and Clark Smith taught a school in a log house there in 1823. The benches were of slabs, with riven legs, and no backs. The desks were rude boards attached to the walls. The house was heated by a fire-place. The books were Webster's Spelling Book, Introduction to English Reader, Pike's Arithmetic, Sequel to English Reader and Murray's English Grammar. In 1829 George Ross Kelsey taught the first public free school in the Philip Young property, on Third near Washington street. It was continued only three months and paid for by the sale of Section 16; and in three months the funds were exhausted. In 1834 a public school house was erected on Lot 215 on Jefferson street. In 1836 Mr. Mears taught a pay school, and in the same year William S. Morrell taught a free school. In 1836 the school youth were four hundred and fifty-four. In 1837 the value of the school building was five hundred dollars. They consisted of a frame shell on Jefferson and a log building on Second street. In 1837 the enumeration was five hundred and forty-five,—two hundred and seventy-eight males, two hundred and sixty-nine females. School funds were $529.80 of which $277 was paid teachers. In 1838 the sums paid teachers per month were: W. K. Scott $37.50, Mrs. M. A. Wilcox $29.16, Miss Thankful Graves $16.33, Miss Harriet Ratcliff $16.33.

William Jones was the first teacher in Portsmouth and he continued to teach from 1806, the year he began, until 1828. He was paid by the parents or guardians, a stipulated sum per quarter and with all due respect to the forefathers, he had a hard time to collect that. He often gave public notice that the tuition due him should and must be paid. All the schools in Portsmouth from 1806 to 1839 were conducted in this manner. The law of January 22, 1821, provided that Township Trustees were to create districts in their townships, of twelve to forty householders; a school committee of nine was to be elected on the first Monday in May in each year and a collector, who should act as Treasurer. The committee was to erect a school house and employ a teacher and the expense was to be assessed on the parents of the pupils sent. The school committee was to have its share of the proceeds of school funds. There is no record to show that Portsmouth, or Wayne Township, ever acted under this law, though the Township, or Town, may have done so. The act of February 5, 1825 provided for a state levy of one-half mill on the dollar for a school fund. Three directors were to be elected in each district and to employ a teacher. This law also provided for school examiners. The act of March 10, 1831, undertook to make a complete system of common schools. The school fund was three-fourths of a mill but not to be levied on the property of blacks or mulattoes. This act added a district clerk and treasurer, and the school meetings were to be the third Tuesday in October. By the act of March 7, 1838, the school fund was made two mills on the dollar, district elections were to be held the third Friday in September, and there were to be three directors elected each year. The act of March 16, 1839, made the school age from four to twenty-one. "Cuffee" was still an outlaw and only white children were to be admitted to the schools. It was not until under the act of March 14, 1853, that the three local directors began to be elected in April of each year, one in each year and for three years' term. This act provided for Township Boards of Education and central High Schools.

William Jones, the first teacher in Portsmouth, was born in Maryland in 1775. He secured a good education for his time and his father emigrated to Kentucky in 1793, coming down the Ohio River. William Jones made a trip to New Orleans in 1799, with his brother Samuel Griffith Jones, who is sketched among the pioneers. In 1800, William Jones married and located in Alexandria, purchasing a lot there. He assisted Major Henry Massie in laying out the town of Portsmouth, and was given lot 272 in the town for his services. It was on Second street near Scioto. He sold it to Charles T. Mastin for $220. He reared a large family, one son and a number of daughters. He first taught at Alexandria and in the vicinity. He began teaching in Portsmouth in 1806 and kept it up until 1829. On December 14, 1839, he was commissioned a Justice of the Peace for Wayne Township and served one term. His only son, Thomas, became a steamboat captain and owner. Mrs. Daniel McIntire was one of his daughters. His wife died in 1819. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and one of the pioneers of Methodism in Portsmouth. In 1837, he was Deputy Auditor of the county. He lived until 1860 and died at the ripe age of eighty-five, at the home of Dudley Day, his son-in-law. He was a fine penman and clerk and was often employed to perform clerical duties. He taught thirteen weeks for two dollars and a half per pupil. On July 26, 1826, he advertised in the newspaper for those owing him for tuition to settle up or he would place the bills in the hands of officers. Here is his advertisement in the Western Times of May 3, 1828:

NOTICE.

I again offer my services as a teacher of youth for the town of Portsmouth and its vicinity. Those who will entrust me with the tuition of their children may rest assured that every attention will be paid to their literary and moral improvement, within the compass of my ability. The branches I propose to teach are, orthography, reading, penmanship and arithmetic, which I will teach for two dollars and fifty cents per quarter of thirteen weeks. Good school accommodations will be furnished. The school to commence about the first or second Monday of next month.

WILLIAM JONES.

THE WHEELER ACADEMY, 1819.—FOURTH AND MARKET.

On November 4, 1818, Joseph Wheeler advertised the Portsmouth Academy in the "Portsmouth Gazette," the tuition was two dollars and a half per quarter, Latin and Greek being taught. "The Academy" was on Market street north of the Court House and adjoined open fields. In the same month and year there was a school conducted in the Methodist Meeting House. General William Kendall, John R. Turner, Reverend Stephen Lindsley, Doctor Thomas Waller and N. K. Clough were Trustees. In 1827 Mr. and Mrs. Wood conducted an academy for males and females in Portsmouth. They referred to Ezra Osborn, N. K. Clough and Doctors Offner and Hempstead. In the same year Mrs. Ashley advertised a seminary for young ladies, where drawing and needle work were taught. In September, 1828, J. L. Dupuy advertised the opening of a school. On May 16, 1829, Miss Dupuy opened a school at her mother's residence; ornamental needle work and velvet painting being taught. March 13, 1831, Miss Harriet Goodspeed advertised a young ladies' school, at the same time Guy C. Kelsey advertised an academy. In 1833, there was a public school taught in a two story frame building on the east side of Jefferson street, between Second and Third by Miss Eliza Ratcliff, afterward Mrs. John W. Purdum.

In 1836, a school was built on the site now occupied by All Saints Church. It was a one story frame building and remained in use as a school building until the completion of the Fourth Street school house in 1839. It then became the residence of Dr. E. Burr and in 1850 was removed. August 11, 1832, Davis and Archbold advertised the "Portsmouth Institute of Education." It was conducted in the Methodist Church. Common branches were taught and also Latin and Greek. In November, 1832, Mary Sharp advertised a Young Ladies' Seminary to begin November 26 in the room formerly occupied by Mrs. Kelsey. In 1836 Robert Scott advertised a night school. May 1, 1838, Miss M. Cummings opened a school in the basement of the Methodist Church. She charged four dollars for twelve weeks in the common branches.

The year 1838 marked a new departure in the schools. Then and thereafter the public took the matter in charge. Then the three director plan, one each year, was adopted which continued until 1874, a period of thirty-six years. We give below the directors elected in September each year from 1838 to 1852 except 1840, 1842, 1843, which could not be found. In the latter year they were first elected at the April election.

The examiners and visitors in the same period were as follows, as far as they can be found:

In 1839,—The Fourth Street School House was built. It cost $6,600. Ratcliff and Schultz were the contractors and Joseph Riggs, Conrad Overturf, and Gideon J. Leet superintended the building. The schools were organized in August, 1839, with two weeks vacation in Summer and two in Winter. The boys and girls were taught separate. There were three grades. Non-residents were charged $1.00 and $1.25 tuition per month. There were one hundred and fifty-one boys and one hundred and fifteen girls, total, two hundred and sixty-six. The teachers were A. L. Child, Superintendent; Miss Thankful Graves (afterwards Mrs. Gray), Miss H. Ratcliff, Mrs. A. H. Wilcox, Principal of female department, Miss E. Waller, Misses E. Young (afterwards Mrs. Joe Glidden), Miss E. M. Connell. The receipts for school purposes were $6,615.03 and the salaries of teachers were paid $1,690.05. In August, 1839, the rules and regulations of the public schools were published in the "Tribune" and occupied three columns. There were nineteen rules as to the conduct of the schools and twelve as to the conduct of the pupils. The school age was from four to twenty. The hours in summer were eight to twelve and two to five. In winter the hours were from nine to twelve and one to four. Recess was fifteen minutes in the morning and the same in the afternoon. There were examinations in June and December. Every Saturday was a holiday as well as Christmas, New Year, Thanksgiving and fast days. Among the rules were those which required clean hands, faces and clothes and that the pupils should always speak the truth. In 1840 there was a male seminary in Portsmouth conducted by William McKendree Scott assisted by his brother, an eastern graduate. They had four terms of eleven weeks each and their terms of tuition were four dollars to five dollars per term. Rev. E. Burr, Rev. Alexander B. Brown, and Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead were the examiners. In 1842 there was started a Portsmouth Seminary for young ladies; A. Williams was Superintendent and Miss Cowles assistant. July 29, 1842, the school trustees reported to the council in three columns of the "Tribune." It stated that the Fourth street school house was three stories high, had six rooms, and could accommodate eight hundred pupils. There were two departments, male and female, and three grades. The third grade course was, Alphabet and Reading; the second grade was, Reading, Geography and Writing; the first grade, female was, Grammar, Composition, Natural and Moral Philosophy, Chemistry, Ancient and Modern History, Botany, and Map Drawing. The third grade, male, was, Grammar, Composition, Declamation, Book-keeping, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy, Algebra, Surveying and Latin. Males enrolled, two hundred and forty-five; females, two hundred and twenty-three; daily attendance, males, one hundred and thirty; females, eighty-nine, average per teacher, males, forty-three; females, thirty-six. The teachers were A. L. Child, Superintendent; Mrs. T. Graves, (afterwards Mrs. Gray), Miss H. Ratcliff, Mrs. M. A. Wilcox, Miss E. Waller. The next year Miss E. Young (afterward Mrs. Joe Glidden) was to take the place of Mrs. Graves. From August, 1849, until July 1, 1842, the school receipts were $6,615.03. In the same time the expenses were $5,502.66 leaving a surplus of $1,112.37. The expenses for the year ending June 24, 1842, were $1,768.21 of which $1,690.05 were paid for tuition, cost per pupil, $7.52. For the year ending June 25, 1843, the receipts were $3,566.33½, and the expenses, $1,532.44, leaving a balance of $2,033.89½. From July 14, 1843, to June 28, 1844, Mr. A. L. Child was Superintendent and teacher of the first male department, Mr. W. C. Roberts of the second male department, and Mrs. S. M. Carrel, of the third male department. Miss M. A. Smith was teacher of the first female department, Miss E. B. Glover of the second and Miss S. Dole of the third. During the year Miss Caroline H. Fuller was employed to take charge of the fourth male department. Miss L. L. Squires, (now Mrs. C. C. Row) was employed during the year and Miss C. C. Austin, Miss Snull and Mrs. Carrell resigned.

The total enrollment was five hundred and eighty-eight, average attendance, two hundred and sixty-five, average per teacher thirty-eight. The receipts were this year $4,202.08½, expenses $1,844.73, balance $2,337.35½. Average cost per pupil, $4.69. August 3, 1844, to July 4, 1845, A. L. Child had resigned and A. J. Rikoff became Superintendent and teacher of the first male department, W. C. Roberts second male department, Miss C. H. Fuller third male department, Miss R. A. Varner fourth male department. Miss E. B. Glover was the teacher of the first female department, Miss L. L. Squires of the second and Miss S. Dole of the third. Receipts for the year, $4,531.88½, expenses $1,785.59, balance in treasury $2,745.99½. Number enrolled four hundred and eighty-one, average attendance, two hundred and eighty-five, average per teacher, forty-one. In that year the text books used were Webster's Spelling-book, McGuffey's Reader, Smith's Grammar, Mitchell's Geography, Ray's Arithmetic, Dane's Algebra, Geometry and Trigonometry, Comstock's Natural Philosophy, Mrs. Willard's History of the United States, Mansfield's Political Geography, the Bible without note or comment.

The salaries paid per month were A. J. Rikoff, Superintendent, $45; W. C. Roberts, $20; Miss C. H. Fuller, $15; Miss R. A. Varner, $12; Miss E. B. Glover, $528; Miss L. L. Squires, $16; Miss S. Dole, $15. Total enrollment, six hundred and twenty-four, average attendance, three hundred and seventy-two and a half, average per teacher forty-one and one-third. In this year Mrs. R. A. Silcox became teacher of the second male department at twenty-five dollars per month. Miss F. M. Moxley of the fourth male department at $14 per month, Mrs. E. B. Rikoff of the male and female department at $14 per month and Mary Kerr of the male and female department at $12 per month.

Receipts, $4,945.64½; expenses, $2,283.80; balance, $2,661.85.

This year the Fourth street building was overflowed.

On March 29, 1844, A. Williams advertised a Portsmouth Female Seminary to open April 2nd, at a school room on Front street. Mrs. M. A. Wilcox advertised to open a female school, April 22, 1844. On October 31, 1844, J. Lane advertised a day and evening school to be under the Methodist Church on Second street, formerly occupied by Colonel Potter. Miss Isabelle McDermotte also advertised a female seminary.

Of the teachers who taught in 1846, Miss Fuller became Mrs. Comstock and Miss R. A. Varner, Mrs. R. S. Silcox. Mr. Rikoff served at $45 per month until 1849. He was then sent away, and went to Cleveland at $4,000 per annum. Mr. Silcox left the schools in 1850 for commercial pursuits. Miss Squires became Mrs. C. C. Row and still resides in Portsmouth. Miss Glover went to West Liberty, Ohio, but has since died and is buried in Greenlawn, among her people. Miss E. W. Rankin became a teacher in 1846 and continued for several years. She afterwards married Alexander LaCroix of the French Grant and is now deceased.

Michael P. Wilson became Superintendent for one year. The Second street building was erected at a cost of $7,184. William Newman and John W. Purdum were the builders.

1850—1851.

A. J. Buell became Superintendent at $600 per year. On March 1, 1851, Portsmouth became a city and the school board consisted of one from each ward and there were five examiners and inspectors chosen by the council.

1852—1853.

The High School was instituted January 3, 1853. In 1852, Mr. James H. Poe came into the Portsmouth schools from Chillicothe as a teacher and principal of the Fourth Street building. He had that until July, 1867, when he resigned and returned to Chillicothe, where he spent the remainder of his life. Mr. Buell was succeeded by Edgar C. Selfridge, who died in February, 1852. He was succeeded by John Rolfe, at a salary of $800. His work ended December, 1852. His successor was Samuel Heslet of Washington, Pa., who remained until the summer of 1856.

There were fourteen teachers. These were paid two hundred and sixty-one dollars per month. J. H. Poe was paid $33.00 the highest rate. The lowest was $14.00 per month. Samuel Heslet, the Superintendent, got sixty dollars per month. The enrollment was 1,070 and average attendance 531. J. H. Poe was employed to teach Latin and Greek. In this year, the Portsmouth school board first recognized the man and brother, with a black face. The first colored school was taught by Mrs. E. E. Glidden in the one story brick still standing, just west of the Portsmouth Public Library.

In 1855, John Bolton came into the schools. He was appointed a teacher and principal of the Second street building. In 1863, Mr. Bolton was paid $750 and the High school was assigned to him. In July, 1864, his salary was increased to $1,000 and he and Mr. Poe were made Superintendents of districts. In July, 1867, Mr. Poe left the schools and Mr. Bolton was made Superintendent. He remained until 1872, when he was forced out by a pressure which would have caused any honorable man to retire.

In November, 1856, Emerson E. White, of Cleveland, became Superintendent at $1,200 per year and continued until August, 1860. In 1857, Mr. J. H. Poe was principal of the Fourth street building. In that building Mrs. Glidden had the infant boys and Miss Gunn the infant girls. Miss Varner had the secondary girls, Miss White, the secondary boys, and Miss Bannon had the primary girls.

In the Second street building, Miss Blakeslee had the infant boys and Miss Jones the infant girls; Miss Gunn had the secondary boys; Miss Timbrook the secondary girls; and Miss Allgood had the primary boys and girls.

On April 2, 1857, the school law of 1853 was adopted by the city and council appointed the first school board. The course of study was re-arranged and the schools were graded. The City Board of Examiners was legislated out of office and thereafter until 1874, the County Board of Examiners examined the city teachers.

1857—1858.

Under E. E. White the schools were arranged as follows: One High School, two teachers; two Grammar Schools, four teachers; four Intermediate Schools, four teachers; four Secondary Schools, four teachers; four Primary Schools, four teachers; one Colored School, one teacher; total, sixteen schools, nineteen teachers.

In the fall of 1856, the High School was organized in two departments. The girls were on Fourth street with Miss Rankin and the boys on Second street under Mr. John Bolton. In 1858 Mr. Sabin taught the High School. In the Grammar Schools were Mr. Bolton, Miss Silcox, Mr. Poe and Miss Saylor. The Intermediate teachers were Mrs. Blakeslee, Miss Jones, Mrs. Glidden, Miss Gunn; Secondary, Miss F. Gunn, Miss Timbrook, Miss Varner, Miss White; Primary, Misses Williams, Allgood and Wheeler.

Miss Nichols was a new teacher in the High School. In the Intermediate Miss Sarah Rigdon and Miss Sprague were new teachers. In the secondary Miss B. S. Rigdon and Miss Dobbin were new teachers. In the Primary, Misses Stone, Williams, Bannon, Wheeler and Lionbarger, were the teachers. The whole number of pupils was nine hundred and seventy-eight. In this year, John Bolton and James H. Poe were employed in the Grammar school at $750 each. In the fall, Miss Nichols was employed in the High School at $550 per annum. On March 2, 1859, Miss Jackson was appointed teacher of the colored school at $25 per month.

At the beginning of this year Mr. White, the Superintendent, was excused from teaching. From this period the Superintendent ceased to teach. Before that he had been one of the teachers. In June, 1859, Miss Nichols' salary in the High School was advanced to $600 per year. There was trouble in the Board in the winter of 1860 and all of the members resigned and an entirely new board was elected. The Spencerian system of penmanship was adopted at this time. Up to this time the Clerk did the business of the Board but that system had its abuses. The Board met monthly and allowed the bills and made a record of it. Before that the Clerk paid the bills at any time and the Board approved them afterwards. In February, 1860, the whole enrollment was 1,091 and the daily attendance was 767. A Mr. Harrison taught in the High School, in 1859 and until December, 1860, when he was discharged. The Grammar schools were taught by Messrs. Poe and Bolton, Misses Bard and Silcox. The Intermediate schools by Mrs. Glidden, and the Misses F. Gunn, E. Gunn and Jones. The Secondary by Misses Varner, Williams Rigdon and Bannon, the Primary by Miss Stone, Mrs. Bolton and the Misses A. Bonde, Archard and Wheeler, the colored schools by Mrs. Weaver. Until April, 1857, the school funds had been under the control of the Council. Then the schools came directly under the state law and the school year ended August 1 each year. The school receipts for 1857, 1858 and 1859 were as follows: 1857, $8,408.28; 1858, $10,954.30; 1859, $9,911.50. Expenses, 1857, $8,428.08; 1858, $8,030.91; 1859, $8,105.72. On June 29, 1860, the first class was graduated from the Portsmouth High School. They were Lewis Terry, Frances Wait, George H. Bell, Emma P. Hunter, and James Kehoe. Superintendent E. E. White delivered the diplomas and Rev. E. Burr, D. D. delivered an address.

1860—1861.

In June, 1860, the following teachers were elected at the salaries designated. John Bolton and J. H. Poe each at $750 per annum; Mrs. E. Glidden and F. C. Gunn at $250; Mrs. Bolton and Mrs. Leverett, Misses E. M. Clark, M. Wheeler, Emma Walter, Mary L. Keough at $20 per month; Mrs. S. E. Stone, Misses A. J. Jones, Eliza Varner, C. A. Williams and Mary Bannon, each at $24 per month. Colonel John H. Allen of Chillicothe, a West Point graduate, became Superintendent at $1,200. Mrs. T. J. Cochrane was elected in the High School at $60 per month, but resigned in December. He was succeeded by Mrs. M. A. Cook, who in April, 1861, was succeeded by Rev. S. D. Tompkins. In the fall of 1860 Mr. E. E. White taught a Classical School in Portsmouth in the Jefferson Block. He had a public examination on December 21, 1860. Mr. T. J. Cochrane and Miss Sabin were his assistants.

1860—Enumeration, 2,286; pupils enrolled, 1,177; average daily attendance, 940; number of schools, 18; average for each school, 45.

Colored schools—pupils enrolled, 63. Average daily attendance, 33.

1861—1862.

There was great commercial depression owing to the prophecy of war and the teachers were made to suffer in their salaries. Colonel J. H. Allen, Superintendent, was cut from $1,200 to $900; Messrs. Poe, Bolton and J. B. Valodin were cut to $60 per month; Misses Jennie Silcox and M. A. Bannon, to $25 per month; Mrs. Susan E. Stone and Mrs. E. E. Glidden each to $23 per month; Misses M. J. Gunn, Eliza Varner, Alice Davis and Mrs. Bolton each to $20 per month; Mrs. J. W. Williams and M. E. Lionbarger each to $17.50 per month. The salaries for the year were $14,195.

Colonel Allen was retained as Superintendent. October 17, 1863, Rev. William J. Clarke advertised a female seminary. In July, 1863, the position of superintendent was left vacant. John McElheny one of the Board was made manager of the schools. Mr. Poe was made principal of the Fourth and Fifth street school houses and Mr. Bolton of the Second street and Colored school houses and each was allowed $10 extra per month for acting in such capacity. Mr. Powell was appointed teacher in the High School, but did not stay long. Soon after the opening of the schools he was succeeded by J. A. Rich. Mason's Physical Exercises were introduced during the year.

1863—1864.

In the Spring of 1864 Mr. Poe went into the "one hundred days service" and was given a leave of absence while so gone. The women teachers asked for an increase of salary and obtained it.

1864—1865.

In June, 1865, Messrs. Poe and Bolton were re-employed at $1,000 per year each. On October 3, 1864, the Portsmouth Female Seminary was opened.

1865—1866.

In October, 1865, Mr. E. E. Ewing was employed in the High School at $80 per month. From 1860 to 1867 no classes were graduated in the High School.

1866—1867.

Middleton S. Campbell came in the High School at $90 per month. In August, 1866, the building at Ninth and Washington was contracted for. It was to cost $2,260. Messrs. Hard and Conway were the contractors. In June, 1876, the Salter property on Gallia street was bought for $29,000 and improved to the amount of $4,600. There was a vote of the people on the purchase of the Salter property, four hundred and forty voting for it and twenty against it. In July, 1867, Mr. Poe retired and Mr. Bolton was employed Superintendent at $1,400 and allowed to live in the Salter building. The pupils of the Fourth street school presented Mr. Poe with a gold watch and chain. The enumeration in 1867 was 2,693; the enrollment was 1,401; average daily attendance, 980; number of schools, 20; average to each school, 53; colored schools, enrollment, 125; daily attendance, 70.

1867—1868.

In January, 1868, the Salter building was used as a High School. The High School was conducted by Messrs. Bolton and Campbell with two assistants. The list of teachers in August, 1867, was:

In August, 1867, O. M. Atwood was made principal of the colored schools at $500 per year.

1868—1869.

John Bolton was Superintendent at $1,400 and M. S. Campbell in the High School at $1,000. S. P. Petrie was employed to teach German at $900. Mrs. Mulligan and Miss E. Varner taught the A Grammar at $60 per month. The other grades were $50 down to $25. In June, 1869, the west wing was added to the Salter building at a cost of $4,040. James M. Nichols was the contractor. White's Graded School Register was adopted at the same time. In June, 1869, the enrollment of pupils was 1,560. There was no class graduated in 1868, but one graduated in 1869 and thereafter each year. In 1869, plates for diplomas were first purchased. This year in Scioto County the total receipts for schools were $83,221.37, total expense $63,246.28, of which $41,106.26 was paid teachers. Four German Schools were authorized this year and they were begun by Simon Peter Petrie at $60 per month. He conducted the German until 1872. In September, 1869, William H. Holland was made principal of the colored schools at $500 per year. In 1870, the salary was raised to $550, and in 1871 to $600.

John Bolton was superintendent at $1,800. M. S. Campbell in the High School at $1,200. S. P. Petrie German teacher at $75. W. H. Holland had charge of the colored schools at $50 per month. Miss Charlotte M. Lewis first appeared as a teacher this year. She is still teaching. The enumeration in 1870 was 3,493, 1,547 white males, 1,635 white females, 102 colored males, and 119 colored females.

1870—1871.

In June, 1871, the High School building was contracted for to cost $10,215. William Newman was the contractor for the brick work, James M. Nichols for the carpenter work.

1871—1872.

John Bolton was re-elected in July 1871, but resigned November 1, 1871, owing to a difficulty between him and Mr. Campbell, in which Mr. Bolton was right—Campbell and the Board wrong. In January, 1872, it was resolved to tear down the old Fourth Street building erected in 1839 and replace it by a new one. The new building was let to Robert Baker for $23,200, and be allowed $650 for the old building. The plans were prepared by Isaac H. Hobbs & Son of Philadelphia. The High School building was first occupied in January, 1872. In that school was taught Mathematics, Science and Literature. In the Grammar schools were taught the common branches. United States History, Physics and Botany. In the Primary, Reading, Spelling, Writing, Arithmetic and Geography.

In July, 1872, Mr. J. F. Lukens of Kent, Ohio, was elected Superintendent at $1,800. Mr. Petrie the German teacher resigned. A new B Grammar was created and Miss M. J. Gunn appointed at $70 per month. In January, 1873, Mr. Gilbert resigned and Hiram Myers was appointed. In February, 1873, William B. Ferguson became principal of the colored schools.

This year marks a new era in the Portsmouth schools and one which has lasted until the present time. The first era was from 1806 to 1839, a period of thirty-three years. The second period was from 1839 to 1874, a period of thirty-five years, in which the Board of three ruled; and the third period was from 1874, until the present time, 1901, a period of twenty-seven years. In June, 1873, Mr. Lukens was re-elected. Karl Hermes was made German teacher at $75 per month and Louisa Knoble at $50 per month. George Campbell was made an assistant in the High School at $75 per month. A new school law was passed May 1, 1873, by which at the next election in cities, like Portsmouth, the school board was to consist of two members from each ward, elected for one and two years, at first, and thereafter half the board to be elected annually. At the April election, 1874, the following School Board was elected:

Wards.	Members.	Term.	Wards.	Members.	Term.
First Ward.....	John M. Lynn.....	2 years	Fourth Ward..	John Q. Weaver.....	2 years
"	J. M. Herder.....	1 year	"	George A. Waller.....	1 year

The Board organized April 20, 1874, by electing G. S. B. Hempstead, President, William Waller, Clerk, and John Q. Gibson, Treasurer, and appointed standing committees on Finance, Discipline, Repairs, German Schools, Colored School and Library. The new Board rented the Council chamber and on May 7, 1874, appointed as examiners of the city schools, Rev. J. T. Franklin for three years, Philip Zoellner for two years and Rev. Heber A. Ketchum for one year. Mr. Zoellner resigned, and Karl F. Thieme was appointed in his place. July, 1874, Carl Huber was elected German teacher, at $1,100. He is still in the schools. July, 1874, the library was moved from the Y. M. C. A. to the High School building and John Row made Librarian at $50 per year. J. H. Brown was appointed teacher in the High School in place of George Campbell, resigned.

In September, 1874, a lot was purchased of F. C. Searl, at the corner of Eleventh and John streets on which to erect a School House for colored pupils. The price paid was $2,500.

On March 11, 1875, the course of study was made twelve years. There were three grades, Primary, Grammar and High School, with four years in each grade. The four years in each grade were lettered D, C, B, and A, respectively.

In July, 1875, A. J. Rikoff, John Bolton, both former Superintendents, Mrs. Mary T. Ashton, Miss Sue Whitney, Miss Anna Chase and Miss Relda Martin, former teachers of the Portsmouth Schools, were employed in the Cleveland Schools.

In July, 1875, M. S. Campbell was elected Superintendent of the schools. The vote stood seven for Campbell and five for Lukens. Those voting for Campbell were, Gibson, Lynn, Lect, Norton, Reiniger, Waller and Zottman. Those for Lukens were, Cook, Davidson, Hempstead, Stacy and Weaver.

Mr. William M. Friesner was made Principal of the High School, and Miss Mary D. Campbell, assistant. Dr. Hempstead resigned from the Board and E. E. Ewing was appointed in his place.

On May 27, 1875, the Board purchased the Union street School Ground from Hannah Waller for $10,076. In April, 1875, Mr. R. S. Silcox was made a school examiner for three years.

1875—1876.

On August 8, 1875, the erection of the colored school house on Eleventh and John streets was authorized. Mr. Campbell was paid $1,800 per year, and Mr. Friesner and Miss Campbell each $90.00 per month. Carl Huber, German teacher, was paid $110.00 per month. The total number of teachers including the Superintendent was thirty-eight.

On September 16, 1835, the Board contracted for the Eleventh Street colored school house at $8,067. I. Hobbs & Son of Philadelphia were the architects. In December, 1875, Karl F. Thieme resigned as examiner, and James L. Treuthart, was appointed to take his place.

The late E. E. Ewing prepared a paper on the public schools up to 1876, and we have freely quoted from it. He said that in 1836 the school youth in Portsmouth were 454, in 1876, they numbered 4,000. The value of school property in 1836 was $500.00, and in 1876, it was $153,000. In 1836, there were two teachers; in 1876, forty teachers. He attributed the high standard of the Public Schools to E. E. White, still living on Broad street, in Columbus, Ohio, and whose son is Governor of West Virginia.

The schools in Portsmouth cost $19,276.31 for the first half of the year; and the remainder of the county, $43,077.08. Cost in the city per pupil, $4.91, county, $3.70.

1876—1877.

From 1871 to 1875 only forty nine per cent of those enrolled were in attendance. On March 8, 1876, Mr. Ewing published his history of the Public Schools. It was published in book form by the State, and is a most valuable contribution to the History of the State.

1877—1878.

On September 12, 1877, the building of the Union Street School was authorized. It cost $25,356.68. Captain A. B. Alger was the architect. The enumeration in 1877 was; white boys, 1,799, girls, 1,822, total, 3,621. Colored boys, 184, girls, 163, total, 347. Whole number between six and twenty-one, 3,968, of which 1,171, were between sixteen and twenty-one. On December 26, 1877, the Union Street Building was completed. M. S. Campbell was Superintendent, William M. Friesner, Principal of the High School, and Mary D. Campbell and Minta Searl teachers.

1878—1879.

During this year the Superintendent and High School teachers remained as in the previous year. On July 9, 1879, M. S. Campbell resigned to take a position at Youngstown, Ohio, and on the same day, William M. Friesner was elected Superintendent at $1,300 per year. Miss Mary D. Campbell was employed in the High School at $90.00, and Miss Minta Searl at $80.00 per month.

SKETCHES OF SUPERINTENDENTS AND TEACHERS.

Andrew Jackson Rikoff.

was born near Newhope, New Jersey, August 23, 1824. It is a small village between Trenton and New Brunswick. His parents removed to Cincinnati when he was but six years old. Here he attended Woodward High School and Woodward College. He completed the High School course, and commenced the collegiate course but withdrew to enter the career of a teacher. He continued his studies however, and completed his education when not engaged in teaching, and in this way won the degree of Master of Arts at the Ohio University at Athens. He had a very strong constitution, and during his student life only allowed himself six hours of sleep. He began teaching in 1840, in and around Cincinnati. He came to Portsmouth in 1844, as Superintendent of the schools, and remained there five years, when he returned to Cincinnati. He then accepted the principalship of the school in which he had taught in Cincinnati for two years. He held that place five years. He then conducted a private school from 1858 to 1867. He was again elected Superintendent of the Cincinnati Schools but declined it. Soon afterward he was elected Superintendent of the Cleveland Schools at a salary of $4,000 per year; and he held this position for fifteen years. In 1855, he was President of the Ohio Teachers' Association, and was also a member of the National Teachers' Association, and was elected its president, presiding at the meeting held at Washington, D. C. in 1860. After leaving Cleveland he taught at Yonkers, N. Y. He reorganized the schools of Cincinnati and Cleveland, and his ideas in conducting schools have been largely adopted in the north and west. In the course of his life he gave a great deal of study to school architecture, and especially to warming and ventilating the school rooms, and some of the school buildings in Cincinnati were constructed according to his ideas. He had on exhibit at the Centennial in Philadelphia in 1876, his plan of teaching and of school architecture. The English Commissioners commended his system as superior to any in the United States. The French Commissioners pronounced his designs for school buildings as the best in the country, and he received a medal at the close of the Centennial, as the designer of the best plans for school buildings.

In 1880, he was elected a member of the National Council of Education whose membership is limited to fifty-two—all representative men.

He was a member of the Round Table Convention, composed of five or six educational men who met at stated times to discuss the problems of education more fully than could be done at large meetings.

In connection with Dr. Harris, he prepared a series of school readers for D. Appleton & Company, and within four years after their presentation to the public, their sale had reached nearly three thousand copies. In this work he was ably assisted by his wife, Mrs. Rebecca Rikoff.

For a time after 1888 he had charge of the Felix Alders' school at Yonkers, New York.

Samuel M. Heslet was born July 29, 1826, at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. He was the son of John and Eliza Heslet. He graduated from Washington College, Washington, Pa., in the class of 1853. He was Superintendent of the schools in Portsmouth, Ohio from 1853 to 1856. He enlisted in the army, during the Civil War. He was Captain of Co. "C", 104th regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry from August 27, 1862 to March 11, 1863, when he resigned. He served one term in the Illinois Legislature. He was married July 11, 1855, to Mary M. Stewart. Our subject taught school in Mendota, Ill. in 1889. He died November 21, 1898. The foregoing particulars are furnished by a daughter. He recommended Prof. John Bolton to the Public Schools of Portsmouth, and induced him to locate in Portsmouth.

Emerson E. White, LL. D., was born January 10, 1829, in Mantua, Portage County, Ohio, and spent his boyhood on his father's farm. His father, Jonas White, was a descendant of Captain Thomas White, who settled at Weymouth, Mass., and whose father was a member of the Long Parliament, in England.

From five to ten years of age he attended the district school three months in the summer and three months in the winter, and from ten to sixteen, three months in winter. At seventeen, he taught a winter school in a neighboring district; attended the Twinsburg Academy the following autumn, and taught a district school in Mantua the next winter. In the spring he returned to the Academy to prepare for college. He paid his way by teaching; but stepped one year to take charge of the academy in Mt. Union, Ohio, now Mt. Union College.

He entered the Cleveland University under President Mahan, and soon took extra work as an instructor in mathematics. Early in his senior year he was induced to take charge of one of the Cleveland Grammar schools for two months, in place of the Principal who was ill. He undertook the double work of teaching a city school, and also two University classes out of school hours. At the close of his services he was appointed as Principal of a new Grammar school to be opened in February. He accepted this position, but resigned it at the close of his third year, but was at once appointed Principal of the Central High School at an increased salary. He had entertained the idea of studying law, but gave it up at this point and continued in the Grammar schools of Cleveland, in which he introduced new and effective methods of teaching which awakened interest and secured rapid progress.

In 1856, he resigned his position in the Cleveland High School to accept the Superintendency of the Public Schools of Portsmouth, Ohio, a position which he filled with ability and success. He introduced reforms in teaching years in advance of prevailing methods. He accepted this position on the expressed condition that he was to be intrusted with the internal management of the schools, including the assignment of teachers, the course of study, the grading and promotion of pupils, etc., and that he should not be subject to the annoyance of an annual election. The schools were thoroughly and wisely reorganized. But the Board of 1860, did not appreciate his labors, and early in 1861, he removed to Columbus, Ohio, and took charge of the Ohio Educational Monthly, which he purchased. He conducted the journal for fifteen years, making it the leading educational journal of the country. In 1870, he published a national edition of the monthly with the title of National Teacher, a journal of wide circulation and great influence.

In 1863, Mr. White was appointed State Commissioner of Common Schools of Ohio. During the period he held this office he was instrumental in securing important legislation for the improvement of the schools. The more notable measures were the law which created the existing institute system of Ohio, the law creating the State Board of Examiners, and the provision requiring all teachers to possess an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching.

In 1865, he prepared a codified edition of the school law, with opinions, directions, etc., the whole constituting a valuable manual for school officers. His last service as State School Commissioner was to recommend a plan of organizing the teachers of the State for Normal training.

He retired from the Commissionership in 1866, and the succeeding ten years were spent in conducting his two educational journals, and in lecturing in teachers' institutes in Ohio and other states.

In 1876, he was called to the Presidency of Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, and continued in this position seven years, during which time the number of students increased seven fold.

He resigned in 1883, and removed to Cincinnati and has since been engaged in literary work. He now resides in Columbus.

Dr. White has been prominent for many years in State and National Educational Associations. He was president of the Ohio Teachers' Association in 1863; of the National Superintendents' Association in 1868; of the National Educational Association in 1872; and of the National Council of Education in 1884 and 1885.

He has taken high rank as a writer, especially on education, and has made some of the ablest addresses on that subject. He had also written a number of text books for the schools. In Cleveland he prepared a "Class Book on Geography," which had a large sale. At the age of twenty-eight he wrote the "Bryant and Stratton Commercial Arithmetic," and in 1870, issued school arithmetics. The "New Century Edition" of this arithmetic brings these books up to the best present practice. In 1894, he edited the "Elements of Geometry", and in 1896, prepared his "School Algebra". His "Elements of Pedagogy," issued in 1886, was received with great favor, being declared by competent judges to be "the ablest treatise on the subject written by an American."

His work on School Management, issued in 1893, was at once recognized as a work of the highest practical value. He has just completed a new work on the "Art of Teaching".

He is the man who suggested the establishment of a National Bureau of Education at Washington.

In 1890, he prepared for the National Bureau of Education a monograph on "Promotions and Examinations in the Graded Schools." A second edition was issued in 1898.

He was a prominent layman in the Presbyterian church. He was sent in 1877 and again in 1896, as a lay delegate to the World's Presbyterian Council held respectively in Edinburg and Glasgow, Scotland, and in 1890, he was appointed by the General Assembly a member of the committee to revise "the confession of faith." He has been for years the President of the Board of Trustees of Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati.

He received the degree of A. M. from the Western Reserve University, and the degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by the Indiana State University.

He married in 1853 to Mary Ann Sabin of Hudson, Ohio, by whom he had five children. His son, Albert E., is now governor of West Virginia.

His life has been a succession of high achievements and honors.

John Bolton

was born, November 4, 1820, near Hagerstown, Maryland. His father's name was John Bolton, Sr. His grandfather came from Ireland, and served in the Navy of the Colonies during the Revolution. His mother's maiden name was Eve Eisaminger of German descent. She died when our subject was about two years old. About 1827 or 1828 he came, with his father and brother William, west and settled near Connellsville, Pa., which place he has always looked upon as his home. His early advantages for education were limited, as there were no public schools and few private schools. It was necessary for him at an early age to make his own living, which he did by working in a wool factory on the farm, and finally at the saddler's trade at which he served the regular time as an apprentice, according to the customs of the time. Wishing to fit himself for common business, when he was twenty-two years old, he attended a private school. His object was to improve himself in the common branches and especially in arithmetic, in which he felt himself very deficient. This he did in a term of three months. His curiosity to know something more of the higher branches led him to go to school for four months more in which time he studied Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometry, etc. This completed his schooling, which amounted to not more than two years. He worked at his trade and studied his books until 1850, when books and leather parted company, and he went to teaching in New Haven and Connellsville earning $20 to $30 per month. In December, 1855, he came to Portsmouth, Ohio, at a salary of $600 a year, and it was through the recommendation of his friend Samuel Heslett who had hailed from the same region, and who was then Superintendent of the Portsmouth schools. Here our subject taught until 1863, when he became Superintendent and served in this capacity until September, 1872. In November, 1872, he went to Cleveland, Ohio, as a teacher of Chemistry and Physics in the Old Central High School. In 1876, he was transferred to the West High School in which he has been ever since. Before he came to Ohio he had lost but three weeks by sickness; and never lost a single day in the seventeen years he was engaged in Portsmouth by sickness, and only four weeks since going to Cleveland yet he never had a rugged constitution. Those who knew him at twenty never supposed he would live to be thirty. He has taught almost without interruption for over fifty years. He has had great success in teaching; and has always held situations on account of his merit, and not on account of any pull. He was married in March, 1852, to Martha Russell McCune, a daughter of a well-to-do farmer near Connellsville, Pa. A teacher in his 82nd year in a Cleveland High School does not require a character estimate from any one. Mr. Bolton is revered and loved by his old friends in Portsmouth and they will be glad to know he is as highly esteemed in Cleveland as he was in Portsmouth.

Joseph F. Lukens was born at Upper Falls, Baltimore County, Maryland, December 11, 1838. His father was Benjamin C. Lukens. His mother's maiden name was Louisa Smith. His father came to Ohio in 1839, and the boyhood and youth of his son, Joseph, were spent in Noble County, Ohio. He had a good common school education. He enlisted as a private soldier in Company D, 85th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, June 5, 1862, for a period of three months, and was transferred to Company K 87th, July 22, 1862. He was mustered out with the Company, October 3, 1862. He was in the engagement at Harper's Ferry during his service. He cast his first vote in 1860, at Athens, Ohio, for Valentine B. Horton for Congress, and for Abraham Lincoln for President. He took a college course at the Ohio University at Athens, and graduated in 1866. He received a High School State Certificate in 1867 and in 1869 received the degree of A. M. from Ohio University. In 1877, he was admitted to the Bar of Ohio, at Akron. In the same year he was a Republican candidate for State Commissioner of Common Schools, but was defeated with the entire state ticket. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a ruling Elder. He was married near Crawfordsville, Indiana, August 3, 1868, to Miss Eliza Trout. He has one son, born in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1872, who is now First Lieutenant of the 40th United States Infantry and detailed a professor in the Manila Normal School, where he serves under the Civil Commission. He was Superintendent of Schools at Wooster, Ohio, for one year in 1866. From 1867 to 1872, he was Superintendent of Schools at Kent, Ohio. From 1872 to 1875, he was Superintendent of the Portsmouth Schools and from 1875 to 1891, he was Superintendent of the schools at Lebanon, Ohio. From 1899 to 1901, he was Principal of the Normal Department of the Collegiate Institute, at Jackson, Kentucky. He is now manager of the Warren County Record.

Middleton Summerfield Campbell was born in Virginia, August 4, 1838, and died in Cleveland, Ohio, April 19, 1889. He came to Ohio in 1841 and remained a resident of this state until his death. He attended the district schools and spent his youth on his father's farm. He attended the Ohio University, at Athens and graduated in 1865. He received the degree of A. M. from the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1871. He entered at once upon the profession of a teacher. He filled the following positions: Public Schools at Circleville, Ohio, one year; Principal of the High School in Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1866 to 1875; Superintendent of the Public Schools of Portsmouth, Ohio, from 1875 to 1879; Principal of the Youngstown High School from 1879 to 1883; Principal of the Central High School, Cleveland, Ohio, from 1883 to his death. In all these positions he achieved success. He was entirely devoted to his profession, very enthusiastic in it and in the judgment of all his contemporaries was successful. He was a prominent member of the Methodist Church both in Portsmouth, Ohio, and Cleveland, Ohio, and has a memorial window in the Epworth Church on Wilson Avenue, in Cleveland.

William Miller Friesner was born January 21, 1851, near North Berne, Fairfield County, Ohio. His parents were Abraham Setz Friesner and Eliza Jane Miller. They died when he was young and he was reared by his grand-parents near Lancaster. As a boy and youth, he worked on a farm and attended the district school of the neighborhood until he was eighteen years of age. He entered an academy at Pleasantville where he fitted himself for college, teaching school during each winter and thus paying his way. He entered the Junior class of the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, in September 1873 and graduated in 1875, with honors. During a portion of his senior year, he held a position as Tutor. In July, 1875, he was elected Principal of the High School, in Portsmouth, Ohio, and in 1879, was elected Superintendent and served as such until 1881. He was Superintendent of Schools in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, from 1881 to 1885. In 1885, he was elected Superintendent of Schools in Los Angeles, California, which position he held until 1893, when he resigned on account of loss of his health. He was married December 16, 1886, to Miss Addie Belle Towell, daughter of James F. Towell, at that time a resident of Los Angeles. They had two children; Esther, who died at the age of two years, and James Towell Friesner. Mr. Friesner died August 1, 1894. He was a man of high Masonic standing, having reached the 32 degree in the Scottish Rite, and a Knight Templar. The anniversary of his birthday, January 21, 1895, was observed by 12,000 children and 400 teachers of the public schools of Los Angeles, as a memorial of their teacher and friend. The great hall where the teachers and friends assembled in the evening was decorated by the children with thousands of calla lilies, roses and smilax. Addresses were delivered by many of his Principals who had served under him, by teachers, and members of the School Board. Letters of condolence from old friends, among whom were these, his classmates: Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, President of the Armour Institute, Chicago, and Rev. John C. Jackson, of Columbus, Ohio. The proceedings, with all the addresses and letters, were published in a handsome Memorial Volume for distribution among his teachers and friends.

James Andrew Irwin Lowes was born September 3, 1816, near Cincinnati, Ohio. He graduated at Miami University in 1841, and directly after that studied for the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, and was licensed as such in 1843. In 1846, he located at South Salem, Ross County, Ohio, and conducted the celebrated Academy at that place for twenty-one years, until 1867, in which year he went to Oxford and remained there as a teacher in the preparatory school until 1872. After that he went to Ripley, Ohio, where he was a teacher and minister to the Presbyterian Church. In 1879 to 1881, he was Superintendent of schools at New Richmond, Ohio. From 1881 to 1883, he was Superintendent of the public schools of Portsmouth, Ohio, and thereafter during the remainder of his life resided in Portsmouth.

Prof. Lowes was three times married, but was a widower at the time he came to Portsmouth. On January 30, 1882, he was married to Miss Fanny Gertrude Switzer, who survives him. He was a member of the City Board of School Examiners for a number of years.

In politics, Prof. Lowes was a Whig and afterwards a Republican. He was a Representative Presbyterian, both as a member of the Church and as a minister. He was a master of the Latin tongue and had as extensive a knowledge of that language and its literature as any of his co-temporaries.

Prof. Lowes believed in maintaining the dignity of his profession as teacher and minister and did so. As a gentleman, scholar and a model citizen he was respected by all who had the honor of his acquaintance.

Thomas Vickers, B. D.,

was born in Otley, Yorkshire, England. His father, Joseph Vickers, and his mother, Grace Chaffer, were both natives of the same town. His paternal grandfather, Jacob, and his great-grandfather, Thomas, were born in the same locality. The family is of Danish origin, and its history runs back to the invasions of the north of England by the Northmen in the ninth century. The more immediate ancestors of the subject of this sketch were farmers and shoemakers. His parents came to this country in 1849, when he was a child. He received his early education in the Boston public schools; later he received his academic and theological education at the Unitarian Theological School at Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he remained four years and was graduated. He then went to Germany and spent four years at the University of Heidelberg and one half year at the University of Zuerich in Switzerland, engaged in the study of philology, philosophy, history and educational theory and methods. His letters of introduction to some of the most eminent professors in Heidelberg, procured him admission to their families and gave him a social position not usual among students. He thus became intimately acquainted with Professor Edward Zeller, the famous historian of Greek Philosophy, Professor George Gottfried Gervinus, the author of the best known history of German Literature, Professor George Weber, the Historian, and Rector of the Hoehere Buergerschule, and Richard Rothe, the most eminent theologian of his time. Prof. Vickers' philological and linguistic studies included Greek, Latin, Hebrew, German including the German dialects, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, French, Spanish, Italian and Portuguese. He has a speaking knowledge of the principal modern languages, and a reading knowledge of them all, excepting the Slavonic tongues. His instructor in Hebrew was the famous orientalist, Weil, who spent five years disguised as an Arab among the Arabian tribes for the purpose of studying their language, customs and religion.

A year before Prof. Vickers returned from Europe, he had accepted the pastorate of the First Congregational (Unitarian) Church in Cincinnati, which, beginning with January, 1867, he held for seven years. In the last year of this pastorate (1873) he was elected Professor of the German Language in the first faculty of the University of Cincinnati, and afterward, in the same year, Chief Librarian of the Public Library of Cincinnati. He entered upon his duties as Librarian, January 1, 1874, when the present building was nearing completion. The task fell to him of re-classifying and recataloguing the entire library, and of re-organizing it in accordance with the larger demand to be made upon it both by scholars and students, and by the general reading public. His success in all these respects was almost phenomenal and attracted attention among professional librarians both in this country and in Europe. Dr. Richard Garnett, the Librarian of the British Museum, took especial occasion, at the International Congress of Librarians held in London in 1877, to commend Professor Vickers' system of departmental catalogues as "eminently sensible and practical." Until his resignation of the office of Librarian, he was unanimously re-appointed every year, and had entire control of more than fifty assistants and of all purchases of books. He was twice sent to Europe by the Board of Managers in the interest of the Library.

On his return from Europe in 1877, Professor Vickers was elected acting President of the University of Cincinnati, which with the consent of the library authorities, he accepted. The following year, 1878, he was elected permanently as President of the University and Professor of History. By an agreement between the two governing boards, he accepted the university position, but still continued the work of supervision in the library. At the end of the following year, December 31, 1879, having found the duties of the two positions entirely too burdensome, he resigned the Librarianship. While in charge of the Cincinnati Public Library he instituted many reforms in the management and was one of the originators of the movement, since become popular, for the technical education of librarians. The "charging system" invented by Professor Vickers, was exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago and pronounced the best in use.

Professor Vickers took up the University work with the enthusiasm and vigor for which he is known, doing far more than his share of the actual teaching and at the same time organizing the courses of study in the Academic Department, the Art School, and the Astronomical Observatory. In the two latter departments there had been no faculty, which had occasioned a good deal of friction between the teachers; this soon disappeared under his management. When the Art School was separated from the University and united with the Cincinnati Art Museum, the Hon. M. E. Ingalls, the President of the Art School Board, said, at the final conference with the University Directors, that they would be thoroughly satisfied if they succeeded in managing the schools as well as President Vickers had done.

Besides three regular courses in History, the teaching of Professor Vickers in the University embraced at various times lectures on Pedagogy, on the science of Government, on the elements of jurisprudence, and also instruction in German, Spanish, and Italian. He was also at one time a member of the Cincinnati Board of Education, and also, for many years, a member of the Board of School Examiners.

In April, 1884, Professor Vickers resigned both his positions in the University to take effect at the end of the academic year. For four years succeeding he was mainly occupied with literary work. In the seventies he did a great deal of editorial writing for the Cincinnati Commercial; he was a contributor to the New York Nation; and edited the department of foreign literature in the Christian Quarterly Review, which the New York Independent characterized as fully equal to that of any of the English or American quarterlies. In 1868, he published a life of Grant in German, and in the same year his celebrated controversy with Archbishop Purcell, which called forth much comment both in this country and in Germany, appeared in book form, with an appendix containing the famous Encyclical Letter of Pius IX and its Syllabus of Modern Errors; in Latin, with a parallel English translation by Professor Vickers. He has also published a great many educational addresses both in English and German.

In 1888, Professor Vickers came to Portsmouth as Superintendent of Public Schools, which office he retained for thirteen years. For a part of this time, he was a member of both County and City Board of School Examiners. He aimed to bring the schools to the highest point of efficiency and succeeded. He reorganized the High School and made it one of the best in the state. He also sought by giving instruction to the teachers in various languages to inspire them with a desire for wider study and a more general culture. His chief aim, however, and his ambition, was to keep in touch with the work of each individual child from the moment it entered school until it was graduated from the High School, or had withdrawn before reaching that point. He was able to do this by means of an adjustable alphabetical system of records which he invented and copyrighted. It may be truly said that Professor Vickers possessed more linguistic accomplishments than any other who was ever at the head of the Portsmouth schools, and in general scholarship and efficiency he led them all.

In 1901, Professor Vickers was elected Superintendent of the schools in Mansfield, Ohio; but was not a candidate for re-election, in 1902. He still retains his residence in Mansfield, although he owns a fine home on North Waller street in Portsmouth. He has been twice married, the first time while he was still a student in Germany; the second time in Cincinnati, in 1884, to Leonora Oppenheimer. The children of the first marriage were: George Theodore, at present Assistant Prosecutor of the Pleas in Jersey City, formerly an attache of the Harvard Observatory at Arequipa, South America; Robert Frederick, who holds a clerical position in New York City; Grace Elizabeth, the wife of Wilhelm Doering, a well known artist in Berlin, Germany; and Victoria Katharina, who also lives in Berlin. The children of the second marriage were: Leonhard, who died in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1892, at the age of seven years; Helen Judith, born in 1888; and Alwyn, born in 1891.

Professor Vickers was an old time abolitionist, and personally acquainted with William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Samuel May, Gerritt Smith, and most of the other prominent anti-slavery people. When he went to Europe to study, he took with him a circular letter from William Lloyd Garrison introducing him to all the leading anti-slavery men and women in England, Ireland and Scotland.

The parents of Professor Vickers, and also his son Leonhard, are buried in Greenlawn Cemetery, Portsmouth, Ohio; his father having died in 1892, and his mother in 1902.

John Imboden Hudson was born in Staunton, Augusta County, Virginia, April 17, 1863. He was educated in the common schools of that city and graduated from the High School in 1880. He entered the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Virginia, in September, 1881, and remained there four years. He was graduated from that Institution July 4, 1885, as Senior Captain of the Corps of Cadets and ranking third in a class of 25. He took service with the Maysville & Big Sandy Railroad (now the C. & O.), as an Assistant Civil Engineer and rose to the position of Resident Engineer. In 1887, he was appointed Resident Engineer by the Ohio & Northwestern R. R. Co. under Col. John D. Letcher, and later he was Resident Engineer of the Southern Railroad. From 1890 to 1893, he taught Civil Engineering and Military Tactics at the Ohio Military Institute at College Hill, Ohio. From 1893 to 1896, he was with the Kentucky Training School at Danville, Ky. He entered the Portsmouth High School as Principal in the fall of 1896, and held that position until April, 1901, when he was chosen Superintendent. He was re-elected for 1902 and 1903. He was City Civil Engineer of Portsmouth for a short time, and a member of the Flood Defense Committee. He has received the degrees of "Bachelor of Science" and "Civil Engineering," and has been a member of the City Board of School Examiners for five years. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Doty, daughter of Theodore Doty, September 3, 1891, and their children are: Edith Mae, George Baird, Harold Doty (died in infancy), John Imboden and Howard Doty. In politics, Mr. Hudson is a Democrat. As Superintendent of the Portsmouth Schools, he is active, energetic and progressive. He has managed the schools with as great efficiency as any of his predecessors.

James H. Poe

was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, June 6, 1822. He was a descendant from the same family as the pioneers Adam and Andrew Poe. His family was connected with that of the poet, Edgar Allen Poe. In 1838 he began teaching school near Chillicothe, Ohio, at $8.50 per month in a rude log cabin, and he taught from that time until failing eyesight compelled him to cease.

He was married March 11, 1847, to Miss Lucy A. Taylor, who survived him. They had five children, of whom three daughters, Sadie, Mattie and Ella are still living. In 1851 he came to Portsmouth, Ohio, as a teacher, and remained until 1867. In Portsmouth, he was a District Superintendent and had charge of the lower Fourth street building.

On returning to Chillicothe in 1867, he took charge of the eastern building and held it till 1875, as Principal. He then opened a private school on Hickory street. He kept that up until compelled by his health to give it up. He then taught summer review schools in the summer vacation for the benefit of teachers. He was school examiner for Ross County for several years. He died February 21, 1888. He possessed the ability to interest his pupils in their work. He had a rare faculty of imparting instruction. He was a man of fine physical appearance and presence until broken down by disease.

Elona White Rankin was born in Littleton, New Hampshire, about 1815. Her father was Gen. David Rankin and her mother's maiden name was Persis Daniels. The family consisted of seven daughters and one son. About 1843 the family came to the French Grant. Miss Rankin taught school in Kentucky two years, and taught in the public schools of the town of Portsmouth about fourteen years, one year of which was in a private school. She married Alexander LaCroix, father of Professor LaCroix. She died in 1891, at the age of seventy-six, and is interred in Woodland Cemetery at Ironton, Ohio. Her father, David Rankin, is buried at the Haverhill burying ground, also her mother. Her grandfather Rankin came from Scotland. She was regarded as one of the best of Portsmouth teachers and taught High School branches for many years.

Mrs. Mary Ann Mulligan is one of the veteran teachers of Portsmouth, now living in honored retirement, waiting for the better country out of sight. She was born in Portsmouth, December 22, 1838, and has never lived elsewhere. Her father, Edward Bannon, was a native of Ireland, as was her mother whose maiden name was Bridget Dervin.

Our subject began as a pupil in the Portsmouth schools in 1845, and attended there until 1854. The last four years in school she was a pupil of Miss Rankin, a famous teacher.

In 1856, at the age of eighteen, she became a teacher in the public schools, and was such thereafter until 1891, a period of thirty-five years. The best part of her life she gave to the cause of public education. She was born with a gift for teaching, and it never failed her. When she began she had one hundred and thirteen pupils. E. E. White, Superintendent, visited her room when she had that number, and supposed she could do nothing but keep order, but he found that she taught them and did it well. She never had any trouble with her pupils. While in her early years she used the rod, but she did it with such judgment that her pupils, now men, are thankful she did. In no case of discipline did she ever have to call in the Superintendent.

She began her teaching in the Lower Fourth Street Building, and was promoted from time to time, without any solicitation on her part, until 1867, when she reached the "A" Grammar, in which grade she taught until her retirement.

On August 27, 1867, she married Edward Mulligan and fully intended to retire from the schools. Prof. John Bolton had just accepted the Superintendency of the Schools and felt that her school would be disorganized if she retired. He prevailed on her to remain, and she did so at his urgent entreaty. She remained until June, 1891.

All those who have been her pupils have an affection for her amounting to reverence. None of them ever speak of her except in terms of the highest regard. She always had the highest confidence and regard of the different Superintendents and of her fellow teachers.

Her husband died on December 31, 1895, much regretted, and since then she has lived on Gay street in dignified retirement, honored by all who know her.

The editor of this work is glad and proud that it is his privilege to write of her worth as a woman and a teacher, though he has not the command of language sufficient to do the subject justice. His only son, now long deceased, was one of her pupils, and he speaks from his heart.

The question is often asked "What can a woman do?" Mrs. Mulligan's whole life is one of the best answers to that question.

The greatest work any one can do is for the young, to teach them so they will make excellent men and women. Who has given more of her life to that work than Mrs. Mulligan?

Mrs. Mulligan is a devout communicant of the Church of the Holy Redeemer, and the writer believes she is as true and devoted a Christian woman as has ever lived. From childhood to the present day, when in the city and well, she has attended matins at the church every day in the year, and expects to do so as long as she lives. She has lived a life of usefulness and duty and her history is an object lesson to all who know her.

She tells many interesting reminiscences of her early days of teaching. During the early part of the civil war, Col. J. H. Allen was Superintendent of the Schools. He was a Union man but his wife was a rebel. One day, his daughter, a pupil of Mrs. Mulligan's, and a most beautiful girl, lovely as a dream of heaven, came into the school room, with a tiny rebel flag pinned to her breast. The other girls saw it at a glance, flew at her and tore it off. She remembers Deborah Chandler was foremost in the fray. Mrs. Mulligan relates that when the news came of the surrender of Vicksburg, she had the bell of the Fourth street school house rung continuously all day.

When she entered the corps of teachers, Mrs. Eliza Glidden was still among them as well as Mrs. Thompson, mother of Mrs. Henry Hall, her daughter, Julia and Mrs. Rigdon, mother of Mrs. Thomas S. Hall, and grandmother of Miss Lucy W. Hall, a teacher in the High School.

Mrs. Mulligan has lived to see the results of her labors in the men and women about her, and long may she enjoy on this earth, the satisfaction and comfort of all duties well done.

Mrs. Mary T. Ashton.

Her maiden name was Hartzoff, and her native place was New Castle, Pa. Her husband was William J. Ashton, a member of the 100th Pennsylvania Infantry, known as the "Roundheads" in the Civil War. Soon after the Civil War, he went South and died there. His father was Edwin Ashton of Edinburg, Pa., a brother of Joseph Ashton of Portsmouth, Ohio, and a son of Major Joseph Ashton of the Revolutionary War, who has a sketch herein.

Mrs. Ashton came to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1863, and taught nine years in the Portsmouth schools; three years of this time, she was the Principal of the old Second street school building. She went to Cleveland in 1874, and was made Principal of the building in the Iron ward of that city. She served five years and four months in that position and accepted the work of training teacher in connection with the Normal Training School, where she is occupied now, after 22 years of continuous work. Her two children were born in Portsmouth, and were ten and eight years of age, when she left there. Her daughter, Martha Bolton died when 28 years of age, and her son, Edwin Percy Ashton, is in Detroit, Mich., in an extensive business in electric supplies.

One of the Superintendents of the Cleveland Schools says this of Mrs. Ashton's work: "Mrs. Mary Ashton has been in Cleveland public schools for nearly a quarter of a century. Her work has been strong, broad and efficient. Her influence on her pupils and the teachers she trains is elevating, ennobling and lasting. Mrs. Ashton is a woman of strong and positive characteristics, and at the same time her heart goes out in love and tenderness toward all; and especially toward children who are fortunate enough to be in the school rooms of which she has charge. In the social circles of the city, she is highly esteemed and her influence here is far-reaching and always womanly. She stands for the best things morally, spiritually, mentally and physically.

Miss Emma McFarlin, now of Topeka, Kansas, was one of the most efficient of Portsmouth teachers. She began teaching in the fall of 1868 in the "C" Primary in the old Library Building on the corner of Fifth and Court. She was promoted about the middle of the second year following to the "B" Primary in the Second street building. The next year she was promoted to the "A" Primary. She taught in that grade some five or six years and was promoted to the "D" Grammar. From the "D" Grammar she was given the "D" Primary school and taught that until she went to Topeka, Kansas, in 1885, making eighteen years continuous service in the public schools. During all this time, her relations with the Superintendent, the School Board and her fellow teachers were the most cordial. She was very successful in discipline, in teaching and in the promotion of her pupils.

Miss Emily Ball

is a native of Portsmouth. Her father was Wm. Henry Ball, resident on Third street. She entered the schools as a pupil in 1860, and graduated in 1872. For two and one-half months she taught as a substitute in the Portsmouth schools in the fall of 1872; and three months of the following spring, at the Red School House. In the fall of 1873, she began as a teacher in the Portsmouth schools in the "C" Primary on Fourth street. She was three years in that grade, then was promoted to the "A" Primary on Second street, in which she taught the English branches of that grade and the Arithmetic of the "B" Primary for two years. She went into the "D" Grammar on Union street, and taught there three years, and then one year in the "C" Grammar. She was promoted to the "B" Grammar, and after teaching there one year was dropped back to the "C" Grammar, on account of the dropping of an extra school. She remained in this grade two years and then was appointed to the "B" Grammar and "A" Grammar, but never taught. She went into the High School in the fall of 1885, and has been there since. She was Principal of the Union street building from 1879 to 1885, and Principal of the High School three years, and she was re-elected Principal in 1901, which position she now holds. The most of her labor in the High School has been in teaching Mathematics and Astronomy, but she has taught English and American Literature, English Composition, English History and Civics. When she began, there were three teachers in the High School; there are now six. At the beginning of her teaching in the High School, she taught 54 pupils out of 108.

Miss Ball enjoys the distinction of holding a High School Life Certificate from the State, and at present the only one in the corps of teachers having such. She is most highly esteemed as a teacher and disciplinarian and enjoys the confidence of the Board of Education and the parents of her pupils to the highest degree.

Miss Charlotte M. Lewis, one of the most successful grammar teachers came to Portsmouth in 1854. She was a native of the State of New York. She obtained her entire education in the schools of Portsmouth. She began teaching thirty years ago in the "C" Primary. She was promoted to the "B" Primary and from there directly to the "D" Grammar, and from there was promoted regularly into the "A" Grammar, where she is now teaching. She taught one year under Professor John Bolton, and has been continually in the schools from that time; and has never lost more than a week, and that on account of sick relatives.

Mrs. Pauline Ashton McKeown was born in Pennsylvania, near Edenburg, twenty-eight miles from Pittsburg. Her father was Joseph Ashton, well known in Portsmouth, the son of Major Joseph Ashton, of the Revolutionary War who has a separate sketch herein. Her mother was Matilda Kennedy, a sister of Milton Kennedy, a woman of strong mind and active piety. Our subject attended the public schools of Portsmouth, beginning as a pupil under Superintendent E. E. White, and belonged to the High School class which graduated in 1860. Later she went to Parker's Academy in Clermont County and finished her education. She took naturally to teaching and found employment in the schools of Pike, Scioto, Ross and Highland Counties and also in the district schools of Franklin County, Indiana. In 1874, she took up the work of teaching in the Public Schools of Portsmouth under the superintendency of Prof. J. F. Lukens. From that time to the present, she has been employed practically continuously in the Portsmouth schools, which fact is of itself a tribute to her ability as a teacher. She was Principal of the Second street building from 1877 to 1882 and of the Union street building from 1882 to 1887. From 1887 to 1889, she was in the latter building and since 1889, she has been Principal of the Union street building. She succeeded Mrs. Mulligan in the "A" Grammar grade in 1891, when the latter retired. Mrs. McKeown is a good disciplinarian and possesses the desirable faculty of being able to get out of a pupil the best there is in him. She is well known in educational circles throughout the state and attends many of the state gatherings and has submitted papers of recognized value. On the 7th of March, 1873, she was married to John H. McKeown, of Brookville, Indiana. He died April 2, 1891. She has a son, Emmitt McKeown, a well known young man of business, and with a fine record as a soldier in the Spanish War. Mrs. McKeown is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church and active in all movements, social, economical and religious, that look to the uplifting and betterment of the race. She keeps abreast with the times. She is a reader and observer, a careful thinker, an interesting conversationalist and her opinions are sought on many subjects. While teaching is her business, while she loves her work and is enthusiastic over it, she does not permit it to absorb her life. She is interested in much outside of her school work, in short in everything that makes for the betterment of herself and all about her.

Margaret Tracy Ricker

graduated from the Portsmouth High School in 1889. In 1889 and 1890 she was a substitute teacher in the Portsmouth public schools. She taught the "C" Primary for one year from September, 1890. For ten years after she taught in the "D" Primary. She was elected a teacher in the Portsmouth High School to take effect September, 1901, and has taught "D" English, "C" History and German and "A" Arithmetic.

Miss Louise Dever is a graduate of Smith College, now Holyoke; North Hampton, Massachusetts. In June, 1901, she was elected teacher in the Portsmouth High School and taught Physics, Chemistry and Civil Government. She has been re-elected for 1902-3.

Mrs. Ida Frances McColm, one of the Portsmouth corps of teachers began her career as such in the Union street building in 1887. She taught two years each in the "B" Primary and "A" Primary and "A" Grammar. She taught three years in the "C" Grammar and has taught to the present time six years in the "B" Grammar. She has done a great deal of permanent valuable work in the schools, and is highly esteemed for her qualities as a teacher.

Miss Mattie Lynn

is one of Portsmouth's most experienced teachers. She was a graduate of the Portsmouth High School in 1877, and entered the corps of teachers January, 1882, beginning in the "C" Primary, taking the place of a teacher who was married. She taught in this grade one year and a half, in the "B" Primary two years, "A" Primary two years, "D" Grammar two years, "C" Grammar three years and has taught eight years in the "B" Grammar where she is now engaged. She has taught in the lower Fourth street building, in Second street, in the Union street building and in Sixth street. She has always been successful in the maintenance of discipline and inducing her pupils to study, and has quite a record in grading them in each year. Her per centum of pupils passed each year has been as high as any teacher who ever taught in the schools.

Miss Kate Comins

is a graduate of the Portsmouth High School in the year 1885. She was the valedictorian of her class. After her graduation, she taught at the Children's Home for three years, then after that she was appointed one of the Portsmouth corps of teachers, beginning in the "B" Primary, where she spent two years. She taught in the "D" Primary two years, and afterwards in the "D" Grammar for eighteen months. The test of a teacher's capacity and ability is in an ungraded school, and she was a teacher in them for some time. She spent three years and one-half in the "C" Grammar. She taught seven months in the High School in 1901, and is at present teaching in the "B" Grammar. She has attended the training school for teachers at the Normal University of Michigan and at the Harvard University at Boston, Mass. She is a great student in her profession, and is recognized as one of the ablest and most ambitious teachers ever in the city schools.

Miss Iza Abbott,

now Mrs. William H. Dressler, entered the Portsmouth public schools in 1889, in the "C" Primary grade and remained in the corps eleven years, and at the time when she left the schools in 1891, she was teacher in the "C" Grammar. She was regarded as one of the most faithful and efficient teachers of the City. She was married January 27, 1901, and has one son, Donald.

Miss Kate L. Vigus is a graduate of the Portsmouth High Schools. She began teaching in the "C" Primary grade and taught there from two to three years. She was promoted until she reached the "D" Grammar grade and taught there three years, and was assigned to the "D" Primary where she taught until 1902, when she was transferred to the "D" Grammar. She was made Principal of the Fourth Street Building in 1886, and has held that position ever since. She has written a number of literary articles for magazines which were accepted and for which she was paid. She is the author of two Christmas Cantatas, "The Christmas Waifs" and the "King's Message" for which she was paid, and which have been published in book form with other Christmas matter.

Miss Nettie C. Noel

graduated from the Portsmouth High School as valedictorian in 1879. She was first employed as a teacher in the "A" Primary, in 1892. She taught in this grade for seven years and was then transferred to the ungraded schools which she taught for two years. In 1902, she was transferred to the "D" Grammar grade.

Miss Edith Royse

graduated from the Portsmouth High School in 1896. The year after she served as clerk in the office of the Superintendent of the City schools. In 1898, she taught in the "B" Primary, in 1899, in the "A" Primary, and in 1900, 1901 and 1902, in the "D" Grammar.

Mrs. Nannie Cookes was educated in the Portsmouth schools, to the third grade in the High School. At that time she obtained a certificate to teach in Kentucky in the year 1881, and taught there one year. From 1882 to 1884, she taught in Plain City, Madison County, Ohio. In November, 1884, she was married to Charles F. Cookes. In 1890, she began teaching in the Portsmouth Schools with the "C" Primary, and has taught there ever since. She has taught the "A", "B", "C" and "D" Primary, and for the last five years has taught the "D" Primary. She is Principal of the Officere Street School Building. In her methods as a teacher, she is capable and thorough, and her services are highly appreciated by the Board of Education, the Superintendent and by the parents of her pupils.

Miss Mary Bryan

has been teaching in the public schools since September, 1894. From 1894 to 1897, she taught the "C" Primary, from that time on she has been a teacher in the "B" Primary. She resigned in 1902.

Mrs. Ella Gable,

nee Miss Ella Bishop, graduated from the Portsmouth High School in 1876. She taught that fall in Willard, Kentucky. In 1877 she became a teacher in the Portsmouth schools, entering the "C" Primary. From that time until 1894 she taught in Portsmouth. In December, 1894, she was married to Wm. N. Gable, of Hartford City, Indiana. In three years she was left a widow, with one son Paul, now aged six years. She did not re-enter the schools until 1902, when she served as a substitute. She has recently been elected to the ungraded school for 1902 and 1903. From 1877 to 1885 she taught in all of the Primary grades and in the "D" Grammar. She taught the ungraded school for the four years previous to her marriage. Mrs. Gable has shown herself to be one of the most efficient and able teachers in the corps, and has been so regarded by all of the Superintendents under whom she has served, and by the parents and guardians of her pupils.

Miss Ella Kiefer

is among the most efficient and successful teachers. She graduated from the Portsmouth High School in June, 1889, and began teaching in September following in the "B" Primary grade, where she taught two years. She taught in the "A" Primary two years when she was promoted to the "D" Primary where she has since taught. Her work has always been highly commended by the Superintendents under whom she has taught.

THE PRESS.

Early Newspapers.

THE PORTSMOUTH GAZETTE was the first newspaper venture in Portsmouth. It appeared August 5, 1818. It was published by Abott & Chaney, and continued until March 17, 1819.

THE PORTSMOUTH GAZETTE AND LAWRENCE ADVERTISER was published in Portsmouth on July 30, 1824, by John and James Carnahan. On March 18, 1825, they took in Ebenezer Corwin as a partner. It was published under the name of Corwin and Carnahan. Mr. Corwin was not a printer by profession, but he was a man of considerable ability and good education. He came to Portsmouth in 1812, and located on the Little Scioto River, but afterwards he moved to Portsmouth. It appears that he was a school teacher. He commenced work to edit the paper March 18, 1825, and continued it about six months; and on the 28th of October, 1825, the paper was discontinued. Mr. Corwin died April 9, 1851, in the 63rd year of his age and is interred in the Wheelersburg Cemetery.

THE WESTERN TIMES was started April 18, 1826, by Ebenezer Corwin & Co. The "Co." was probably Julius A. Bingham. The paper was published a year when Mr. Corwin retired, and Julius A. Bingham became sole proprietor, editor and printer.

In the issue of this paper May 11, 1826, Young and Whitcomb advertised in Concord in the woolen business.

July 27, 1826, in this issue was announced the deaths of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, twenty-one days after they occurred. The paper was in mourning. January 7, 1827, the paper announced that there was ice in the Ohio River and had closed. It was announced in the paper as being the first closing of the river by ice.

Mr. Bingham continued the publication of the Times until January 20, 1831, nearly four years. On the 4th of July, 1830, he had a difficulty with Eli Glover, who was then an apprentice in his office. He determined to start another paper and they did start The Portsmouth Courier, about the 1st of January, 1831. Mr. Glover had secured the county printing for Jackson, Lawrence and Pike Counties, and consequently he drove Mr. Bingham out of business and the Western Times suspended. The Portsmouth Courier was edited by Edward Hamilton, the first year. It was opposed to the administration of General Jackson. At the end of the first year, Mr. Hamilton retired from the editorial control of the Courier and Elijah Glover remained as sole proprietor, editor and publisher. He took in his brother, S. G. Glover and Wm. P. Camden as printer. In 1832, he sold out to these parties and retired from the business, but in 1834 he bought back his brother's interest and remained in partnership with Camden until December, 1836, when they sold out to Edward Hamilton and changed the name of the paper to "The Scioto Tribune."

THE SCIOTO TRIBUNE was first issued Dec. 6, 1836. Edward Hamilton, editor and proprietor; Wm. P. Camden, printer. The name was adopted by Mr. Hamilton. In 1839, Silman Clark bought an interest in the "Tribune" and changed the name to "The Portsmouth Tribune." In 1842, Hutchins and Blinn took charge of the editorial department and published it for a short time. Mr. Hamilton succeeded them in that charge of the paper, and continued to edit it until the breaking out of the Mexican War in 1846.

On November 8, 1837, in "The Scioto Tribune," E. Glover advertises a boarding house. Nov. 18, 1837, the President and Common Council gave notice that they would apply to the Legislature for a new Charter and enlarge the boundaries of the town. April 24, 1838, proposals for a Market House was asked, 45x125 feet. May 23, 1838, the river was very low, nearly all of the boats stopped. $1.00 per hundred on goods to Cincinnati; $10.00 cabin passage and $4.00 deck passage. Dec. 29, 1838, it was announced in "The Portsmouth Tribune," that there was a meeting of the citizens to consider a proposed bill for a new town charter. Jan. 26, 1839, a meeting to organize a Public Library was called at the Mayor's Office. March 14, 1839, a bill to incorporate All Saints Church was passed. May 17, 1839, the Episcopal Church Choir was called to meet for rehearsal. Sept. 28, 1839, it was announced that Kiscadden who killed Bowman was convicted of the murder. He hung himself in the jail Monday morning, the 3rd of September before Court convened. April 15, 1841, John M. Anderson advertised to take daguerotypes at the American House. July 22, 1842, photographic miniatures advertised by T. G. Simons and A. W. Page at the U. S. Hotel. On the same date, the Mechanics Institute was called to meet on the 19th of August, 1842, to accept or reject a Charter. On April 26, 1846, James Pursell announced that he would have new goods brought from Philadelphia in seven days. July 2, 1846, the New York Company was building a bridge over the Scioto at Portsmouth. April 20, 1846, there was a great sale of lots advertised in Portsmouth by Francis Campbell.

THE SCIOTO VALLEY POST, a Democratic paper, was started in 1840, by Wm. P. Camden. It was published at intervals until 1845.

THE PORTSMOUTH CLIPPER.—In March, 1845, Anthony Drouillard commenced the publication of the Portsmouth Clipper. Mr. Drouillard continued until August 26, 1845, when he took in Stephen P. Drake as a partner in the enterprise. Mr. Drouillard retired at the end of six months, and Mr. Drake continued it for three years longer.

THE SIMON PURE, was issued in 1844, as a campaign paper by the Portsmouth Tribune, advocating the election of Henry Clay to the Presidency. The principal editors were: W. A. Hutchins and O. F. Moore. Copies of it are still in existence.

THE TRIBUNE and CLIPPER were united March 7, 1848, by Messrs. Clark & Drake, and was published by them as a partnership until November 22, 1849, when it was sold to Mr. John Hanna, who published the paper till November 22, 1850, when Stephen P. Drake re-purchased one-half of the Tribune and Clipper and formed a partnership under the name of Drake & Hanna. December 9, 1850, they commenced the publication of the daily and weekly Tribune and Clipper. Its publication was continued by them up to June 9, 1852, when John Hanna became the sole proprietor. September 9, 1853, he sold the office to Albert McFarland, who continued to publish it up to April 1, 1854, when Daniel McFarland, his brother, associated with him. This continued until April, 1857, when Dan McFarland went to Kansas. In 1861, Dan McFarland returned from the West, and bought the entire paper from his brother. In June, 1867, he sold out to H. R. Smith and David Elick. The firm of Smith & Elick continued to publish the paper until 1868, when A. McFarland bought Mr. Smith's half interest and took charge of the editorial work. The paper was published by McFarland & Elick until January, 1876, when Mr. H. R. W. Smith re-purchased his interest in the Tribune, but sold out again in August to A. McFarland, Jr.

THE SCIOTO VALLEY REPUBLICAN.—In 1852, Stephen P. Drake started the Scioto Valley Republican. It was continued until 1863, when it was stopped. About 1866, it was revived as a semi-weekly by Samuel P. Drake and S. F. Wetmore, but sold by them to C. E. Irwin in 1870 and continued as a weekly until 1876. In that year it was purchased by A. McFarland, Jr., and consolidated with the Tribune, and the firm of McFarland and Elick continued until October 1, 1877, when W. H. Bonsall leased the office and issued the paper in his own name until January 1, 1881. At that time Mr. Elick sold out to Mr. A. McFarland, and the paper was continued by him until January 1, 1883. The Tribune was disposed of to the Portsmouth Printing Company about January 1, 1885. They in turn sold out to Mr. Filmore Musser & Co., in 1893, and its fortune then became very bad. It was sold out November 27, 1897 to Henry J. Thomas of Manchester, Ohio, and since then has been conducted as a weekly Democratic paper. It was originally Whig, afterwards American, afterwards Republican and then Democratic.

THE DEMOCRATIC ENQUIRER, was started April 6, 1848, by James M. Ashley and Edward W. Jordan. They published two issues and then sold out to Captain Cleveland. It was continued until October, 1855. Captain Cleveland changed its name to the Portsmouth Enquirer.

In 1857, Mr. Walter C. Hood started a paper called the Portsmouth Times, which continued until about 1860, when it suspended. In 1871, the present Portsmouth Times was started by Mr. James W. Newman.

The Portsmouth Times

was founded in 1861, by James W. Newman, a young man of twenty-one. It presents an exceptional history from the fact, that it early became prosperous and attained a wide influence and reputation. For full thirty years under the management and editorship of Mr. Newman, it held first place as the leading Ohio weekly, both in mechanical appearance and the high quality of its literary character. In December, 1891, a half interest was bought in the paper by Vallee Harold, who took sole control. In February, 1893, Mr. Harold sold his interest to J. L. Patterson, who assumed the entire direction of the paper. In March, 1894, a stock company was formed, at the head of which was Mr. Patterson, and the publication of the daily begun. Later the latter was succeeded by Mr. Harold as the Editor and Manager of the paper. In over forty years of existence, the Times has enjoyed the singular distinction of having had but three Editors. Of these the two latter still live, while Mr. Newman died on the 1st of January, 1901. So far as circulation was concerned the Daily Times bounded into almost instantaneous popularity. It grew at a rate that may well be accounted phenomenal. It asserts, confidently, that its circulation, in the City of Portsmouth, is, in proportion to population, greater than that which any other paper, with few exceptions, can claim rightfully. It has not attained this success by or through politics, in fact its politics have ever been opposed to that of the community, as it is and has always been a Democratic paper. It has won its way by being what it professes to be, first, a newspaper. Its aim and its end is to print news, and the local news before anything else. It adds to that an honest effort to be truthful and fair, and a disposition to make everyone who deals with it feel he has met a friend, who wishes him well and will help him in so far as it in justice can. The plant of The Times is a modern one, and is housed in its own building. It is set by the Mergenthaler machine and printed on a Cox Duplex press, it being the first one in use between Huntington and Cincinnati.

The Portsmouth Tribune is the pioneer in Scioto County newspaperdom. It was established November 23, 1836, by Edward Hamilton.

During all of the struggles of Portsmouth, the Tribune has been to the front, bearing the burdens of the people, fighting for the advancement of the community and assisting the development of the municipality.

It has shared in the ambitions of the early settlers, and lived to see realized the fondest hopes of those who worked in the pioneer days that a city might be built at the mouth of the Scioto.

The early volumes of the Tribune, yet in a remarkable state of preservation, bear much important history of the early development of Scioto County, and the editor of this volume has drawn considerable upon them for data and information which entered into this work. To this he was heartily welcome, for it seems but proper that volumes of so great value from a historical point, should belong in a measure to the public.

There being no proper place where these files could be preserved, free from mutilation of vandals, alone, prevents the present editor of the Tribune from making a present of them to the public. They bear the history of early encounters with wild beasts and Indians, and tell the life stories of many of our departed worthies.

There are numbers of families in Scioto County into which The Tribune has been going for over half a century. To these families it is welcomed not as political or partisan paper, but as an old friend as a weekly visitor to the household since the earliest days.

Since January 13, 1898, H. J. Thomas has owned, and R. H. Stevenson edited and managed the Tribune. The paper is Democratic, since that date. It was originally Whig, then American, then Republican and now Democratic. It has run the gamut of all political parties.

The present editor is proud of the old, pioneer newspaper, which has furnished the reading matter upon which the youth of Scioto County has nourished its brain now nearly three fourths of a century.

The Portsmouth Blade.

"The Scioto Valley Republican" was started in 1852 by Stephen P. Drake. Suspending operations during a part of the Civil War, its owners all having volunteered, it was revived as a semi-weekly after the War by Samuel P. Drake and I. F. Wetmore. In 1870, it was sold to C. E. Irwin and continued by him as a "Weekly" until the Centennial year when it was purchased by A. McFarland and consolidated with the Tribune. Its plant and material were purchased by J. E. Valjean in September, 1876, when he began the publication of the Valley Blade, and from this time the history of the Blade has its beginning. In 1879, a company was formed and the name of the paper changed to The Portsmouth Blade. The publication of the Daily Blade began November 15, 1886. The Blade Printing Company was incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000. It was the editorial policy of Mr. Valjean to make the paper sensational, and during the twenty years of his editorial career, Portsmouth was cursed with personal journalism. He increased his enemies until his removal became a public necessity. His policy failed, as it was certain to do, and the year of 1896 found the paper badly involved and about to pass into the hands of a receiver. To continue the existence of the paper, the Blade passed into the hands of a new management, and on January 11, 1897, Charles E. Hard became Editor and President; W. V. Simmons continuing the Secretary and Treasurer. Mr. Valjean promptly secured the control of the Daily Tribune and the fiercest newspaper war in the history of Southern Ohio, was fought to a finish, quarter being neither asked nor given. The Blade having adopted a policy to meet public approval, crushed the Tribune under Valjean, leaving itself the only Republican paper in the city and county printed in the English language. Valjean disappeared below the Portsmouth horizon, everyone being thankful. Personal journalism has ceased in Portsmouth and for this desirable thing the present management of the Blade is entitled to the greatest credit. Relieved of its incubus of Valjeanism, the Blade has prospered. Its increased growth soon made its place of business at the corner of Court and Second, where it had been for more than a quarter of a century, too small for it. It purchased the large three story building on Second below Court once occupied by the clothing firm of Miller, Cissna & Company and changed it into a model newspaper home, the first issue of the paper therefrom was June 2, 1902. The Blade has now the most complete and valuable newspaper and job plant in Southern Ohio, including its costly battery of linotypes, array of presses and printing material generally. Its circulation daily and semi-weekly is by far the largest in its history and with its extensive advertising patronage, shows the hold it has upon the confidence and good will of the people. The conveniences of its splendidly arranged new home and large increased equipment will enable it to add to its supremacy in the newspaper field.

The Portsmouth Correspondent is a German Weekly. It was started in 1855, by Edward Raine, as an Independent paper with Democratic tendencies. He conducted the paper until 1873, when he sold out to Julius Bok. Three years sufficed for Mr. Bok, when the Sheriff sold him out and John T. Miller purchased and conducted the paper until 1880, as a Democratic adjunct. 1880, he sold out to George Feuchtinger. The latter sold out to Carl Huber in 1883, who changed the political complexion of the paper to Republican. In 1899, Louis F. Korth, of Cleveland, purchased the paper of Huber and is now conducting it as a "Republican Organ."

The Portsmouth Press

was started in 1889 by an Incorporated Company known as the Enterprise Publishing Company. It was a weekly Republican paper, in politics. Later the Company sold it out to Leslie M. Mann and Gus B. Barlow. Afterwards Mr. Barlow sold out to Mr. Mann who sold out to Mr. James Skelton. He sold it to Carl Huber who in turn, sold it to the Tribune. Since then, it has been published as a Democratic Weekly by the "Tribune."

CHURCHES.

Bigelow Methodist Episcopal Church.

The first society dates back to the stone house of Philip Moore on the West Side, where undoubtedly the first Church services of Methodism were held in Scioto County. Those who meet at Philip Moore's afterwards became the first members of Bigelow. Bishops Asbury and McKendree are said to have preached there. The Rev. Henry Bascon received his license and preached his first sermon in this house in 1813. The renowned and eccentric Peter Cartwright preached there also.

The first circuit preacher visiting Portsmouth was Rev. Nelson Spring, who came in 1814. There were but seven members in this society when it was organized in that year; they were Esrich Hall and wife, Rachel Barber, John R. Turner and wife, Mary Scarboro and Anna Glover. John R. Turner was the first class-leader.

In 1820, the Methodists of Portsmouth purchased and remodeled the academy on the corner of Fourth and Market streets, for which they paid $1,100, partially in corn. This structure was heated by two old fashioned fire places, one on either side of the pulpit; its chandeliers were tallow candles held in tin candlesticks on the wall.

In seven years, 1814 to 1821, this organization had increased from seven members to sixty, and it was during the interim of those seven years or about 1821, that Father John McDowell, so well and favorably known to this community, was made a class leader. In 1821, the first Sabbath School was organized, and this same saint, John McDowell, was its first Superintendent; he was re-elected to that office for over forty years, continuously.

During the year of 1834, while the Rev. George Crum was pastor, the Church purchased a site on Second street, and commenced the erection of a new building upon the ground now occupied by the Hibbs Hardware Store. This new church was designated as "Bigelow" and this name has remained unchanged and been adopted by the present strong and flourishing church. This church has a remarkable history; it has always been a moral power in the growing city. Some of the most gifted men in the Methodist Church served as pastors. In the year 1840, Randolph C. Foster was pastor of this church, and in subsequent years, became one of the noted pillars of Methodism.

left but the walls. By honorable efforts the society recovered itself from its own resources.

Since 1828, the following is the list of pastors: 1829, A. D. Fox; 1830, James Callahan; 1831, William Heer; 1832, Elijah Truitt; 1833, William Young; 1834-'35, George C. Crum; 1836-'37, Henry Turner; 1838-'39, William Simmons; 1840, William H. Lawder; 1841, R. S. Foster (now Bishop); 1842, Cyrus Brooks; 1843, Wesley Rowe; 1844, William R. Anderson; 1845, Clinton B. Sears; 1846-'47, David Whitcomb; 1848-'49, P. P. Ingalls; 1850, John W. White; 1851, J. W. White and B. St. James Fry; 1852, B. St. James Fry and G. W. Brush; 1853, A. Brooks; 1854-'55, B. N. Spahr; 1856, H. T. Magill; 1857-'58, A. B. See; 1859-'60, J. H. Creighton; 1861, S. C. Riker; 1862-'63, T. H. Phillips; 1864-'65-'66, Isaac Crook; 1867-'68, E. A. Cranston; 1869-'70, James Mitchell; 1871-'72-'73, R. W. Manley; 1874-'75-'76, J. C. Jackson; 1877-'78-'79, J. W. Peters; 1880, S. B. Matthews, who died in June after his appointment; 1881-'84, J. W. Dillon; 1884-1887, J. C. Jackson, Jr.; 1887-1890, W. L. Slutz; 1890-1895, B. L. McElroy; 1895-1897, W. V. Dick; 1897-1898, M. W. Acton; 1898, Henry W. Hargett, who is now serving in his fourth year.

The present official members of this church are: Trustees, George D. Selby, W. M. Pursell, G. D. Wait, John Kaps, E. H. Clare, J. P. Caskey, W. D. Horr, James Wood and N. J. Dever. Stewards: George Tittle, W. C. Draper, John K. Duke, L. H. Murphy, James A. Maxwell, A. J. Fuller, J. J. Rardin, Judge Harry Ball, J. N. George, Edward T. Reed, J. M. Graham and R. B. Cunningham.

Notable among the early pioneers of this church and those whose memories are revered, may be mentioned: Job Ledbetter, Doctor Offnere, John McDowell, Aunty Turner, Thomas Bassett and Doctor William McDowell.

During the years of his pastorate in Bigelow, he conducted the greatest revival in Portsmouth, and in which over five hundred souls were added to the church. The church which stood on Second street was forty by sixty feet; it was built by the late C. C. Hyatt, at a cost of $2,700. It was completed and dedicated by the Presiding Elder, Rev. James B. Findlay, in the year 1834. The Board of Trustees at that time were Jacob Clingman, Jacob P. Noel, John Barker, N. W. Andrews, C. C. Hyatt, Joseph Fennimore, Moses Gregory, John R. Turner and John McDowell. During the time of the occupancy of this building, the church grew wonderfully. It continued to grow until the congregation had become too numerous for the room on Second street, and a new church was proposed in 1853. Rev. R. A. Spencer donated a lot on Seventh street near Chillicothe street, where a frame building was erected, known as "Spencer Chapel"; this structure is now known as Allen Chapel of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. Part of the Congregation of "Old Bigelow" went out to form the Spencer Chapel. This branch prospered and grew into the present Sixth Street Church. In 1858, Bigelow purchased the site of the present church of Thomas Dugan and erected a church. The Rev. George Brush preached the dedicatory sermon for the chapel, and the Rev. Edward Thompson, (afterwards Bishop) dedicated the auditorium. The present building has twice suffered from fire, the last time in March, 1867. Nothing was

Since 1880, the membership of the church has more than doubled itself, which speaks volumes in behalf of its zealous membership. The Sabbath School, likewise, is more than double with an enrollment of four hundred and eighty, and with an average attendance of three hundred and fifty. The Epworth League, for the past five years, has been in a very flourishing condition. The Charter of the Epworth League of Bigelow Church is among the very first.

The other organizations of the church are keeping pace with the organizations mentioned showing activity, spiritual life, etc.

A new parsonage is planned, and a sufficient amount has been subscribed to complete the same.

During the pastorate of B. L. McElroy, the interior of the church was entirely remodeled at an expense of $17,000.00. It is so arranged that the Sabbath School room can be thrown into the Auditorium which gives a seating capacity of twelve hundred.

Among the many enterprises of this church was the establishment of Manley Church in the year 1892.

First Presbyterian Church.

The First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, was organized by the Rev. Stephen Lindsley, May 24, 1817. At that time the town had fifty dwellings, and from 250 to 300 people. Rev. William Williamson, Rev. James Gilliland, Rev. Oaks, and others, had preached in the town prior to this time. The Church was organized in the old Court House on Market street, with fourteen members, whose names were Josiah Morton, Mrs. Nancy Morton, David Mitchell, William Russell, Ruth Russell, John Galloway and wife, Moses Baird, Elizabeth Emory, James Logan, Mary Williams, James Abbott, and Nancy Lindsley.

Josiah Morton, David Mitchell and William Russell were elected elders. The elders were ordained by Rev. Lindsley July 13, 1817, at which time John Lawson, who had been an elder in Mount Bethel Congregation, Virginia, was, by an unanimous vote, chosen as an elder of this church.

The congregation worshiped in the old Court House, then standing in the center of Market Street, between Second and Front Streets, previous to the erection of a building for that purpose.

A small frame "Meeting House," measuring 45 by 36 feet, was erected on Second Street, west of Market Street, in 1822, the cost of which was $1651.73. This was the first church of any kind in Portsmouth. In 1840, an addition of eighteen feet was built.

The following pastors have served this society: Stephen Lindsley, 1817-24; J. Wood, Stated Supply, 1825-28; Eleazor Brainard, Stated Supply, 1837-38; Alex. H. Brown, Stated Supply, 1839-41; Aaron Williams, Stated Supply, 1841-44; Hiram Bingham, Stated Supply, 1844-1846; David Cushing, Stated Supply, 1846-49; Marcus Hicks, Stated Supply, 1849-52; E. P. Pratt, Pastor, 1852-86; D. P. Putnam, Assistant Pastor, 1870-71; H. A. Ketchum, Associate Pastor, 1872-75; Rev. J. I. Blackburn, Pastor, 1886-89; Rev. David S. Tappan, D. D., Pastor, 1890-99.

Rev. Frank Arnold commenced his ministry in this church, June 10, 1900. On April 10, 1826, the male members of the First Presbyterian Society were called to meet Monday, May 1, to elect five trustees. Pews were offered for sale at the same time. Subscribers could have the amount credited in pew rent. Samuel Dole was Clerk at this time.

The present house of worship was erected on the south-west corner of Third and Court streets in 1851, during the pastorate of Rev. Marcus Hicks. The building is of brick, two-stories in height, and the dimensions are 100 feet by 56 feet. The original cost was $16,000. It was not finished upstairs until 1854. In 1864 a new cupola was placed on the building. In 1866 the Church was enlarged 16 feet to the west, and otherwise improved at a cost of $10,000.

On the first floor of the building are lecture room, (also used by the Sunday School), class rooms, ladies' parlor, pastor's study, and on the second floor is the main audience room. The audience room will seat 700, and the lecture room alone 300, and with the class rooms thrown in 500.

INTERIOR OF ALL SAINTS CHURCH.

"This is none other but the house of God,"—Gen. 28: 17.

Monday. In 1822, Rev. Ezra B. Kellog had charge of this Parish and of Chillicothe, and held services every three or four weeks. The church had no regular services until June 19, 1831, when Rev. Henry Caswell became the first settled Rector. He remained until 1833, in May. He afterwards obtained the degree of Doctor in Divinity and Vicar of Fitzaldeoan and Prebendary of Salisbury, England. He left his charge there to visit the United States, and died in Franklin Pa., December 17, 1870. During his rectorship the congregation held services at the rooms over the Commercial Bank on Second street, the former residence of M. B. Gilbert. In 1831, there were twenty communicants, of whom four were additions that year. The ladies of the Church organized a sewing society that year. Rev. Dexter Potter succeeded the Rev. Henry Caswell. In that summer a church was erected 47x37 feet. It stood where the Chapel now stands. It was dedicated November 28, 1833, by Bishop Chase. Rev. Potter remained only six months, and the rectorship was vacant until September, 1834, when the Rev. J. F. Eaton took charge and remained seven or eight months. In November, 1835, the Rev. Abraham Sanford became Rector and remained about two years. His last report gave 31 as the number of communicants. On November 9, 1838, Rev. Erastus Burr became Rector and remained until November 9, 1873, a period of thirty-five years. Doctor Burr's Rectorship was the beginning of the Historical period in All Saints Church and of its life and progress. The Church was not incorporated under the State law until March 14, 1839, when a special act for that purpose passed the Legislature. In the building of the Church in 1833, Thomas C. Lewis and Charles O. Tracy were vestrymen. James Lodwick, Enos Gunn and Washington Kinney were a committee to contract for the building. Thomas C. Lewis, Havillan Gunn and Wilson Gates were a committee to procure subscriptions. Hugh Cook, E. Gunn, Allen Farquhar, William Hall, Zina Gunn, Aaron Kinney and Peter Kinney were other members of the vestry present. In 1850, the present Church was erected. The building committee for the new edifice was appointed by the Vestry, viz., Washington Kinney, James Lodwick and Samuel S. Fuller. There were 157 contributors to the Building Fund. A Diocesan Convention was held in 1869 at which three Clergymen were ordained to the Priesthood and five Clergymen were ordained as Deacons. In September, 1859, Doctor Burr attended the General Convention of the Church in Richmond, Va. On November 9, 1859, he preached his twenty-first anniversary sermon. On November 9, 1863, he preached his twenty-fifth anniversary sermon. In 1870, the wardens and vestry were, Charles P. Tracy, senior warden; James F. Towell, junior warden; L. C. Damarin, A. McFarland, P. S. Iams, Robert Baker, William P. Martin, P. C. Gunn, W. B. Dennis, Martin B. Gilbert, vestrymen.

In 1871, Robert Baker was senior warden, P. C. Gunn, junior warden. L. C. Damarin, J. F. Towell, C. P. Tracy, P. S. Iams, W. B. Dennis, William P. Martin, M. B. Gilbert and A. McFarland, vestrymen. In 1872, Robert Baker was senior warden, and O. A. Lodwick, junior warden. The vestrymen are the same as 1871, but W. P. Martin dropped out and Peter Kinney came in. In 1873, J. F. Towell became senior warden and Robert Baker, junior warden. The vestrymen were L. C. Damarin, M. B. Gilbert, C. P. Tracy, William Moore, B. F. Cunningham, M. S. Pixley, W. A. Connolley, W. Foote Hall. In 1871, Rev. Horace W. Jones had become Assistant Rector and he resigned as such Easter Monday 1873. Doctor Burr at the same time, resigned as Rector. August 17 and 24, 1873, Rev. Isaac Newton Stanger conducted the services at All Saints Church, and on August 25, 1873, he was called as Rector.

On Easter Monday, 1874, J. F. Towell, was elected senior warden and Robert Baker, junior warden. L. C. Damarin, M. B. Gilbert, B. F. Cunningham, Col. Peter Kinney, William Moore, W. Foote Hall, William M. Bolles and P. S. Iams were vestrymen. Col. P. Kinney, J. F. Towell and George A. Waller were delegates to the Diocesan Convention. In 1875, Samuel Reed and B. F. Richardson came into the vestry in place of W. Foote Hall and B. F. Cunningham. On April 12, 1876, Mrs. Col. P. Kinney presented the Marble Baptismal Font now in the Church, and on the following Sunday it was used in the baptism of her grandson, Kinney Funk. On April 19, 1876, the same wardens were elected as in 1874, and S. C. Morrow took the place of Samuel Reed, as vestryman.

On November 30, 1876, Rev. I. N. Stanger preached his farewell sermon. He had been called to the Christ Church at Cincinnati. April 1877, the wardens were J. F. Towell, senior warden and Robert Baker, junior warden. The vestrymen were, S. C. Morrow, B. F. Richardson, M. B. Gilbert, L. C. Damarin, William Moore, William H. Barnell, N. W. Evans, and P. S. Iams. On July 8, 1877, Rev. Henry L. Badger conducted the services at All Saints Church for the first time. On May 30, 1877, John Yoakley who had been organist and chorister at All Saints Church for 33 years, resigned. In 1878, the wardens were, J. F. Towell, senior, Robert Baker, junior, and the vestrymen were, L. C. Damarin, M. B. Gilbert, B. F. Richardson, P. S. Iams, N. W. Evans, S. C. Morrow and R. S. Spry. In 1879, the vestry was the same except that R. S. Spry and H. A. Towne took the place of N. W. Evans and S. C. Morrow. The following vestry were elected on Easter Monday 1885, J. F. Towell, senior warden; Robert Baker, junior warden; M. B. Gilbert, P. S. Iams, Henry Vincent, Dr. M. S. Pixley, F. B. Kehoe, E. J. Corson, N. W. Evans, Wellington Kinney. On April 13, 1887, the vestry elected was M. B. Gilbert, senior warden; Robert Baker, junior warden. Vestrymen were, Henry Vincent, N. W. Evans, F. B. Kehoe, W. R. Kinney, E. J. Corson, Dr. Pixley, and F. B. Corson. On November 13, 1883, was celebrated the 50th anniversary of Rev. Dr. Burr's pastorate in Portsmouth. The celebration was in the Chapel. The Knights Templar were present in a body, and Samuel Johnson made an address on their behalf. May 13, 1893, Rev. Henry L. Badger resigned as Rector to take effect August 3, 1893. He expected to go to Washington State. On January 15, 1893, the interior of the Church was destroyed by fire. July 5, 1893, it was rebuilt, re-furnished with new interior, carpet, pews and organ. December 23, 1893, the Rev. Dallas Tucker became the Rector of All Saints Church. February 4, 1894, a bronze tablet to the memory of Dr. Burr and wife was placed in the All Saints Church. The Rev. Dallas Tucker resigned as Rector of All Saints Church to locate in Virginia.

May 12, 1897, Rev. Joseph D. Herron was called from New Castle, Penn., and he has remained the Rector of the Church since. May 2, 1898, the vested choir was introduced into the Church. September 21, 1898, the publication of the "Church Echoes" was begun. May 17, 1899, the Diocesan Convention of the Southern Diocese of Ohio was held in All Saints Church.

The German Evangelical Church.

The German Evangelical Church (Deutsche Vereinigte Evangelische Kirche) was organized in the year, 1838. Until 1851, there were two small congregations (Pastors Keberlen and Mayer,) which met for worship in the old "Seminary," corner Fifth and Court, and in a hall on Market street between Second and Third streets. The two congregations were united in 1851 under Reverend Dr. Fisher of Chicago, and in 1853, a church was built on the south side of Fifth street between Washington and Chillicothe streets at a cost of $3,500.00. This building (now used by the Sunday School) is a plain brick structure with a seating capacity of about three hundred. The first church council (Kirchenrath) consisted of Messrs. Doerr, Kugelman, Lust, Layher, Lang, Metzger, Nagel and Wilhelm. In 1887, the new church building was erected at a cost of $23,000.00, a handsome brick edifice with a seating capacity of about seven hundred. In 1891, the parsonage was built (on Fifth street next east of the church) at a cost of $3,700.00. The church organ is an excellent two manual instrument built by the Stein Co. The present choir consists of ten female and eight male voices. Mrs. George Kah is organist and director. The present vestry consists of Messrs. H. Graf, A. Kuschke, L. Knost, J. Stueber, H. Scott, H. Uhl, Jr., and C. Windel. The Sunday School numbers one hundred and fifty pupils, nineteen teachers and officers. Superintendent Rev. A. Mallick. The list of Pastors, who have served in this church are: Keberlen and Mayer, 1838-51; Dr. Fisher, 1851-52; G. Weihle, 1852-56; L. Alberti, 1856-59; H. Veith, 1859-66; J. C. Fleischacker, 1866-69; B. T. W. Sickel, 1869-71; K. J. Zimmermann, 1871-75; P. Von Scheliha, 1875-81; C. Haas, 1881-83; F. Rahn, 1883-85; F. Baltzer, 1885-89; J. Dieterle, 1889-93; Adolph Mallick, 1893 to the present.

The German Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1839, the Revs. William Nast, D. D. and John Schwahlen, German Methodist preachers at Cincinnati, Ohio, visited the Germans at Portsmouth, Ohio. In 1844 Rev. Peter Schmucker visited the city and preached to the Germans at the residence of Stephen Brodbeck on the evening of the day of his arrival. On the next evening he preached again at the residence of Daniel Emrich. The class which was formed at this time was placed in charge of Rev. John Hoppen; regular services were held at the school house on Fourth street. The first quarterly meeting was held in the year 1844 to 1845 (Church year, September to September.) The first quarterly conference was held at the residence of Daniel Emrich and was attended by official members from West Union, Piketon and Beaver, these places being appointments of the circuit, to which Portsmouth had been added. The records of this conference were lost. At this time, twelve persons joined the church, "on probation." Among these were: Vincent Brodbeck, Stephen Brodbeck, and Daniel Emrich. Paul Brodbeck joined by letter from one of the English churches. In the fall of 1847 Rev. C. H. Doring was Presiding Elder and Rev. John Geyer was placed in charge of the congregation. The circuit then comprised the following appointments: Portsmouth, Piketon, Waverly, Beaver, West Union, Ohio and Maysville, Kentucky. On May 2, 1846, the quarterly conference resolved to build a church. A building lot was secured on the south side of Fourth street, west of Market. The trustees were: Vincent Brodbeck, Daniel Emrich, Stephen Brodbeck, Conrad Koch and David Ilch. The building committee was: Rev. J. H. Bahrenburg, Daniel Emrich and Vincent Brodbeck. The building was 30x40 feet and two stories in height. The first floor was used for residence for the pastor and the Sunday school rooms. This building is yet standing and is used as a residence. This Church was dedicated on the first Sunday in April 1848, by Bishop Hamline and Rev. William Nast, D. D. The cost of the building was about $1,200.00 exclusive of labor and material furnished by members of the church, of which no record was preserved. A lot at the southwest corner of Fourth and Washington streets 83x107 feet was purchased in 1860. The foundation of the new church on this lot was laid in 1866 and the new church building was finished in 1867. This church costing $31,200 with the lot ($1,700.00 for the lot) was dedicated July 18, 1869. The building is 71x51 feet. It has a large steeple with a belfry, containing two bells. It is a two-story brick building and has a seating capacity of about 400, though 500 can be seated comfortably. The pipe organ cost about $2,000.00 and was built by Telemacher and Son of Erie, Pennsylvania. Mr. Albert Marting is chorister. A mixed choir of eighteen voices leads the singing. The officers of the church are: Presiding Elder, Rev. John H. Horst; Pastor, Rev. Ernest Werner; Trustees, F. L. Marting, J. M. Wendelken, Louis Blomeyer, John Gabler, Vincent P. Brodbeck, F. C. Herms, John P. Rau, Christ Zinnecker and Louis Clausing; Stewards, Albert F. Marting, Harry Kiefer, John W. Reissinger, J. Wesley Johns, Carn Boehnker, Louis Blomeyer and Ernest Lammers; class leader, Martin Reissinger; organist, Miss Edna Marting. In the Sunday School there are 115 scholars enrolled, 12 teachers, 7 officers. F. L. Marting is Superintendent. Names of pastors and years of service are the following: Rev. John Hopper, 1844; Rev. John Geyer, 1845-46; Rev. Fred Schimmelpfennig, assistant; Rev. J. H. Bahrenburg, 1846-48; Rev. John Bier, 1848-49; Valentine Baldauf, assistant; Rev. Henry Koch, 1849-1850; Rev. Louis Heiss, assistant; Rev. Karl Scheifer, 1850-51; Rev. Conrad Bier, assistant; Rev. George Danker, 1851-52; Rev. C. F. Heitmeyer, 1852-53; Rev. Christian Vogel, 1853-54; Rev. George Weidmann, 1854-55; Rev. William Kaetter, 1855-57; Rev. C. G. Tritsche, senior, 1857-59; Rev. E. F. Wunderlich, 1859-1860; Rev. X. Wittenbach, 1860-62; Rev. William Dressler, 1862-64; Rev. John Pfetzing, 1864-66; Rev. J. C. Weidmann, 1866-69; Rev. C. G. Tritsche, senior, 1869-70; Rev. Henry G. Lich, 1870-72; Rev. John Schneider, 1872-74; Rev. Gottlob Nachtrieb, 1874-77; Rev. E. J. Wunderlich, 1877-80; Rev. Herman Grentzenberg, 1880-82; Rev. Gottlob Trefz, 1882-83; Rev. Franz L. Nagler, 1883-85; Rev. John H. Horst, 1885-86; Rev. William Riechenmyer, 1886-88; Rev. Carl Bozenhard, 1888-92; Rev. W. A. Schraff, 1892-97; Rev. C. B. Koch, 1897-1901; Rev. E. W. Werner, 1901, present pastor.

Catholicity.

Catholicity in Scioto County covers a period of nearly a hundred years. The first mass was celebrated in Portsmouth by Rev. Stephen Baden, the first priest ordained in the United States, who visited Portsmouth while on his way from Baltimore to Covington, in 1812. Rev. Baden was ordained on May 25, 1793, by Bishop Carroll of Baltimore, the first Bishop in the United States, a brother of Charles Carroll, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. From 1812 to 1842 mass was celebrated at various times and places in Portsmouth. Father Baden's last visit to Portsmouth was in 1835. A ten days mission was held here by Rev. T. R. Butler early in 1842.

The Church of the Nativity.

The first organized Catholic Church was in 1842. It was organized by Rev. Father G. O'Mealy and was composed of English and German speaking Catholics. Mass was celebrated in the humble apartments of some one of the congregation or in public halls until 1844, when Father O'Mealy purchased grounds on Third and Madison streets and built a church and rectory thereon. The new church was dedicated on Christmas day 1844. Prominent Catholics of this day were: Messrs. Saulsberry, Grimes, Toker, Sherer, Kehoe, Mires, Hubbard, Kricker, Zimmerman, Damarin, Bannon, Mrs. Damarin, Miss Tobin and Miss Damarin. Rev. E. Thienpont succeeded Rev. O'Mealy in November 1845. Rev. R. Gilmour succeeded Rev. Thienpont in 1852. During the pastorate of Father Gilmour the congregation demanded that provision be made for separate churches, one for the English and one for the German speaking congregation, and accordingly the separation was made and Father Gilmour took charge of the English speaking congregation, Rev. F. Karge of the German or St. Mary's Church.

The Church of the Holy Redeemer.

Rev. Father Gilmour purchased grounds on Sixth Street of Mr. Finley at a cost of $900 and here the Church of the Holy Redeemer was built in 1853. While this Church was building, mass was celebrated in the old Presbyterian Church on Second street. Rev. James Donahue who succeeded Father Gilmour in 1856, built the rectory and started the school. Rev. Michael Ahern, who succeeded Father Donahue in 1866, put the school under the supervision of the Sisters of Charity of Cedar Grove. Rev. John Curley succeeded Father Ahern in August, 1867, but remained only a few months and was succeeded by Rev. O. A. Walker, who purchased the ground where the present school building stands, and introduced the Dominican Sisters as instructors. Rev. Father Goldschmidt succeeded to the pastorate in October 1873 and during his pastorate the Dominican Sisters were recalled and the Sisters of St. Francis of Joliet, Illinois, were engaged. Rev. D. B. Cull, the next pastor, built the school on the land bought by Father Walker and secured the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Kentucky. Father Cull was succeeded in July, 1878, by Rev. Philip Steyle who purchased the cemetery and divided it into lots. The Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Kentucky, retired and Father Steyle secured the Sisters of St. Francis. In October, 1884, Rev. J. J. Slevin succeeded to the pastorate and remained here until September, 1886, when Rev. Joseph Schmitt succeeded to the pastorate which he held until January 15, 1899. The Church was remodeled and painted during his pastorate. In January, 1899, Rev. Father McGuirk was appointed rector of the Church of the Holy Redeemer by Rt. Rev. Bishop Watterson, D. D. He repaired and improved the church and rectory and paid about $3,000 of debts of long standing. Preparations for a new church building are being made and a large sum of money has already been collected, but the structure will not be commenced until the amount necessary to complete it is collected. The following are some of the societies of the Church of the Holy Redeemer: "The Altar and Rosary," the "Young Ladies' Sodality of the Immaculate Conception," the "Sacred Heart Sodality," the "Apostleship of Prayer" and the "Ancient Order of Hibernians." The "Gibson Literary and Social Club" is organized from both parishes. "The Young Men's Institute" is composed also of young men of both congregations.

St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church.

REV. ALOYSIUS NONNEN.

The German Catholics under the leadership of Rev. F. Karge in 1859, bought a lot on the corner of Fifth and Market streets for $2,520. In 1864, a fine school building was erected at a cost of $3,000, and the foundation of the church was commenced. The corner stone of the new church was laid by the Rt. Rev. Rosecrans, Bishop of Columbus, on May 9, 1869. The new church was completed at a cost of $50,000 and was dedicated July 31, 1870. Rev. A. Nonnen succeeded to the pastorate April 25, 1871. The Church experienced great difficulties. The membership was small, they had no rectory and were in debt to the amount of $28,367. In face of this they went to work and erected a parsonage in the fall of 1871, at a cost of $2,400 and the next year, they built an addition to the school house at an additional cost of $1,100. In 1879, they purchased a large and beautiful pipe organ at a cost of $2,300, and two Gothic altars were placed in the church which cost $3,000. In 1887, the debt had been reduced $6,000, but a new school building was erected which cost $16,000. In 1889, a parish cemetery was purchased which cost $5,000.

In 1892, new heating apparatus was placed in the church at a cost of $2,515. In 1893, they purchased a house on the east side of the school building which was fitted up for a Sister's Convent, at a whole cost of $1,600. In 1895, at a cost of $6,200, they erected the highest and most beautiful tower in the city, and frescoed the interior of the church.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church.

It has been almost impossible to obtain any data in regard to this Church, which could be presented to the readers of this work. The Rev. Charleston was the first minister of this organization at Portsmouth. At that time, the members had a small church on Fifth street, between Court and Market streets. Later the organization had a brick church on the corner of Fourth and Market streets. Rev. Henry Adrisson was for a time pastor, followed by the Rev. Isaac Dillon. This brick church on Fifth street was completed in 1846. On the 20th of July, 1868, the present church on the north side of Seventh street, east of Chillicothe street, was bargained for and on the 19th of November, 1868, the deed for the same was executed and recorded. The purchase price was $3,500. Among the early trustees of the church on Seventh street were: John Cooper, Toles Moore and Granison Holman. Mr. John Q. Weaver has always been prominent and efficient in the church. Among those who came from the brick church on Fifth street were: Wesley Benson, William Thomas, J. Q. Weaver, Mrs. Annie Kearns, Piety Wilson, Mrs. C. Williamson, Mrs. H. Cooper, Mrs. Weaver and others. The following have been the ministers of the church in the past 27 years:

Rev. Philip Tolliver, 1875-79; Louis Woodson, 1879-81; J. B. Stansberry, 1881-83; Joseph Nelson, 6 months in 1883; J. H. Bell, 1883-85; J. H. Cole, 1885-87; H. W. Toney, 1887-89; Grafton Graham, 1889-90; Jesse Smith, 1890-92; R. P. Clark, 1892-1895; John Coleman, 1895-98; J. Allen Viney, 1898-99; J. M. Ross, 1899-1900; Andrew B. Morton, 1900--. Perhaps the most prominent of these and the one who has left his impression on the church more than any one else is the Rev. Philip Tolliver. The church property is valued at $5,000. The parsonage was erected by the side of the church between 1889 and 1892. The church is 40x60 feet and will seat 500. There are 140 members.

First Baptist Church was organized in January, 1850. The founders were J. H. Waldon, D. D. Jones, John Lionbarger, George Hered. The first board of trustees were David D. Jones, A. R. Cassidy, Moses C. Wilson, George Hered and S. H. Worcester. Rev. J. H. Waldon became the church's first pastor in 1850, serving for one year. The following are the pastors with date of service.

J. T. Roberts, 1851-55; W. Algood, 1855-57; W. W. Wyeth, 1858-60; I. D. King, 1860-66; W. B. Clark, 1867-70; C. H. DeWolf, 1870-73; T. M. Iams, 1873-75; I. N. Clark, 1875-78; John Hawker, 1880-82; A. L. Lockert, 1882-90; J. A. Snodgrass, 1891-97; J. B. Tuttle, 1897-99; W. C. Stevenson, 1899--.

The house in which the Church now worships was built in 1851, costing about $10,000. It has a seating capacity of 350 sittings. There were fourteen constituent members, all of whom are deceased. From this small beginning the Church has greatly increased to a present membership of 375. The choir of the Church has always been noted for its musical ability. It consists now of 16 voices assisted by the pipe organ, all under the leadership of Mrs. A. J. White. The present officers are as follows, W. C. Stevenson, pastor, with the following persons who constitute the official board: George Wymer, Joseph Swander, C. C. Jones, Douglas Miller, Grant Doll, B. F. Richardson, Truss Lynn, Jr., U. G. Drake, Harry Morris, E. R. Peebles, Allan Cook, C. B. Richardson, W. C. Roof, Albert Snider, Frank Littlefield and Mrs. A. J. White.

The Sunday school has a membership of 185 scholars with 20 officers and teachers. Allan B. Cook is the Superintendent.

The Church of Christ is located on the northwest corner of Gay and Third streets. It is also known as the "Christian Church," and those familiar with the work of the Church often speak of it as "Dr. Davis' Church." The congregation was organized in 1853. John Fox and Isaac Willett were the first Elders. The succession of ministers in the church were as follows: Wm. Nelson served from 1871-74; Albert F. Erb from 1876-78; Daniel O. Thomas from 1878-81; Gilbert Ellis from 1883-85; William L. Neal from 1887-88; Thomas E. White from 1889-90; Richard

S. Groves from 1891-93; H. N. Allen from 1893-94; William A. Harp from October 1894-October 1899; George P. Taubman came in November 1899.

The first meeting house was built on Chillicothe street opposite Tracy Park in 1859. The house and lot cost $1,500. The Church had a precarious existence until John F. Davis moved to the city, took an interest in it and became a member. The building was then moved to Third and Gay streets in 1876 and was enlarged in 1878. It was rebuilt in 1895. The present structure cost about $22,000, and is made of brick with a seating capacity of 1,200 when all rooms are thrown together. There are forty-five voices in the choir under the direction of Prof. D. J. Winston. The present officers of the church are: Dr. J. F. Davis, Walter Bagby and George P. Taubman, Elders; L. G. Tatman, Albert Hales, W. W. Smith, E. G. Williams, George Davies, Charles Reinhard, A. D. McMurry, Wm. Cline, Orin Catlin, Deacons; A. D. McMurry, J. F. Davis, L. G. Tatman, Ezra Jeffords and Edward Bratt, Trustees. Some of the early members of the church were: John Fox and wife, Isaac Willett and wife, Moses Bratt and wife, A. Coriell, Moses Wilson, John McNeil, John M. Lynn and Mrs. Thomas Dugan. Three are living: Sarah Jane Barklow, Sarah Willett and A. Coriell. In the Sunday school there are eighteen officers, forty teachers and 850 pupils. The minister, George P. Taubman, is Superintendent. Moses McKoy was the first Evangelist to serve the congregation and he was followed by Benjamin Franklin and a Mr. Doyle. The first meeting place was on Fifth and Court streets. The following Evangelists have been with the Congregation all doing efficient work; Robert Moffitt, Robert Trimble, Alanson Wilcox, A. F. McLean, J. A. L. Romig, W. J. Wright, J. V. Updike, S. H. Bartlett, and S. M. Martin. During the last series of meetings under the leadership of S. M. Martin there were added to the church 289. The present membership is nearly 1,100. It has three Christian Endeavor Societies, one Woman's Missionary organization. Dr. John Frost Davis of this city is entitled to the credit for the success of the work.

Sixth Street Methodist Episcopal Church.

Up till 1853, there was but one Methodist Episcopal Church in Portsmouth, "Bigelow" and the church stood on Second street on the location of the Hibbs hardware store. There was a meeting of the members of Bigelow in 1853 and the names were called. Each person called responded as to whether they would go into the new church or remain in the old. The following elected to go into the new church; Samuel Briggs and wife, Benjamin Fryer, Richard Lloyd, Dudley Day, Simon Drouillard, Aholihab Bentley, Wm. Salter, Wm. Russell, C. C. Hyatt, Silas Cole, Rev. B. L. Jefferson, Jacob P. Noel, Mrs. Catharine Timmonds, Maria Timmonds, Mrs. Barbara Micklethwait, Mrs. Agate Lawson, George Yeamans and his wife, Mrs. Parmelia Montgomery, the Misses Hannah, Josephine and Elizabeth Montgomery, Mrs. Amanda Wilhelm, John H. J. Fryer and his wife, Jerome Valodin and wife, William Barber.

The new church was named Spencer Chapel in honor of Rev. Oliver M. Spencer, a presiding Elder of the Portsmouth District who donated the lot on Seventh street on which the Church was built. The Church was built in 1853, a frame building of a seating capacity of 450, and it cost $1,600.

The succession of Ministers in the new Church was as follows: 1853, Zachariah Wharton; 1854, Edward Mabee, who died in charge June 25, 1855, of cholera, at Ironton, while in attendance on a Masonic celebration; 1855, Maxwell P. Gaddis for the vacancy; 1855-56, F. H. Brodbeck; 1856-57, James F. Green; 1857-58, S. M. Merrill, (Bishop in 1872); 1858, John W. Dillon, (now presiding Elder); 1859-61, Lovett Taft; 1861-63, Joseph F. Williams, 1863-65, John T. Miller; 1865-66, Charles C. McCabe, (now Bishop); 1866-67, F. F. King; 1867-68, A. B. See; 1868-71, J. H. Gardner; 1871-74, T. W. Stanley; 1874-77, C. W. Bethauser; 1877-78, W. H. Sutherland; 1878-79, Thomas R. Taylor; 1879-82, R. H. Wallace; 1882-84, T. DeWitt Peake; 1884-86, B. F. Stubbins; 1887-88, F. S. Davis; 1888-92, Z. W. Fagans; 1892-96, A. E. Johnson; 1896-98, T. S. Robjnt; 1899-1901, W. H. Miller; 1901, B. R. Wilburn.

In 1865 the congregation became too large for the building and it was proposed to build a new church. Richard Lloyd and wife gave the lot on the northeast corner of Sixth and Chillicothe on which the new church was afterwards built. It was eighty-five feet front on Sixth Street by 107 feet deep on Chillicothe street. At the meeting to consider the matter, the resolution to build was adopted and $2,100 subscribed. The Ladies of the Church did a great work in raising the money to build. The Corner Stone of the new church was laid on June 14, 1866 with Masonic ceremonies. C. C. Hyatt obtained the contract for the brick work and John W. Purdum for the carpenter work. The church was to cost $30,000. May 11, 1867, the Lecture Room was dedicated. The bell, placed in the tower, weighed 3,500 pounds.

The church itself was dedicated August 21, 1870. Subscriptions to the amount of $9,000 were made that day. The total cost of the church was about $47,000. The building and grounds are estimated at $40,000, organ at $1,700, furniture and fixtures $2,000.

The following persons have been Superintendents of the Sunday School: Wm. P. Russell, Wm. H. Watson, Uri Tracy, Alexander Calder, T. J. Pursell, W. W. Donaldson, J. W. March, Henry Amberg, M. H. Ball, Charles O. Tracy, Wm. H. Gibson, Wm. B. Anderson, the present Superintendent. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 400 and an attendance of 275. On December 15, 1896, the organ was burned and much damage done the church. Loss $4,000, of which $3,200 was covered by insurance. The membership of the church is 650.

Christ Church

was organized August 30, 1857. Messrs. Washington and Peter Kinney, members of the parish of All Saints', assumed the expense of building the new house of public worship, and upon its completion, gave it, free of all cost and debt to the wardens and vestry of Christ Church. The first rector was the Rev. Samuel D. Tompkins. Since the ministrations of Mr. Tompkins, the parish has had eleven rectors. The following are the list of clergymen who have officiated in Christ Church: Rev. Samuel D. Tompkins, from September 1858 to July 1861; Rev. William J. Clark from April 1862 to November 1864; Rev. Abner P. Brush, from January 1865 to September 1866; Rev. William Henry Watts, from December 1, 1866, to March 1870; Rev. James Taylor Franklin, April 11, 1870 to January 1, 1877; Rev. Francis K. Brooke, from August 25, 1877, to September 1880; Rev. Henry B. Ensworth, from December 11, 1880 to June 1881; Rev. William C. McGuire, from December 1881 to November 1886; Rev. William Price, from June 1887 to June 1888; Rev. J. O. Babin, from September 1888 to September 1889; Rev. William M. Mix, from October 1889 to April 1891; Rev. Alfred R. Taylor, from October 26, 1891 to July 26, 1897; Rev. Tullius C. Tupper, D. D. from May 1898 to December 1898. At the organization of the vestry, Washington Kinney was senior warden and Peter Kinney was junior warden. In 1860, S. P. Nickells, Thomas S. Currie, J. L. Watkins, John P. Terry and P. C. Kinney were vestrymen. Of those who have served as vestrymen in addition to the list given above there were: Washington Kinney, Van Der Lyn Tracy, Peter Kinney, Joseph C. Gilbert, Thomas E. Tynes, William Kinney, S. R. Ross, Robert S. Drake, P. C. Kinney, Henry Hall, David L. Moore, G. B. Bailey, Dr. A. B. Jones, Thomas D. Greene, George W. Sullivan, Samuel Reed, Edward W. Hope, Colonel S. E. Varner, N. W. Evans, Thomas S. Hall, E. H. Hall, Ira J. Secord, J. H. Johnson, Daniel F. Connell, George O. Newman, W. Q. Adams, A. L. Sanford, David K. Ball, Lodwick Ulrich, H. S. Grimes, Watkins Kearns, Levi D. York, Charles S. Messer, William Waller, Theodore F. Davidson, M. D., William Brent, William Parker, J. Leigh Watkins, Fred W. Tynes, L. C. Turley, S. P. Baird, C. C. Fulton, C. C. Glidden and Theodore K. Funk. Since December, 1898, the church has been closed. It has had no rector and no services have been held. The church edifice was built by William Newman, and the chapel was built three years later. The church, as stated, was a present from Washington and Peter Kinney. The chapel cost $3,444.00.

The Hebrew Congregation.

The Hebrew congregation of Portsmouth, known by its Hebrew name, "K'bal Kodesh Bene Abraham" (K. K. B. A.) or its English equivalent "The Holy Congregation of the Children of Abraham," was founded presumably in the early part of the fifties. As the records bearing on this are no longer extant, it is impossible to ascertain the exact date. But as the Congregation was incorporated in 1858, it may safely be conjectured that a religious body of Jews must have been in existence a few years prior to its incorporation. The tide of the Jewish immigration from Germany to the United States became very strong during and immediately after the memorable year, 1848, the year of European Revolutions and very many of those Jewish settlers went westward, making the large cities like Cincinnati and Chicago, their principal places of residence, but settling also in smaller cities, like Dayton, Zanesville and Portsmouth.

The Jewish cemetery must have been purchased simultaneously with the organization of the Congregation, although the exact date of that purchase is not known. In this, the history of the Portsmouth Jewish community, simply resembles that of most of the Jewish Congregations of the land, when the purchase of a cemetery was the first sign of life on the part of the Congregation and the first mark of its activity. It is only after their cemetery was secured that the Jews attended to their other spiritual wants, and notably those of erecting a synagogue and securing the services of a Rabbi.

The incorporation of the Congregation took place November 1, 1858. The Board of Trustees at that time consisted of Louis Levi, Mayer Eichelstein, Ludwig Stern, Isaac Freiberg, Jacob Stern, Mayer Seeberger and Bernard Dreyfoos. Up to 1864, the Jewish citizens worshipped either in a private residence of one of the members, or in a hall rented for the purpose. In 1864, Thomas Dugan offered to sell his property on the corner of Washington and Third streets. After due deliberation the Congregation decided to buy the building in partnership with the Masons; the Congregation to have the first and second floors, the Masons the third floor. For this, the Congregation paid Dugan the sum of two thousand dollars. The tide of church reform which has swept away so many of the old Jewish religious customs during the latter half of the 19th Century, did not leave intact those of the Portsmouth community. From a strictly Orthodox Congregation, at its beginning, it gradually became more and more a follower of the reforms instituted and promulgated by the great reform leaders, Drs. Einborn of Baltimore, and Wise of Cincinnati. Yet, unlike most of the American Jewish congregations, this congregation submitted to the iconoclastic influence of the Jewish reform movement without the least perceptible reluctance or struggle, regarding, as it did, all the changes and innovations as God-sent and conformable with the spirit of the age and environments.

The first minister ever formally engaged by the Congregation was Rabbi Wechsler, who served from 1863 to 1864. Following is the list of Rabbis, who have served the congregation ever since:—Rabbi Laser, 1864-1866; Rabbi Gabricher, 1866-1868; Rabbi Eppstein, 1868-1870; Rabbi Weil, 1870-1871; Rabbi Gerstman, 1871-1873; Rabbi Kaufman, 1873-1876; Rabbi Lasker, 1876-1877; Rabbi Stempel, 1877-1879; Rabbi Eichelstein, 1879-1886; Rabbi Pollak, 1886-1887; Rabbi Block, 1887-1888; Rabbi Schapiro, 1888-1901. The present incumbent of the Temple is Rabbi Max Raisin, an alumnus of the Hebrew Union College and the University of Cincinnati. The Jewish citizens of Portsmouth have always done their utmost to live in peace and concord with their Christian fellow-citizens and have never refused their contributions towards other Congregations, when called upon. Their Christian friends always reciprocate these feelings of friendship. On the occasion of the dedication of the Jewish Temple, September, 1864, the choir of the Presbyterian Church very generously assisted at the services; and to this day, most of the members of the choir at the Temple are also members of the choir of the Bigelow M. E. Church.

The present officers of the Congregation are: President, I. Levi; Vice President, M. Lehman; Secretary, F. Haas; Treasurer, S. Schloss. Other bodies within the Congregation are: The Ladies' Temple Aid Society and the Jewish Kaffee Klatsch for the mutual social intercourse between the members of the Congregation.

Pleasant Green Baptist Church was organized February, 1864, by Rev. B. Harper. It was built and dedicated in 1865, on Findlay and Tenth streets. The following are the names of the members that were in the organization: James Daverson and wife, Alse Hunt, John Discerson and wife, Jeff Worlds, Adison Haly, Mary and Rachel Cocks, Mary E. Sands and daughter, Fannie Senton, L. Charity and wife and two daughters, Martha Spotts, Martha Tolbert, Martha Discerson, John Don-son. Names of pastors and years of service are the following: Rev. B. Harper, 1864 to 1869; Rev. Zimmerman, 1869 to 1870; Rev. James Severed, six months; Rev. Merritt, nine months; Rev. W. P. Cradic, six months; Rev. Redmon, four years; Rev. J. M. Meek, six months; Rev. W. W. Devan, two years; Rev. R. Meardeth, three years; Rev. C. M. Bools, three years; Rev. Dordth, six months; Rev. Newson, two years; Rev. P. Gyson, six months; Rev. Cradic, three months; Rev. Cockran, three years; Rev. A. Haly, two years; Rev. C. W. Strifling, eighteen months; Rev. Orner, three months; present pastor, Rev. J. I. Murray. It is his fifth year and under his administration, the members have made an addition to the old church, 36x52, which cost about $1,500.00 when completed. The old building cost $2,000.00. There are twelve voices in the choir, three male voices and nine females. The chorister is Cora Carr. The present officers of the church are: Frank Washington, John Holiday, Ped Stanfield, George Taylor, James Fleming and Oliver Steel. There are nine teachers in the Sunday school, seventy-eight pupils. The superintendent is P. M. Stanfield.

United Brethren Church.

The United Brethren church of Portsmouth, Ohio was organized in 1865 by Rev. George Schmidt who lived in Baltimore, Maryland.

The organization consisted of sixteen members, viz: Philip Herder and wife, Fred Voelker and wife, George Voelker and wife, James Voelker and wife, George Herder and wife, Mrs. Catherine Brandau, Mrs. Catherine Gilsdorf, Mrs. Henry Hast, Mrs. John Gansley, Mrs. Christina Staiger, Mr. Lewis Voelker.

The first board of trustees were composed of the following members: Philip Herder, Fred Voelker, George Voelker, James Voelker, George Herder.

The names of the ministers as follows: George Schmidt, 1865 to 1867; Fred Albright, 1867 to 1868; S. Schwab, 1868 to 1870; Henry Kumler, 1870 to 1871; Jacob Ernest, 1871 to 1872; Charles Stumph, 1872 to 1873; Valentine Assel, 1873 to 1875; E. S. Lorenz, 1875 to 1878; George Schmidt, 1878 to 1881; Casper Streich, 1881 to 1883; A. Kopittke, 1883 to 1886; J. T. Mosshammer, 1886 to 1889; Casper Streich, 1889 to 1892; B. F. Fritz, 1892 to 1894; J. Floerke, 1894 to 1895; John Schwab, 1895 to 1897; J. E. Comer, 1897 to present.

At one time the Church held services in what is now known as the Connelley Hall, later they built a small church on the corner of Seventh and Gay streets, where now stands the present church, which was remodeled some years ago at a cost of $4,000. The building and lot is now worth $10,000. The church had a struggle to exist, the old were dying, the younger people were drifting into other churches. This was discouraging to the workers and they realized that the time had come for action and the adoption of the English language, so, in the year 1897 the change was made, being the first congregation in the denomination to make so radical a change.

October 15, 1897, the boundary committee of Scioto Conference made the following report, "That the German United Brethren church at Portsmouth, Ohio, be received into Scioto Conference," which report was adopted. At the close of the conference Rev. J. E. Comer was assigned as Pastor. J. F. Menke was the first lay delegate to represent the church in an annual conference. George J. Schmidt and Philip M. Streich have represented the church in the conference of 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901.

The first English service was conducted by the present pastor, October 24, 1897. The membership at that time was seventy-five (75), the Sunday school attendance was thirty-seven (37). Since that time the success of the church has been remarkable. The present membership is two hundred and seventy-eight (278), an average increase of forty per year. The Sunday School has an enrollment of three hundred and eighty (380) with an average attendance of two hundred and twenty-five (225). The church is well organized with a strong board of trustees composed of the following: George Brandau, President; J. F. Menke, Secretary and Treasurer; George Schmidt, John Moeller, Lewis Voelker, Philip M. Streich, John Norman.

George J. Schmidt is Sunday School Superintendent with a band of faithful officers and teachers; Miss Maud Rockwell, Secretary; Philip M. Streich, Treasurer; Fred Reinhardt, Librarian. Teachers, Mesdames John Prior, William Reed, W. S. Haney and P. M. Streich, Misses Kate Menke, Cora Frowein, Marie Chabot, Eliza Hanes, Messrs. Walter McCarty, D. Y. Coriell, J. F. Menke, Philip Emrich, William Smith, George Brandau, John Prior.

Ladies Aid Society, Mrs. William Reed, President; Mrs. George Schmidt, Secretary; Mrs. P. M. Streich, Treasurer.

Otterbein Society, Miss Mattie Kanouse, President; Eliza Hanes, Secretary; Bertha Brandau, Treasurer.

Young People's Christian Union, Arthur Cox, President; Katie Menke, Secretary; John Prior, Treasurer.

The Junior Y. P. C. U. have Mrs. W. S. Haney as Superintendent.

Miss Katie Menke is the organist and the choir is composed of the following: Mamie Emrich, Anna Smith, Bertie Staiger, Mattie Kanouse, Edna Streich, Eliza Hanes, Eva Smith, Deana Herder, Henry Knost, Fred Reinhardt, Stephen Holman.

The different societies are working with a new church in view as the present building is too small for the growing congregation. The church raised last year for all purposes $2,000.00.

The financial part of the church is looked after by George J. Schmidt as General Steward, J. F. Menke, Secretary; Lewis Voelker, Church Treasurer; John Moeller, Philip Bobst, Conrad Hast, Emanuel Oakes, D. V. Coriell as Church Stewards.

The German Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, was organized on the 29th of October, 1866. It was originally a branch of the German Evangelical Church. Under the services of the Rev. H. Veith it was organized at the above mentioned date as a Presbyterian church by the Presbytery of Hocking. But few of the charter members have survived. Some of its founders are Chris Hehl, Adam Burkel, J. P. Wilhelm, Valentine Burkel, Adam Reeg, Jacob Hey, Phil Reeg, Conrad Gerlach, John Doerr, Frederick Hoesch, Mrs. W. Bihlman, William Leichner, Mrs. M. Laubley. The first Board of Elders consisted of the following persons: Rev. H. Veith, Chairman, Valentine Burkel, Phil Reeg and J. P. Wilhelm. The names of the pastors and years of service are the following: Rev. H. Veith, 1866 to 1870; Rev. John Heckmann, 1870 to 1873; Rev. Elias Benzing, 1874 to 1885; Rev. F. W. Schwabe, 1885 to 1887; Rev. H. C. Guthe, 1887 to 1890; Rev. E. A. Ehlfeld, 1890 to 1893; Rev. A. Toensmeier, 1893 to 1901; Rev. H. De Beer, 1901 to present time. Until 1869, the congregation worshiped in the old Connelley Hall, on Fifth street, near Chillicothe. In 1869 the present building was erected on the corner of Seventh and Chillicothe streets at a cost of about $10,000.00. Its seating capacity is about 500. The structure is a large brick. The steeple of which has never been completed. The congregation was organized with ninety-eight members, and although it has passed through some very trying periods, it has been steadily advancing, and has a membership of 250. The pipe organ cost about $800.00. The choir numbers four male voices, four female voices and one violinist. Miss Grace Andres is the organist. The original German Sunday school was disbanded some two years ago, and an English Sunday school has been organized, which has today an enrollment of 157, with four officers and seventeen teachers. The present superintendent is Bernhard Heid; the secretary is Walter Kress and the treasurer, Ed. Buchert. The Sunday school is in a most promising condition, with a constant growth. The present officers of the church are: Rev. H. De Beer, pastor; Elders, Rev. John Heid, Adam Young, Chris Hehl, John Grohmann and Henry Kress; Deacons, John Brandel, Jr., John Linck and Charles J. Schmid; Trustees, John Brandel, Jr., President of the Board of Trustees, Edward Buchert, Secretary, William Pressler, Treasurer, Charles J. Schmid, George Hoesch, Valentine Roth, Leon Stegman, Bernhard Heid. The church is in a very prosperous condition and every branch of the congregation shows marked signs of activity. Some $1,500.00 was spent in the summer of 1902 in remodeling and renovating the church. The morning service on Sundays is conducted in German and the Sunday evening service and other services of the congregation are conducted in English.

The Second Presbyterian Church, located on the northwest corner of Eighth and North Waller streets, was completed early in January, 1875.

The need and desire for a Second Presbyterian Church in this locality originated with the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Dr. E. P. Pratt and his congregation. The idea had been entertained by them for some years before, that Presbyterians should locate a church in this territory, which at that time was well to the northeast of the more populous part of the city, and about a mile from the First Church. This desire found expression in the year 1870 by a memorial thank offering of $5,000.00 from the First Church for the consummation of the union of the two branches of the Presbyterian church which was used for the purchase of the lot where the church now stands.

The foundation of the Second Church was laid in 1872, and the building finally completed at a total cost of $20,000.00.

It was built under the management of the following building committee from the First Church: J. L. Hibbs, J. H. Rhoades, W. K. Thompson; and a finance committee consisting of E. B. Green, A. B. Voorheis and others. It was dedicated on the 24th day of January, 1875, free of debt, a generous gift of the mother church to the hundred and seventy-two charter members who chose to transfer their membership from the old to the new church and enter this new field of Christian work. The first minister was Rev. H. A. Ketcham, D. D., who had been the Associate Pastor of the First Church, and served the Second Church for ten years from its organization. The division to create the Second church was entirely harmonious, and purely voluntary as to those who elected to go or remain with the First Church.

The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. H. A. Ketcham, D. D., from Psalms, 96-6, "Honor and majesty are before Him; strength and beauty are in His Sanctuary." On the 9th of February following, the Second Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, was organized by the Presbytery of Portsmouth.

The first session was composed of the following persons: Joseph Riggs, George W. Weyer, M. D., J. P. Bing, M. D., O. D. McCall, P. J. Kline, M. D., and Dr. C. P. Dennis; and the following were the first board of Trustees: I. R. Lane, O. C. McCall, R. P. Rifenberick, Irving Drew, and J. H. Brown. On April 3, 1876, the first board of Deacons was elected as follows: T. M. Patterson, Irving Drew, J. R. Boal, W. S. Green. The first superintendent of the Sabbath school was G. W. Weyer, M. D., who continued his services for several years.

There have served the church as pastors: Rev. H. A. Ketcham, D. D., 1875 to December, 1884; Rev. C. L. Work, D. D., July 1885 to January 1890; Rev. R. K. Porter, May 1890 to March 1892; Rev. Simeon Gobiet, June 1892 to June 1895; Rev. D. R. Francis as supply during parts of 1895-1896, and the present pastor, Dr. S. B. Alderson since November, 1896.

The original church structure was built in the form of a cross and will seat about five hundred people. In 1894 a two story addition, costing about $5,000.00, was built, with a primary room and several class rooms on the first floor for Sabbath School purposes, and a prayer meeting room on the second floor with seating capacity of two hundred.

The original structure was partially destroyed by fire June 9th, 1895. It was practically covered by insurance, and was at once rebuilt and re-dedicated December 1, 1895, Dr. D. S. Tappan of the First Church preaching the re-dedication sermon.

The present membership of the church is five hundred and thirty-four. The present Board of Elders are A. G. Sellards, M. D., Irving Drew, C. H. Towse, W. W. Gates, Jr., W. H. Smith, John E. Williams, H. W. Heer and Lewis Lowery. The Board of Deacons consists of W. G. Williams, C. W. Carson, Alonzo Williams, A. Littlejohn, W. H. Dressler and J. Rinner. The Board of Trustees is composed of John Peebles, John Richardson, J. M. Wall, Philip Bauer, O. W. Blood, G. H. Heinisch, Henry Revare, W. S. Kennedy and H. T. Wilson.

The Sabbath school now has a membership of three hundred and ninety-two pupils, thirty-nine teachers and eight officers; W. W. Gates, Jr., Superintendent.

After a lapse of twenty-seven years there are of the hundred and seventy-two charter members now on the active roll but twenty-four. Many have died, some changed their residences, and others their church relations, and but two of the officers composing the first boards are still connected with the church.

Mainly Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1892 under the auspices of Bigelow M. E. church. The church building is on the northwest corner of Eleventh and Clay streets. The original trustees were T. J. Buck, J. H. Farmer, G. D. Wait, R. A. Cross, J. A. Maxwell and Milton Monroe. The succession of ministers is as follows:

N. D. Bigelow, July 3, 1892 to October 1, 1892; A. Gilruth, October 1, 1892, to October 1, 1893; James F. Steele, October 1, 1893, to October 1, 1896; F. M. Swinehart, October 1, 1896, to October 1, 1898; H. B. Cooper, October 1, 1898, to October 1, 1899; C. A. Fellows, October 1, 1899, to the present time.

The church was built in 1892 at a cost of $2,500. It was enlarged in 1901 at a cost of $3,750. The seating capacity is 650. The main room is 65x30 north room 30x20, south room 15x20. The choir consists of 12 voices. T. J. Buck is the chorister. There are 13 Stewards and eight Trustees. It started with 37 members. The Sunday School has 15 teachers, 8 officers and 340 pupils. John Bridwell is the Superintendent. In the nine years it has grown from 37 to 400 members. It is well situated to minister to the spiritual wants of a large population.

HOSPITALS.Park Hospital.

The establishment of Park Hospital grew out of a desire on the part of a number of the Physicians in this community, for better facilities for caring for the sick and injured than were provided for at the building used by the city for such purposes. It is a private institution owned and managed by Doctors S. S. Halderman and J. S. Rardin. Dr. H. G. Halderman is connected with the institution as House Physician. It is conveniently located at number 44 East

PARK HOSPITAL.

Ninth street, facing Tracy Park on the south. The building is large and commodious and equipped with modern furnishings throughout and has capacity for twenty patients. The first patient was admitted on May 12, 1902, since which it has received the patronage of quite a number of very sick and injured people.

The Hospital is general in character and admits for treatment patients of both medical and surgical diseases and supplies a want long felt in the community.

The City Hospital.

On February 4, 1870, the city of Portsmouth purchased of Thomas Dugan about 3 1-2 acres of ground just north of the Captain Samuel J. Huston property on the west of the Chillicothe Pike. The land was lots 1 and 5 of a subdivision of 65 acres in Fractional Sections 7 and 8 in Township 1 Range 21. The division of the 65 acres was made April 1, 1837. The purchase price was $5,000.00. There was on the property a two story brick house built by Anthony Miller, a butcher, in 1835. For a long time before the city bought it, it had the reputation of being haunted and no one would live in it. The city never improved the property any except to build a small frame house on the west side which has been used as a pest house for small pox patients. The purchase was recommended on July 21, 1870, by a committee of the City Council. The Council ordered the Board of Health to take charge of it. On February 4, 1870 the City Council appointed the First Board of City Hospital Commissioners. They were Wells A. Hutchins, Benj. F. Coates, Wm. K. Thompson and Thomas Dugan. On February 18, 1870, Wells A. Hutchins declined the appointment and Colonel O. F. Moore was appointed in his place. On June 19, 1874, the City Hospital was tendered for the use of the Children's Home and accepted. The ladies used it until November 8, 1875, when they moved to the Home provided by the County. On November 8, 1875, Ph. Zoellner and John N. Royse were appointed Hospital Commissioners. April 20, 1877, Frank F. Varner and James Evans were appointed on the Board. April 19, 1878, Dr. Lewis Schwab was appointed. The following are some of those appointed since: May 17, 1878, Dr. C. M. Finch; April 19, 1879, Samuel J. Huston, Junior; May 14, 1881, William Stokely; March 3, 1886, Noah J. Dever. On May 5, 1886, Council passed an ordinance to abolish the Board. On June 6, 1889, George Fisher was appointed a member of the Board. May 20, 1891, Thomas T. Yeager was appointed. On March 2, 1892, Dr. C. P. Dennis was appointed to take the place of J. C. McGinley, deceased. On May 1, 1897, George Fisher, F. B. Kehoe, and Dr. W. D. Tremper were appointed on the board. December 20, 1899, George E. Kricker and George M. Osborne were appointed on the Board. The following is not a complete list of all who have held the office, but the names above are given so that the public may enquire of those living why a new, fine and modern City Hospital has not been erected. In respect to this feature of City public relief, Portsmouth has stood still.

CEMETERIES.

The first Cemetery in Portsmouth was where the Burgess mill formerly stood. There the first inhabitants of the village of Portsmouth were buried. This plat of ground was deeded by Henry Massie to the President of the Common Council of Portsmouth, October 1, 1819, for a consideration of $100.00 and is found recorded in Volume E page 207 of the Record of Deeds of Scioto County, Ohio. There seemed to be some question as to whether the deed was made in trust for the purpose of burying in the town of Portsmouth. The quantity of ground conveyed was 2 194-1000 acres. In 1829, there was some question as to the title and Mr. Massie made the town a second deed recorded in Volume F, page 457, June 3, 1829, which was to discharge the ground of the trust. This burial spot was enclosed in 1829. The word "Cemetery" was not used until April 11, 1853. Before that time the burial spot was designated as the graveyard. From 1821 to 1824, this old burial ground filled up rapidly. These were the sickly years in Portsmouth. On February 9, 1820, there was appointed a committee of the Common Council to contract with some one to enclose the burial ground. The inference would be that it had not been enclosed before. John R. Turner, William Lodwick and Jacob P. Noel were appointed. On May 29, 1822, fifty dollars was appropriated by the Common Council to fence the graveyard, and a committee was appointed to attend to it. On January 15, 1830, the Town Council ordered the old graveyard closed. Most of the bodies were removed to the new graveyard, though when the Burgess Steel and Iron Works dug pits for its machinery, it often dug out pieces of coffins and disinterred human bones. Sometimes pieces of coffins and human bones were washed out by the Scioto River, in flood seasons, when it caved the high bank just north of the Rolling Mill.

On May 12, 1826, agitation for a new cemetery began. John Noel and Ebenezer Corwine were appointed a committee to buy three to five acres for a new burying ground. This committee did nothing and on February 6, 1829, William Oldfield and Kennedy Lodwick were appointed a committee to buy a new burial ground and they were to report at the next meeting. On March 9, 1829, the town bought five acres of Nathaniel Whitmore for a graveyard. The price paid was $250. One-third in four months, one-third in eight months and one-third in one year. This was the beginning of Greenlawn. On January 15, 1830, John Noel was ordered to clear the five acres of timber and he and Dr. Hempstead were appointed to lay it out in lots. The original five-acre tract is described as follows: Lying and being in the county of Scioto and State of Ohio and situate in Sections Fifteen and Sixteen of Township 1 and Range 21 of Langhorn's (Langham's) Survey, and on the west of the road leading from Portsmouth to Martin Funk's and bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a stake at the north-west corner of the lot from which a sugar tree bears south 80 degrees east 31 links, running thence east with the section line 43 poles to a stake at the road; thence by said road south 37 degrees 28 1-2 poles to a stake from which a black oak bears south 80 degrees east 15 links; thence west 26 poles to a stake in the west line; thence north with the west line 23 1-2 poles to the place of beginning, containing five acres more or less. It was signed March 4, 1829, acknowledged March 24, 1829 and recorded March 31, 1829, in the Record of Deeds Volume F. 1, pages 381 and 382.

The first burial in this Whitmore tract was Captain Josiah Shackford who died July 6, 1829, in his ninety-third year. His grave is marked and has never been changed. William Peebles, the eldest brother of the late John G. Peebles, was the second burial in the new Cemetery. He died at the house of Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead, his brother-in-law on Friday, July 24, 1829, aged thirty-two years, eight months and forty-eight days. His body was taken to the Peebles Hotel and his funeral occurred July 29, 1829. It was conducted by Rev. E. Brainerd, pastor of the Presbyterian Church. He was buried in lot number one of the new graveyard. He had assisted in laying out the lots and had selected and purchased this one. His was the second interment in the grave yard. Afterwards, when Mr. Peebles purchased the lot in Evergreen Cemetery, south-west of the Whitmore Purchase, the body of William Peebles was removed to the present Peebles lot. James Marcus Huston is said to have been the third. The next burials of which any record has been preserved were Mrs. Elizabeth Cross, October 20, 1829, and Elijah Glover, Senior, October 27, 1829. On the 20th of April, 1835 the Methodist Episcopal church bought 1 175-1000 acres of Nathaniel Whitmore and wife for a Cemetery. It is described as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of Corporation Burying Ground running west twenty-six poles to a stake, thence eight poles south to a stake, thence twenty-one poles east to a stake, thence running meandering with the Chillicothe road to the place of beginning.

The trustees to whom the deed was made were: John R. Turner, John McDowell, Moses Gregory, Jacob P. Noel, Cornelius C. Hyatt, Joseph S. Timmons, John Barber, Jacob Offnere, and Nathaniel W. Andrews. The consideration was $300.00. The deed is recorded in Volume H, page 361 of the Record of Deeds of Scioto County, Ohio. The following are some of the subscriptions to the purchase money: John McDowell, $10.00; Jacob P. Noel, $5.00; John R. Turner, $5.00; Nathaniel W. Andrews, $6.00; Lewis C. Barker, $3.00; John Barber, $1.00; George Carraway, $5.00; Jacob Clingman, $5.00; George W. Clingman, $2.00; Thomas McConnell, $3.00; John Jennings, $3.00; Azel Glover, $2.00; George Reeves, $5.00; Jacob Offnere, $5.00; William V. Peck, $1.00; Martin Crain, $2.00; John M. White, $2.00; J. V. Robinson, $4.00; J. B. Clingman, $2.00; Southey Copes, $6.50. This Methodist Cemetery lies directly south of the purchase by the town of Nathaniel Whitmore, in 1829 and east of the Avenue opening into Lincoln street. Of the twenty subscribers above named, eleven are buried in that plat of ground. J. V. Robinson owned the property south of that, and on December 22, 1853, he made a plat of a part of it. It embraced eighteen lots together with the eight lots for the Robinson family. It lay immediately south of the purchase made by the Methodist Cemetery. The lots were numbered up to eighteen and lot R belonged to the Robinson family. It was fifty-three feet one inch by forty-three feet ten inches. Afterwards on December 1, 1856, Mr. Robinson made a second purchase which is found in Volume 1, page 61. It embraced lots numbered from nineteen to thirty-nine laid off in regular squares. It lay immediately south of what he had previously dedicated for cemetery purposes. Afterwards on July 15, 1857, the unsold lots of Robinson Cemetery were deeded by Mr. Robinson to Thomas G. Lloyd, consideration, $300.00. The deed is found in Volume 1, page 545. It included all the unsold lots in the two Robinson plats. The tract east of the Robinson Cemeteries, now the Methodist Cemetery on Offnere street, was purchased by a Company known as the Evergreen Cemetery Company. Its deed cannot be found. Its purchase amounted to about 6 acres. John G. Peebles, Thomas G. Lloyd, B. B. Gaylord and others were in the organization. On October 4, 1872, the company sold out its holdings to the City of Portsmouth and the plat was incorporated into "Greenlawn." Mr. John G. Peebles donated $1,200.00 of holdings in Evergreen Cemetery to the City for the purposes of a fountain. On January 13, 1873, the City Council by resolution changed the name of Evergreen Cemetery to "Greenlawn." On December 18, 1868, the City of Portsmouth purchased of P. Kelley 8 acres of land north of the "Evergreen Cemetery" and east of the Whitmore tract for $5,000. It was originally a part of the Aaron Kinney place. On December 5, 1857, the first lodge was built in the cemetery.

The Cemetery of the Holy Redeemer Church is east of Offnere street and north of the Kelley purchase. It was deeded by Edward Mulligan and wife to the Right Rev. John Watterson, Bishop of Columbus, Ohio, on the 28th of August, 1886, and the record of the deed is found in Vol. 46 page 535 in Record of Deeds of Scioto County. The purchase was four and five-tenths acres. It was originally a part of the Colonel Peter Kinney place. The St. Mary's Church Cemetery lies north of "Greenlawn." It purchased two tracts. The first tract was purchased of Peter Brodbeck, found recorded in Vol. 43, page 416, January 25, 1889, for consideration of $920.00, and embraced two acres. The second tract was purchased of the heirs of Stephen Brodbeck for a consideration of $1,380.00 January 11, 1889, and found recorded in Vol. 46, page 132, and embraced three acres. All of these cemeteries are now under the control of the city of Portsmouth and governed by a Board of three cemetery trustees, one of which is elected every municipal election. On September 20, 1882, the German Catholic Cemetery was opened. The Portsmouth Tribune of September 5, 1860, gives the following statistics as to the City Cemetery. There were 670 tombstones on which the age was given, of which the males were 355 and females 315. The average of the males was 20 1-2 and of the females 20. The infants were: males 28, females 27. Under five years of age, 150 females and 144 males. Ages between 20 and 40 years, males 67 and females 51.

MEMORIAL DAYS.

The first observance of this custom in the city of Portsmouth, Ohio, was on the 29th day of May, 1869, when there was a public observance. General Peter Kinney, Captain A. C. Thompson and Colonel Henry E. Jones were the Marshals of the day. The first decoration of the soldiers' graves was done by the Ladies' Relief Circle May 30, 1869. In June, 1869, Colonel O. F. Moore was appointed to procure wooden markers for the graves of the soldiers in Greenlawn.

May 30, 1870, was observed. At nine o'clock in the morning the procession started from the Court House to the Cemetery. At Tracy Park, a Temporary Monument was erected to the Deceased Soldiers, and at 2 o'clock P. M. at the Court House General J. Warren Keifer, of Springfield, addressed the people, and a banquet was held at the Taylor House in the evening.

May 30, 1875, the procession started at 4 P. M. at Market street, with the Portsmouth Cadets, the German Light Infantry and the Kinney Guards. Col. Peter Kinney was in command in his Colonel uniform. The following girls were in two carriages appointed to do the decorating, Rhoda Nichols, Mary Lodwick, Mame Reed, Martha Dinsmore, Kate Hull, Mary Gibbs, Lizzie Moore, Anna Tracy, Lillie Yoakley, Nannie Musser, Mary Tewksbury, Jeanette Robinson, Ella Stewart and Louie Towell. The parade marched to the Cemetery, and after the girls had decorated the graves of the soldiers, and a few remarks by Colonel Kinney, they were dismissed.

On May 30, 1876, Col. H. E. Jones was Marshal of the Day. His staff was Captain William Wallace Reilly, R. P. Riftenberick, A. C. Thompson, H. W. Farnham followed by a Company of the National Guards. The Marshal of the First Division was Col. S. E. Varner. His assistants were James Skelton, C. S. Cadot and E. E. Ewing. In the first division were the soldiers of the late war, in their old uniforms, then the ladies and decorating committees and city officers. The Marshal of the Second Division was Col. Wm. M. Bolles and his assistants were A. B. Cole, J. B. Warwick and J. W. Overturf. The Centennial Brass Band was with the First Division, and it was followed by the Fire Department, Harmonic Society and German Societies. The Third Division was commanded by Major C. F. Reiniger. His assistants were J. W. Ricker and N. W. Evans. The Third Division was mounted. The procession was the largest seen in the city and the best handled. They marched from Second to Chillicothe, thence to Ninth, thence to the Cemetery, and the line of march had been sprinkled the night before. Rev. I. M. Stanger delivered the address.

May 30, 1879, the soldier's monument in Tracy Park was dedicated. Col. John A. Turley was the General Marshal. Currier's Cornet Band from Cincinnati was present. There were seven divisions. The first was commanded by General Wells Jones. His assistants were John W. Overturf, William B. Williams, F. C. Gibbs, A. B. Alger, James Skelton, William H. Bonsall. Ex-Governor Cumback of Indiana delivered the address.

May 30, 1883, Gen. Wells S. Jones was the Grand Marshal. Col. W. J. Worthington delivered the address. Captain William Reilly conducted the exercises of the day. Miss Ollie Applegate recited.

May 30, 1884, there was a procession at 1:30 P. M. Col. John A. Turley was Grand Marshal, with John W. Overturf, C. S. Cadot and Creed Milstead as aides. The soldiers' circle was formally dedicated. In decorating the graves the members of the Relief Circle continued until 1885, when they turned it over to the members of the Grand Army of the Republic. Thereafter the Relief Circle decorated only the graves of their own members.

May 30, 1890, the matter of the observance of the day was put into the hands of the Sons of Veterans.

To the patriotic ladies of Portsmouth is due the credit that the soldiers' graves in Greenlawn Cemetery have been marked with Government stones. Mrs. Laura E. Watkins, at the instance of the City, took up the matter. The first allowance in Greenlawn Cemetery was for thirty stones. After they had been furnished, one of the government officers connected with the furnishing of the stones called upon Mrs. Watkins and said that she was the only woman in the United States who had done this work.

The first recognition of "Memorial Day" by the State of Ohio, was April 8, 1884, when a law was passed, Section 3177, Revised Statutes, making May 30, a Bank Holiday for the payment of Commercial Paper. No other or further state recognition has been made.

Congress did not act until August 1, 1888, when by a law of that date, the thirtieth of May, "Decoration Day," was made a public holiday in the District of Columbia. 25 U. S. Statutes, 600.

One of the saddest sights on Memorial Day is to see the procession of old soldiers marching, in their feebleness, in processions, to the strains of martial music, which stirred their youthful hearts more than forty years ago. Much more than half of them have answered their last bugle call and their spirits are camping in the "Elysian Fields." It is pitiful to see the survivors' attempts at marching, but when called on to honor the memory of their comrades who fell in battle, or died in service, they forget their years, the spirit of youth returns to them, and fires their souls.

But the saddest of all to an old soldier, in connection with the day, is to observe the generations born since the war, turn the day into one of sports and games. It is as much as to say to the old soldiers "We despise the memory of your war and shall turn your day into sport." Pagan Rome might have games on funeral occasions, but Christian and civilized America cannot afford to follow that example. The people of this country are too great and too powerful to refuse to give one day to the memory of the dead. No son, or daughter, or descendant of a soldier of the Civil War should ever, on that day, engage in any sports or games or be found elsewhere than with those celebrating the day, engage in any sports or games or be found elsewhere than with those celebrating the day. If the day cannot be observed as was intended, then the laws for its observance should be repealed.

CHAPTER IV.

Diseases in the Early History of Portsmouth by Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead—The Physicians—The Practice of Dentistry.

EARLY DISEASES.

"The Practice of Medicine and the Physicians from the First Settlement to 1867" was the title of a lecture by Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead, delivered in the First Presbyterian church, Portsmouth, O., August 31, 1876. The lecture was published by the Scioto County Medical Society, and these extracts are from it. Dr. Hempstead was introduced by Dr. A. B. Jones. The diseases of sixty years ago (1816), were almost all of a miasmatic character and were all reached by periodicity. All the forms of intermittent diseases, all the varieties of the Pontine Marshes as defined and laid down by Alibier were prevalent in the first settlement of our town and county. The diseases were principally in the valleys. On the hills or tablelands was typhoid fever, but it was reached by periodicity. Pneumonia and pleurisy occasionally appeared, and if the depletion were not practised, were manageable and not so fatal, as at this time. Acute rheumatism was common and lasted as long as now. Croup was rare and apt in families where there was a constitutional predisposition. Contagious and infectious diseases rarely became epidemic. I think malaria prevented their spread. By contagious diseases I mean smallpox, chickenpox, whooping cough, mumps and scarlet fever. The year 1821 was remarkable for the general prevalence of autumnal disease. The form of the disease was remittent, ushered in by a slight chill, at times hardly perceptible, followed by a continuous fever, occurring in paroxysms, exorbitating and remitting until it ceased spontaneously, or by medication on the third, fifth, seventh, ninth, or fourteenth days, attended by profuse perspiration at the close of the critical paroxysm. These critical days followed the rules laid down by Hypocrates and Galen except on the eighth, on which day most of the diseases terminated in health. If they passed this day without a crisis they became alarming and if the patient had sufficient tenacity of life to resist the disease and doctor, he might go into the seventeenth, never longer. They had ague, and fever and ague, with the former they would go about their business, between chills, with the two they were in bed, from the first attack to the close. This form of autumnal fever continued till 1858, when I retired from practise, and it is not rare at the present time. In 1821, the disease was in the valley out of the town. There were eight hundred cases inside of twelve weeks. The epidemics of 1822 and 1823 commenced in July and lasted to October, falling upon nearly the whole population outside the town. This was the jubilee time of the lancet and it was used indiscriminately. At that time my view was against blood letting, and it has been confirmed by the subsequent experience of the profession. In 1824, the epidemic began in July and seemed confined to the town. The town physicians did not have twenty cases of fever outside of the town, during the whole season. Out of the whole population but twelve adults escaped the fever. It affected all ages. In one day I saw fifteen cases of convulsions, caused in children, by this disease. The mortality, however, from 1821 to 1824, was not over 2 per cent. The treatment was to relieve the stomach and bowels of offensive matters, to promote perspiration, and save the strength of the patient as much as possible; to fulfill the first, emetics and mild cathartics were used; and to fulfill the last, tonics. From 1824 to July, 1832, no epidemics occurred. In July, 1832, there were three cases of Asiatic cholera successfully cured. There was another in October also cured. From the thirteenth to the twenty-fifth, there were three cases on boats brought from Cincinnati. There was one case in July, 1833, and in August and September, a number of cases of diarrhoea and dysentery. In May, 1834, there was cholera which continued to July 20, when it ceased and the usual fever appeared. There were not over ten cases at one time, but the mortality was greater than ever before or since. There were a few cases of smallpox in 1837. In January, 1843, typhoid pneumonia was prevalent, almost an epidemic, and continued until March. It was almost epidemic from January to May, 1845. From May 10 to November, 1845, the usual miasmatic diseases prevailed. In 1846 and 1847, the people were quite healthy, except smallpox. From December, 1847, till in 1848, scarlet fever prevailed. In May, 1849, cholera and cholera morbus appeared. Cholera began May 15, and continued until August 31, and then diminished, and the ordinary fevers prevailed. In June, 1830, cholera and cholera morbus became epidemic, and continued to the last of July. From this time till the spring of 1858, no universal visitation of any disease appeared. I have known epidemics to cease in a day, in an hour, while the poison was in full force and abundant material to work upon, to give place to other diseases and then to return again. Infectious and contagious diseases are less prevalent in malarial districts. The practice of the physicians in the early times was heroic. In 1821 and 1822, there was a disease called gangrenosis or cancrumous. There was an ulceration and sloughing of the gums and lips. The teeth came out. It resembled mercurial salivation, but was more violent and deep-seated. It was attributed to the use of calomel. Many recovered with disfigurements and some died. In the latter class the gangrene extended from the face down into the neck, implicating the large blood vessels. The first symptom was the picking out of a tooth with the fingers. It occurred among children almost exclusively. Only one adult had it. The lancet began to be disused in 1821 and 1822. Jalop was a favorite medicine in the same year. Calomel also began to be disused in this time. In 1811, the legislature passed a law to regulate the practice of Physic and Surgery. Scioto county was in the Fifth district. There were three examiners in each district, whose duty it was to examine all applicants. No physician could practice without a license from the board of his district. The penalty for violating was inability to collect his debts. The law was repealed and another enacted. No censors were appointed for Scioto county under either law. In 1877, the law was amended and Dr. Jacob Offner appointed censor. This was the first appointment made in Scioto county. In 1830, all laws on the subject were repealed.

PHYSICIANS.

It is always easy to name the first physician in Portsmouth, Dr. Thomas Waller. He had the field all to himself until 1816, when Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead came.

Dr. Jacob Offner came in 1805 or 1806, but located and practised at the mouth of the Little Scioto. He bought the present Damarin farm of the United States and moved on it, when he gave up the practice of medicine in 1816. He then went into the practice of making money, in which he was very successful.

From 1811 to 1817 Dr. Claudius Dufigne was a resident of Portsmouth and held himself out as a physician. He was very learned, or had the reputation of being so. He had an extensive collection of medical works mostly in the French language. He had more surgical instruments than any doctor in Portsmouth, but whether he had any practice of consequence is not known. The medical fraternity of his time regarded him as a learned physician.

In 1818 there was a Dr. De St. Leger. He advertised as a French physician, surgeon, midwife and dentist. He was a bird of passage, and did not remain long. Dr. Thomas Hersey was in Portsmouth in 1820, and for some years after. In 1821 a Dr. M. Snow was associated with Dr. Hersey. The latter pulled out in 1822.

Dr. James B. Prescott was one of the early physicians, a very respectable member of the profession, with standing sufficient to have been a member of the Hempstead Academy in our day, had he lived in it. Dr. Prescott, however, liked hotel keeping better than the practice of medicine.

A Dr. James Ellis came in 1822, but soon flitted away. Dr. Nathaniel Andrews came in 1823, and remained until his death in 1841. He was a good physician and an excellent citizen. He was a devout Methodist, and Dr. Hemp-stead admired him very much. Dr. Arthur Farquhar came, in 1827, but soon engaged in other pursuits.

Dr. Robert Rogers came in 1832, and was associated with Dr. Hempstead for two years. The two Doctors Pattillo came in 1833. They were from "tide water" Virginia. The older doctor did not practice and the younger one was associated with Dr. Hempstead for one year.

In 1837, Drs. Pattillo and Hall were in partnership. In the same year there located a Dr. Thomas Sim.

In 1838, Dr. G. G. Wood advertised himself as of London, England. There was also a Dr. Petrie came in the same year.

In 1839, Dr. B. Work came in; he was of the Botanic school.

In 1842, Dr. Sonderegger advertised. On February 4th, 1842, Dr. James M. Shackelford came. In the same year Drs. Pattillo and Voglesong were in partnership.

In 1844, Dr. Joseph Corson came to Portsmouth.

In 1846, Dr. J. W. Dennis located. He sometimes practised medicine and sometimes kept a grocery.

In 1845, Dr. William J. McDowell began practice.

On November 7, 1847, Dr. T. Garwood began practising. He was a water doctor, or in medical phraseology, a hydropath.

In 1848, Drs. Hempstead and Corson were partners.

On May 26, 1851, Dr. Hiram G. Jones located in Portsmouth. He conducted a drug store a part of the time, and afterwards went to Evansville, Ind., where he died. On October 17, 1851, Dr. G. St. Clair Hussey located in Portsmouth, the first homeopath.

On January 17, 1853, Dr. Henry Edgar, another homeopathist, located in Portsmouth. In 1853, Dr. Hiram G. and Andrew Barry Jones advertised as physicians.

On November 8, 1854, Dr. E. Seguin, a French physician, advertised.

In 1855, Drs. Corson and Mussey were in Portsmouth. November 14, 1855, Dr. J. A. Wakeman, another homeopathist, located, and on the same day Drs. Z. H. Sanders, Neel and Philo advertised.

August 17, 1859, Dr. E. Arnold advertised. March 4, 1857, Dr. M. L. Barr published his card. May 16, 1857, Dr. David B. Cotton advertised. He stated that his office and lodging were with Dr. S. B. Hempstead.

On February 24, 1858, Drs. Shackelford and McDowell were partners.

On October 19, 1859, Dr. St. Leger Riley advertised, he was from Dayton, O. On December 10, 1859, Dr. C. C. Bronson, a homeopathist, located in Portsmouth.

On April 4, 1860, Dr. George Washington located in Portsmouth. He married a daughter of Captain Samuel J. Huston, and went to Missouri. He was of the Botanic School.

On June 4, 1861, Dr. F. A. Kneffner, a homeopathist, located.

On June 8, 1862, Dr. O. J. Hall came to Portsmouth. He had practised at Wheelersburg for several years. On August 18, 1860, Dr. George B. Bailey advertised. He came from Aberdeen, O., and gave his life for his country in 1861. On June 28, 1860, Dr. C. C. Brown, another homeopathist, came to town.

On December 5, 1863, Dr. Maurice Kickback came to town. He was a graduate of Berlin University, and was top heavy with learning. January 16, 1864, Dr. D. C. Munn advertised. January 11, 1864, Dr. Lewis Schwab advertised as a physician.

Dr. Benjamin F. Coates located in Portsmouth on July 26, 1865. He had been a successful physician in West Union, O., but only practised about one year in Portsmouth. He became Collector of the Internal Revenue and gave up his profession. He preferred the practice of politics, to medicine, and was very successful in the former.

August 4, 1866, Dr. J. J. Wood located in Portsmouth. He was from Iron-ton. November 24, 1866, Dr. Cyrus M. Finch located in Portsmouth. He had previously practised in Wheelersburg.

June 8, 1867, Dr. O. J. Wilson, a homeopathist, located. He left soon. November 30, 1867, Dr. T. T. Garlic began practising in Portsmouth.

The ten who signed the fee bill of 1867 were A. B. Jones, D. B. Cotton, J. A. Lair, Wm. J. McDowell, C. M. Finch, J. M. Shackelford, O. J. Hall, B. F. Coates, L. Schwab, H. McCorney; all now (1901), deceased, but Dr. Cotton.

On December 25, 1867, Dr. James Phelps Bing located in Portsmouth.

On May 13, 1868, Dr. J. Haas was located in Portsmouth. He was one of God's "chosen people," but soon departed for fairer fields.

On December 30, 1868, Dr. M. S. Pixley located in Portsmouth.

On May 15, 1870, Dr. John R. McClure began practice.

November 13, 1827, B. A. Taft, and eclectic physician located. Also L. W. Taft, a brother. One of them kept an eclectic drug store.

May 28, 1873, Dr. Theo. F. Davidson came to Portsmouth from Greenup, Ky. He remained a number of years and then went to Columbus.

On April 23, 1874, Dr. Peter J. Kline, of Ross county, located in Portsmouth. On June 3, 1874 Albert L. Mehaffey a homeopath, located. He remained but a few months.

H. T. Wilson, M. D., located in 1869. Dr. S. M. Garwood located in 1869, a botanic and eclectic, but death soon took him, November 10, 1870, at the age of thirty-four.

February 11, 1874, Dr. H. C. Beard advertised as a physician. He afterwards went to Lucasville, O., where he died August 21, 1895.

June 28, 1876, Dr. E. C. Peck took the place of Dr. David Crees as a homeopath but did not stay long.

October 3, 1878, Dr. R. M. Gibson advertised as a physician. He died in 1885, at the outset of a promising career. On December 7, 1878, Dr. Andrew B. Richardson located. In 1878 Drs. Richardson and Cotton advertised as partners. In the same year Dr. George W. Weyer took up the practice of medicine, and the firm was Kline & Weyer. On May 29, 1878, Dr. E. S. Ricketts located in Portsmouth, and afterwards removed to Cincinnati.

May 29, 1879, Dr. E. P. Cooke, of Marietta, located in Portsmouth. He remained but a few years.

On June 4, 1879, "petticoats" first invaded the ranks of the profession in Portsmouth. Miss Clara E. Aldrich, of Boston, Mass., a homeopath, located in Portsmouth. She was highly educated in her profession and well received. She took cold from exposure; consumption resulted, and she died at her home in Marlboro, Mass. November 6, 1881, at the age of thirty.

Dr. John N. Crawford graduated in medicine in 1880, and at once located in Portsmouth. He practised there until April 1, 1895, when he left for New York city. He is now residing in the city of Philadelphia.

October 22, 1881, Dr. George M. Marshall advertised at Sciotoville. He afterwards came to Portsmouth, and went from here to Columbus. At the same time Dr. Alexander V. Robinson advertised. He afterwards located in Beatrice, Neb.

February 4, 1882, Dr. Arthur Titus returned to the practice of medicine in Portsmouth. He had left Wheelersburg for Missouri about 1872.

On May 19, 1881, Dr. Andrew B. Richardson was elected Superintendent of the Athens Asylum. On March 28, 1881, Dr. Sarah Ellis, a homeopath located in Portsmouth. She was an elderly woman (if there are any such), and she did not remain long.

May 24, 1884 Dr. Frank L. Stillman, who had been practising a short time in Portsmouth, was elected Assistant Physician at the Insane Asylum at Columbus, and since then he has practised in Columbus.

February 16, 1887, Dr. Charles W. Reeder advertised as a physician. He died September 18, 1891.

July 25, 1888, Dr. Edwin M. Ricketts removed to Cincinnati.

October 17, 1891, Dr. C. L. Hudgins advertised.

Dr. Mary H. Cotton, second daughter of Dr. D. B. Cotton, practised in Portsmouth, O., from April, 1894 to 1899, when she removed to New York city, where she is engaged in practice.

June 11 1896, Dr. E. M. Foster advertised.

SKETCHES OF PHYSICIANS.Thomas Waller

was one of the most prominent citizens of Portsmouth, during the first twenty years after its founding. He was a citizen whom the people delighted to honor, and in whom every one had confidence. He was an old fashioned Virginia gentleman in the strongest sense of the term. He was descended from Edward Waller, the English poet. On his mother's side he was descended from the great English patriot, John Hampden. He was born September 14, 1774, in Stafford County, Virginia. He received his education at William and Mary College and attended Medical lectures at Philadelphia, at Jefferson Medical College, under the great Dr. Rush. After one course of lectures he went to Bourbon County, Kentucky, as a physician. He was married there, June 14, 1800, to Elizabeth MacFarlane, and he and she took their wedding trip on horse back to Cumberland Co., Pennsylvania, to visit her relatives. While there, Dr. Waller attended another course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College. They remained in the east a year and returned on horse back bringing a baby with them. They reached Alexandria, June 21, 1801, and determined to remain there.

From 1803 to 1809, he was a Justice of the Peace of Union township, and conducted his court with the highest decorum. His docket is still in existence. On November 21, 1803, he fined John Meirs, a school teacher, $2.00 for using two profane oaths. In 1804, while he was holding court, one William Bennett swore in his presence and was immediately fined fifty cents.

Dr. Waller was first in every thing in Portsmouth and in Scioto County. He was the first physician to locate in the county. He was the first in learning and scholarly attainments until 1816, when Dr. Hempstead came along, then there were two college bred men in the town. He was one of the first councilmen of the town when it was organized March 15, 1815. He was the first president of the town council, and remained such continuously until March 15, 1822, when he declined to serve any longer. He was undoubtedly the first citizen of the town in the estimation of his fellow citizens. He was the first warden of All Saints.

He was the first town surveyor, chosen, May 1, 1816. On September 3, 1818, the first bank was organized in Portsmouth. He was its president and continued as such until his death. He was the second post master appointed, March 7, 1812, and held the office continuously until his death. He kept the post office, his physician's office and a drug store in his residence on Front street. He was a member of the Legislature, the first which met after Scioto County was organized. It remained in session from December 3, 1804, to February 22, 1805. Adams and Scioto Counties were in one legislative district, and there were three representatives, Abraham Shepherd, who lived on Eagle Creek, ten miles north of Ripley, in what is now Brown County; Philip Lewis, Jr., who lived in what is now Blue Creek in Adams County, and he was the third. He attended but a single session. Finding that it interfered with his practice as a physician, he declined further legislative honors. From 1810 to 1813, he was one of the County Commissioners of Scioto County. In 1818, he was a member of the town school board, and while holding all these offices and positions of trust, he practised medicine diligently and found time to raise a large family of sons and daughters; and he raised them well.

On June 5, 1811, he purchased of Henry Massie, 104 acres of land for $1,000. The north line was Eighth street, the west, the first alley east of Gay, at Third street, and the east line was Union street. The Peck, Bond and Sinton Addition was laid out on the west side of it; and the east side was partitioned among his heirs after his death. It was in earlier times known as "Dr. Waller's farm," and the standing timber on it as "Waller's woods."

Dr. Waller was undoubtedly the most useful man in Portsmouth. Aside from his services as a physician, his advice was sought on all sides as a neighbor, friend and good business man. To be the family physician in the early days was a great honor. He not only cured all the family of their physical ills, but was their father confessor, guide, counsellor, and friend. 1822 and 1823 were sickly years in Portsmouth. The doctor did not spare himself in the services of his patients, and when the prevailing disease seized him in June, 1823, he did not have the strength to resist it. He died June 19, 1823, in his 49th year. His death was a shock to the community, from which it recovered only after years. It is said, that at his death he had more friends and fewer enemies than any man in the county. He was always a Whig. He left nine children, William, John, Thomas and George A., sons, and Mrs. Washington Kinney, Hannah, Elizabeth, Mrs. Francis Cleveland and Mrs. Susan Terry, daughters survived him.

Claudius Dufligne

was supposed to be one of the French emigrants in 1790, but it is altogether uncertain. The first account we have, he was conducting a show in Philadelphia with a great deal of success. While engaged in the occupation he became acquainted with Claudius Berthelot and he went with him to the French colony at Gallipolis in time to be placed on the list for drawing of lots. He drew lot number 28, one of the best, fronting on the river, and he removed his residence from Gallipolis to his lot. He was too lazy to clear his lot to any extent, but cleared it sufficient to raise a garden. He also reared fowls and sold eggs to the boatmen, and raised bees and sold their honey. The felling of the forest was entirely too much for his energies. He lived alone a great deal of the time in his cabin, and was famous for his miserly conduct. While in that day it was customary to give meals to visitors, he would avoid it whenever he could, and would be guilty of all manner of meanness to get out of doing so. While living in the French Grant he is said to have married a woman by the name of Peggy Stump, but she could not indure his penurious ways and soon left him. He appears to have been highly educated in France. He possessed quite a number of French medical books and others, and spent much time reading. He also had a very respectable outfit of surgical instruments for that time.

On April 25, 1811, he purchased of Henry Massie for $140.00, thirteen acres of land adjoining Portsmouth. The boundaries may be given as follows, which are very nearly correct: On the east, by the premises of Mrs. Julius Esselborn; on the south by Gallia Street; on the west by the alley east of the High School property, and on the north by Seventh Street, but in fact the tract extended the depth of one or two lots north of Seventh Street. The Drew-Selby Company and Excelsior Shoe Factories are about the center of it. The Doctor sold this lot to John Young, March 13, 1812, for $240.00. He sold his French Grant lot on March 11, 1816, to Reuben Lamb, at that time a resident in Portsmouth. William Kendall and John Brown were witnesses to the deed; consideration, $800.00.

He died shortly prior to April 21, 1817. Dr. Jacob Offnere, William Swords and John Noel were appraisers of the estate, and the inventory shows that he possessed quite a number of French medical books, surgical instruments and apparel. His whole property was put up at auction and realized $248.00. Doctors Waller and Hempstead bought the medical books and instruments. It does not appear what disposition was made of his estate, though Keyes says it was escheated to the state for want of heirs. While a resident of Portsmouth, he had a second wife; but she could not endure his style of living and left him. It is tradition that the marriage was irregular, and she could not obtain a part of his estate as widow. While in Portsmouth, he did very little in the way of practicing medicine; but spent the most of his time in reading. He had consumption, and when he became bedfast he was taken to the house of John Brown, near Portsmouth and died there. This was on the property afterwards occupied by Milton Kendall.

Giles S. B. Hempstead, LL. D.,

Was the son of Giles and Lucretia Saltonstall Hempstead, born in New London June 8th, 1794. He was the eighth generation direct from Sir Robert Hempstead, one of the first settlers in New London, and who came there with Governor Winthrop. He with two brothers had previously settled at Hempstead Plains, Long Island, New York, in 1630, coming direct from England. The brothers returned to England and Sir Robert went to Boston, and afterwards went to New London.

In 1798 and 1799, our subject was a pupil of Samuel Belden at Edgen House with William Ellery Channing.

From 1800 to 1802 he attended a school kept by his cousin Joshua Hempstead. In the latter year, his father and Uncle Hallam Hempstead, with their families, commenced the long and tedious journey to Marietta, Ohio, overland. They arrived at Marietta, August 6, 1802, having been on the way sixty-four days. The company consisted of twenty-eight persons. They had twelve horses, four for each wagon, two wagons, two carriages and two saddle horses. The habitations along the way were so scattered they had to camp out two-thirds of the time. Dr. Hempstead in speaking of the trip in after years, said he enjoyed it very much. He drove a two wheeled chaise, and had his mother and a sister two years old with him, and he had it overturned eighteen times on the way. In one of the overturns his sister broke her arm, but his father acted as surgeon and set it at once.

On their arrival at Marietta, Giles was placed in the Muskingum Academy and remained there until 1810, when he became a student of law under Governor Return J. Meigs. He studied law one year and then gave it up because he had no taste for it, and wanted to study medicine.

In 1811, he entered the Junior class at the Ohio University and graduated in 1813, the first literary graduate north of the Ohio river. He had a fondness for the languages, and studied French, Spanish, Italian and Hebrew, so that he could translate from them with accuracy and freedom.

After his graduation he began the study of medicine at Marietta, with Dr. John B. Reignier, a native of Paris, France, and a distinguished physician.

He remained with Dr. Reignier until 1816 when he went to practice at Waterford, in Washington County, where he attended many patients with the cold plague, or the spotted fever. He remained here three months, lost three patients and cured over one hundred of the epidemic.

In June, 1816, he visited Portsmouth with a view of locating there and found four other physicians were already located. He was informed there was no room for him, so he passed on and visited a number of other places seeking a location. After visiting many towns he returned to Portsmouth, in 1816, and permanently located here.

In 1818, he and Dr. Thomas Waller were appointed by the town to take charge of small-pox cases.

In 1819, he was a charter member of Aurora Lodge of Free-masons, and in 1829, became a charter member of Mt. Vernon Chapter. In the same year he was confirmed in All Saints Church.

In 1821, he graduated from the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, and received the degree of M. D. in the second class graduated from that school. The same year he received his degree as Master of Arts from the Ohio University.

On April 11th, 1821, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Peebles.

From 1821 to 1824, was a sickly season in and about Portsmouth, and he scarcely slept in bed those three years. He often rode fifty miles a day in visiting patients and one day rode seventy-two miles.

In 1824, he purchased the John Neill premises and removed there. In that year he planted the great elm which so adorns the lot.

June 3rd, 1825, he was elected a member of the Town Council. He was re-elected in May, 1826.

In 1826, he, Samuel M. Tracy and John Noel revised the ordinances of the town, and two hundred copies were printed. Not one copy of that publication is now known to be in existence.

In 1827, he was chairman of the Committee on Streets. In 1827, he was on a committee to repair the public or town well, which was done at an expense of $25.00, of which the county paid $10.00. The same year he was township overseer of the poor.

In 1828 and 1829, he was called upon by the county to determine on the sanity of persons confined in the county jail.

Dr. Hempstead was a Whig and so was Judge David Mitchell. General William Kendall resigned from the state Senate in June, 1829, and the Doctor thought he had a call to go to the Senate, and so did Judge Mitchell. Each thought the other should decline, and each was too stubborn to retire. The district was composed of Scioto, Lawrence, Pike and Jackson, and was Whig beyond question. When it was apparent that both would stand, Robert Lucas came out as the Democratic candidate, and his party being too shrewd to have another candidate, Lucas was elected. The vote in the district stood, Lucas, 1078; Mitchell, 880; and Hempstead, 441. In Scioto County, the vote was Lucas, 311; Mitchell, 280; Hempstead, 233. In Jackson County where Mitchell was best known, the vote stood, Lucas, 253; Mitchell, 281; Hempstead 36. This campaign cured the Doctor of the fever of political ambition and was an object lesson to the Whigs. This incident caused the beginning of political County Conventions in Scioto County, and thereafter there was no free for all political race. The County Convention or Committee became the arbiter among the candidates and has since remained. The same year the Doctor, John Noel and Samuel M. Tracy were a committee to lay out the new Cemetery, the present Greenlawn.

In 1830, the law taxing physicians on their supposed income took effect in Scioto County, and Dr. Hempstead was taxed on $600. He and all the other physicians were taxed in the same manner every year until 1851, when the law was repealed.

In 1832, he was raised to $800.00 and in 1833, to $1,000.

In 1834, he evidently "saw" the assessor for his income went down to $400.00, and all the other doctors' incomes likewise.

In 1835, his estimate was $600.00; in 1842, $800.00; in 1843, $1,250; in 1846, $1,500; in 1848, $2,000; and in 1849, $2,500.

In 1831, at the grand Fourth of July celebration he was on the committee on toasts.

In 1832, he had a drug store in Portsmouth in partnership with Dr. Pattillo.

In 1832, he was Supervisor of the East Ward in Portsmouth, an office corresponding to Street Commissioner, and for his service received $4.50 for the entire year.

In 1832, he delivered several lectures before the Portsmouth Lyceum.

In 1833, he was sent to Columbus to lobby for the Lateral Canal and the town appropriated $50.00 for his expenses.

In 1835, he was Health Officer in Portsmouth.

Dr. Hempstead was not only a scholar, but a student. He was fond of public functions, and delivered a number of public lectures. He took a great interest in public education.

In 1839, he was made School Examiner and Visitor in Portsmouth and continued in that position until 1848.

The front of the town was the all absorbing question in 1829; and Dr. Hempstead was on a committee of the Common Council on this subject.

From 1824 to 1849, his home was the Neill home at the corner of Third and Market streets.

In 1848, he built the R. Bell homestead, and moved there in 1849. He owned twenty-one acres of land there and resided in that house until 1858, when he retired from the practice of medicine in Portsmouth and removed to Hanging Rock until 1865 when he retired for good, and devoted himself to the study of Natural Science.

In 1872, he returned to Portsmouth where he continued to reside the remainder of his life.

In 1879, he published a pamphlet "History and Development of the American Continent."

In 1879, the Ohio University gave him the degree of LL. D.

In 1880, he was made a member of the American Association for the advancement of science at Boston, Mass. He was at one time president of the Ohio Medical Society.

In 1880, he delivered a lecture in Portsmouth on "Puritan Intolerance and Persecution."

His wife died April 15, 1875; they had two daughters and one son. His daughter, Margaret J. married Benjamin B. Gaylord, and his daughter Harriet married Gaylord B. Norton. His son, Samuel B. Hempstead, was widely known through Southern Ohio, and died in 1873, leaving a large family.

In 1874, when Portsmouth elected a Board of Education by wards, Dr. Hempstead was elected without opposition from the Fifth Ward, and was the first President of the new Board. He resigned in 1875.

During the cholera epidemics in 1832, 1835, 1849 and 1851, he was constantly employed in combating the disease, and had great success.

In 1877, he was selected to participate in the ceremonies of beginning the construction of the Scioto Valley Railroad at Portsmouth.

After retiring from the practice of medicine he devoted a great portion of his time to the study of archaeology. He explored all the works of the Mound Builders in the vicinity of Portsmouth and made drawings and maps. His writings on this subject and his maps and drawings are preserved in the archives of the public schools, and are invaluable, as the earthworks have been destroyed.

He was perhaps the most learned man in his city; and he was undoubtedly the greatest student, of his own profession, of natural science and archaeology. He had the faculty of imparting knowledge in the most interesting and entertaining manner. He was eminent in his profession and stood at the head of it, not only in his own town, but in the state. He was public spirited and benevolent. He favored every enterprise for the good of the community. He was a great worker in whatever interested him, and he never tired.

As a public lecturer he was most instructive and entertaining.

He presented his medical library to the Scioto County Medical Society, and in his honor, it changed its name to the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine.

When he came to Portsmouth, it was a forest and wilderness. He remembered when the Scioto Bottoms stood in the original timber, and when all back of Third street in Portsmouth was forest, with the low ground grown up with horse weeds.

Dr. Hempstead endured enough hardship and exposure in the practice of medicine to have killed a dozen men, yet he survived, hale and hearty, until 1883, when on July 9, he died of a cancer on his face.

Joseph Corson

was born January 20th, 1821, at Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania, a suburb of Philadelphia. He was reared a Quaker. His father was Allen Wright Corson, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Egbert. He was educated at Swarthmore College, and studied medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. He graduated in medicine in 1841. He located at Plymouth Meeting and practiced medicine with his uncle, Dr. Hiram Corson. In 1843, he located in Jasper, Pike County, Ohio, and began the practice of medicine. June 20, 1843, he was married at Jasper, Ohio, to Martha Hyde Cutler, daughter of Jonathan and Persis Cutler. He removed to Philadelphia in 1845, and returned to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1846, where he formed a partnership with Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead. In 1861, he went to Virginia and attended the wounded of Company "G", 1st Ohio Volunteer Infantry. At the battle of Bull Run he was in the Federal hospital, attending the wounded, when the hospital was surrounded by the rebel Black Horse Cavalry. He practiced medicine in Portsmouth, Ohio, until his death, July 7, 1866. He was a Blue Lodge Mason. He was a public spirited, patriotic citizen, always ready to do and suffer for others. He was of a most generous and kindly disposition. He stood high among his professional brethren, and was regarded among the best of his profession.

William Jefferson McDowell was born September 14, 1821, in the town of Portsmouth, Ohio, the son of Captain John McDowell and Mary Whiting Jefferson, his wife, a descendant of Thomas Jefferson, the third President. His father has a separate sketch herein. He attended the Portsmouth Public Schools and afterwards Augusta College, Augusta, Kentucky. He attended lectures in medicine, first at Louisville, Kentucky, and afterwards at Philadelphia. He began the practice of medicine at Portsmouth, Ohio, in the spring of 1845. He was assessed that year and the following at $200. In 1847, he was assessed at $500, in 1848 and 1849, at $800, and in 1850, at $2,500. In 1846, he was elected a trustee of the public schools. He was appointed Pension Examining Surgeon, January 10, 1863, and was county jail physician in 1865, 1867 and 1869. He never sought or held any public offices which would trench in his time as a physician. He was wholly devoted to his profession. He loved it because it gave him an opportunity to minister to his fellow men. He never married, and his profession and his church were wife and family to him. As a physician, he very quickly rose to the head of his profession and remained there. As a citizen, his character was perfect. All sorts and conditions of the men, women, and children of his acquaintance, admired and loved him. His religion was so deep and earnest that in his visits to the sick and dying, he ministered to their spiritual wants, as well as to their bodily diseases. He recognized the true type of Christianity wherever he met it; and his type of Christianity was known and recognized by all who knew him, saints and sinners alike. He was modest, quiet, and retiring in all his ways, but his true worth was quickly known, wherever he was met. He lived the fifty-seven years of his life in one community, without a single word of slander or calumny ever thought of, or uttered against him. He was an apostle of purity known and read of by all men. When he lay dead in his home, the Roman Catholic Sisters knelt by his open coffin and prayed. On his tombstone are cut the words, "The Beloved Physician", and they express in three words just how he stood in the community. His life was not long in years; but was full of good deeds, and yields a grateful incense to all who remember him.

James M. Shackelford died June 20, 1872, at Des Moines, Iowa, of brain fever, aged about 65 years. He removed from Kentucky to Portsmouth in the winter of 1841 and 1842. January 21, 1842, is the first mention of him in Portsmouth, in the Portsmouth Tribune of that date. For nearly 30 years he was a leading and popular physician in Portsmouth. During most of the time he was connected with a drug store on Front street. In 1869, he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, where he owned large property. He had visited Portsmouth in 1872, and was in excellent health and spirits. His name and reputation was a household word in Portsmouth. His character and history in Portsmouth is deserving of a much more extended notice than this, but it was impossible to obtain anything from his surviving relatives and hence the paucity of this notice. Dr. Shackelford was an old fashioned Southern gentleman. He built the residence now occupied by Capt. E. B. Moore and it was his family home. He had a custom, a most excellent one, of charging his patients for keeping them well.

Obadiah Jackson Hall

was born in Northfield, New Hampshire, August 10, 1826, the youngest child of Obadiah and Hannah (Forrest) Hall. His grandfather, William Forrest, was a Revolutionary soldier; whose services are mentioned in the Pioneer Record of this work. Doctor Hall's boyhood and youth were spent at his birthplace, where he attended the public schools. At the age of seventeen years, he went to Wolfboro, New Hampshire, and studied medicine with his brother, Doctor J. F. Hall. From there he entered Dartmouth College, where he took the course in medicine and graduated in 1850. In 1851, he began the practice of medicine in Lancaster, New Hampshire; but on account of the severity of the climate, he came to Ohio, and for ten years practised at Empire and Junior Furnaces. In 1861, for a period of about 90 days, he acted as substitute for F. B. Mussey, surgeon in the 33rd O. V. I. He would have accepted military service, but owing to ill health was compelled to forego it. On May 7, 1862, he was married at Portsmouth, Ohio, to Mary Elizabeth Boynton, of Laconia, New Hampshire, and practised medicine a short time thereafter in Portsmouth. He then went to Powellsville and practised there until 1865, when he returned to Portsmouth. In his youth he was a member of the Methodist Church, but after his marriage he and his wife connected with the First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth. He had three children. The eldest, Bessie M., was educated in the public schools of Portsmouth and taught for eleven years, from 1886 to 1893. From 1893 to 1895 she was in Mt. Holyoke College preparing for work as a High School teacher. From 1895 to 1898, she taught in the High School of Portsmouth. On June 23, 1898, she was married to Arthur F. Titus of Portsmouth. They have two children: Grace Elizabeth and Helen Hall. Doctor O. J. Hall's second daughter, Grace Forrest, was born in Portsmouth and educated in the Portsmouth public schools. For several years, she has made her home in New York City. Doctor Hall died in Portsmouth, Ohio, of pulmonary consumption May 30, 1868. After his death, his widow taught in the public schools and was one of the most efficient teachers Portsmouth ever had. She was a woman of fine intellect, quick perception and sturdy New England worth. Her health failed in 1887 and she returned to New Hampshire, hoping to be benefited thereby, but failed to recuperate and returned to Portsmouth, where she died September 1, 1889, at the age of sixty-one.

Cyrus Myron Finch was born April 14, 1831, at Dunbar, Pennsylvania, a son of John Finch, who was a descendant of one of three brothers, who came to America during the reign of Charles II. His mother was Margaret Murphy Finch. He received his literary education at the Mt. Pleasant College, in the medical schools of Ohio, and in Bellevue, New York, and graduated M. D. in 1862.

He was united in marriage with Mary E. Bruner, daughter of S. N. Bruner, Esq., of Wheelersburg, in 1857. He settled first at Wheelersburg, Scioto County, Ohio, and at Portsmouth, at the close of the war, where he practiced for over thirty years. At the outbreak of the Rebellion, he went to Columbus, Ohio, to be examined as a Surgeon and stood the highest in a class of one hundred and forty. He served faithfully and efficiently all through the war, traveling over nearly all the entire South. Doctor Finch was Surgeon of the 9th Ohio Cavalry and also division Surgeon of Kilpatrick's Cavalry. He participated in the Atlantic Campaign, "Sherman's March to the Sea" and through the Carolinas, and was at the surrender of General Johnston. After the war he identified himself with the great societies which were organized to perpetuate the memory of its heroism and hardships. He was one of the founders of "Bailey Post" and a member of the "Loyal Legion." Doctor Finch served as Trustee of the State Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Columbus for four years during the administration of Governor Charles Foster. In April, 1884, Governor Hoadley appointed him Superintendent of the Columbus Insane Asylum where he served for four years.

As a physician he was known as one of the most advanced men in Southern Ohio, and as a surgeon he had no equal. He was progressive and kept fully abreast of the times. He made a special study of mental and nervous diseases and was widely recognized as an expert in insanity, being frequently summoned long distances to give expert testimony. Doctor Finch's contributions to medical literature consisted in reports of cases made to medical journals and various articles published in pamphlets. He died at his residence in Portsmouth, March 19, 1891. The story of his illness is the history of an iron will and constitution battling against the steady encroachment of a fatal malady, from a period that dates back to the war. From the time he left the army, his strength sapped by the fatigues and hardships of that long conflict, existence to him was one battlefield, where the forces of life and death were constantly arrayed in deadly warfare, and where every onslaught left death's ensign planted nearer the mortal battlements. It was a brave struggle made against odds which have appalled weaker natures and death may well plume himself on his victory, for he had unhorsed and laid in the dust a gallant knight.

James Phelps Bing was born in Gallia County, Ohio, September 14, 1822. His father, William Bing, was a native of Augusta County, Virginia, and his mother, Nancy (Phelps) Bing came from New Haven Connecticut. The elements of an education received in the little log school house of that day were not satisfying to him, and he went to the Ohio University at Athens, Ohio. After this, he taught school in Ohio, Kentucky and Louisiana. In 1851, he received his degree from Starling Medical College of Columbus, Ohio. The Doctor practised medicine in Ironton, Ohio, eight years, in Pomeroy, Ohio, ten years, exclusive of the first and last years of the Civil War, and in Portsmouth, Ohio, for thirty-one years. From October 3, 1861, to August 31, 1862, he was Assistant Surgeon of the 53rd O. V. I. During the last year of the war, he was Surgeon in charge of Camp Thomas, near Columbus, Ohio, the station of the 18th, U. S. I. On December 25, 1867, Doctor Bing located in Portsmouth and was a prominent figure there until his death. During this period his was an active life. He was one of the earliest of the regularly appointed Insurance Examiners. On April 8, 1874, he was elected President of the Ohio Medical Society. He was jail physician for thirteen years from 1886 to 1899. On the Hospital Board, he served continuously from May, 1888, until his resignation July 8, 1897. He was twice a member of the U. S. Pension Examining Board. While in Meigs County, he was elected Coroner. In his youth, he connected himself with the church and was a consistent member for a long lifetime. At the time of his death, he was the only Elder in active service of the original session of the Second Presbyterian Church, organized in 1875. His practical christianity was manifested in large work among the poor for which a physician could expect no compensation. The Doctor was married on November 5, 1851, in Columbus, Ohio, to Minerva A. Powers, of that city, the Rev. William Preston, Rector of Trinity Church, officiating. His death occurring April 8, 1900, was the peaceful ending of a long and useful life. The widow and two children: Augustus O. Bing of Cincinnati and Mrs. A. S. Dutton, of Gallipolis, Ohio, survive him.

Henry C. Beard,

Physician and Surgeon, was born December 21, 1839, near Middlebrook, Augusta County, Virginia, the youngest son of William Beard and Jane (Ewing) Beard. He came to Ohio in October, 1859, and located at Jasper in Pike County. He soon after began the study of medicine and took his first course of lectures at the Medical College of Ohio, session of 1860-61, at Cincinnati, Ohio. On August 11, 1862, at the age of twenty-four, he enlisted in Company C, 1st Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, for three years. He was promoted to Hospital Steward January 1, 1863. He was promoted to Assistant Surgeon, January 4, 1865, and was mustered out with the regiment, July 25, 1865, at Knoxville, Tennessee, and located in Lucasville, Ohio. In October, 1865, he located at California, Pike County, Ohio, where he remained for four years. In June, 1869, he graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College of Medicine and Surgery. In 1869, he removed to Portsmouth and engaged in the drug business; but on account of failing health abandoned it and resumed the more active duties of the practice of medicine. He located at Lucasville, May 27, 1879, and was actively engaged in his profession until his death. He was married December 25, 1860, to Mary Ellen Noel, daughter of David and Nancy Morgan Noel of near Portsmouth, O. He had three sons: David Francis, employed with Martindale & Edmunds of Lucasville; Michael Jacob, a physician in Lucasville, lately married to Catharine Wheeler Dever, daughter of Joseph Dever; and Roscoe Eugene, employed as a clerk in a furniture factory at St. Joseph, Michigan. Our subject was elected Vice President of the Scioto County Medical Society in 1878, was one of the Board of Censors of the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine in 1884, and was also President at one time. He was made a Master Mason in Lucasville Lodge F. and A. M. No. 365, June 13, 1895. Although he did not belong to any church, he took great interest in all religious movements. He was a friend to the poor as well as the rich. His motto was, "Do unto others as you wish others to do unto you." He died August 21, 1895.

Alonzo Blair Richardson was born near Harrisonville, Scioto County, Ohio, September 11, 1852. His father's name was Edward Warren Richardson, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Blair. His father was a farmer, and died May 25, 1864, at the age of forty-four, a member of Company "F," 140th Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted May 2, 1862, and was appointed a Sergeant of the Company. His widow is now living at the age of eighty-three. Dr. Richardson was born on a farm and educated in the country schools until the age of sixteen, when he began teaching. He taught for two years and entered Ohio University, Athens, Ohio, at the age of eighteen, where he remained two years. He then began the study of medicine in Portsmouth, Ohio, under Dr. David Barnes Cotton. He attended the first course of lectures at Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1874 and 1875, and was graduated in medicine at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City in the spring of 1876. He was appointed Assistant physician at Athens Asylum for Insane immediately on his graduation from Bellevue. He resigned in May of 1878. He was in practice in Portsmouth from that time until 1881. He was a partner with Dr. Cotton in 1878, and was the City Jail physician in 1879. He was appointed Medical Superintendent of Athens Asylum for the Insane in March, 1881, and resigned in May, 1890. He practised medicine in Cincinnati, Ohio, until April, 1892, and was then appointed Medical Superintendent of the Columbus Asylum for the Insane. In the spring of the same year he was appointed by Gov. McKinley as member of the Commission to locate a new Asylum for the Insane in the eastern part of the State. In the Spring of 1893 he was appointed a five year member of the Board of Trustees to build the new asylum, which the commission had located at Massillon, Ohio. He continued Superintendent of the Columbus State Hospital (Columbus Asylum for the Insane) until March, 1898. He was then elected Superintendent of the Massillon State Hospital, and equipped and opened this institution in August, 1898. He resigned the superintendency of the hospital in October, 1899, to accept the superintendency of the Government Hospital for the Insane, Washington, D. C., which position he still holds. In his political views he has always been a Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was married October 26, 1876, to Miss Julia D. Harris, of Athens, Ohio. They have four children, William W., born at Athens, Ohio, in October, 1877, a graduate of the Ohio State University in 1899, graduated from the Medical Department, University of Pennsylvania, in June, 1902; Mary Bertha, born in June, 1879, at Portsmouth, Ohio, married to W. G. Neff, Columbus, Ohio, in June, 1901; Edith H., born at Athens, Ohio, in October 1881, now a student at Mt. Holyoke College, Mass., and Helen, born in 1888 at Athens, Ohio.

Dr. Richardson has written numerous articles on subjects related to insanity and mental pathology. He is a member of the Ohio State Medical Society, The American Medical Association, the American Medico-Psychological Association, the New York Medico-Legal Society and the Cosmos Club of Washington, D. C. Dr. Richardson stands at the head of his profession as an expert in diseases affecting the mind and in all forms of insanity. He has a life position,—the highest that the government could confer on one of his profession. In his specialty he has a national reputation.

Edwin Sanders Ricketts was born May 18, 1863 in Rome, Lawrence County, Ohio. His father was Jerome Robinson Ricketts and his mother, Rachael McLaughlin. There were three sons and one daughter in the family. His father was from Front-Royal, Va., and his mother was born in Rome, Lawrence County, Ohio. Her father, Daniel McLaughlin was Scotch-Irish and came from Vermont in 1818. His father's people were Huguenots originally. They went to Holland to escape the persecutions of the French Catholics and then to the United States. James McLaughlin of New Hampshire, father of David McLaughlin, was a Captain in the Revolutionary War and at the battle of Bunker Hill. His grand-father, John Ricketts died of cholera in 1833. Our subject attended the public schools of Proctorsville and graduated at Marshall College in West Virginia in 1871. He was a clerk in his father's store from 1871 to 1873 and then began the study of medicine. He attended Miami Medical College and graduated in October, 1877. He located in Portsmouth at once and remained there until September, 1887. He then went to Europe for one year and was a pupil of Dr. Lawson, of Birmingham, England. He studied surgical diseases of women and abdominal surgery. He studied in London, Vienna, Berlin and Paris. He located in Cincinnati and began to practice in 1888, and has been there ever since. His office is Number 408, Broadway. His specialties are abdominal surgery and operative gynecology. He is a member of the American Medical Association, of the British Gynecological Society; President of the American Association of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, 1902; Ex-President of the Cincinnati Obstetrical Society; member of the Cincinnati Academy of Medicine; of the Ohio State Medical Society; of the Mississippi Valley Medical Society; of the Tri-State Medical Society. He is an honorary member of the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine and a member of the Miami Valley Medical Association. His residence is at Rose Hill, Avondale. He writes a great deal on medical subjects.

He first married Romaine McCormick, daughter of John R. McCormick, October 31, 1877. There was one child, Holliday M. Ricketts, now 16 years of age, a student of Woodward High School, Cincinnati. His wife died January 17, 1886. He married Miss Anna E. Pursell, daughter of James Pursell, January 26, 1895.

He is a Republican in his political views, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church but not a member of any fraternity.

George Milton Marshall was born at Sciotoville, Ohio, June 2, 1850. His father was Elias Marshall. His mother was Ann Eliza Beloit, daughter of Walter Beloit. He received a common school education and attended the Lebanon Normal School in 1872, and the Ohio University, at Athens, Ohio, from 1873 to 1875. He left there at the end of the Junior term and began the study of medicine with Doctors Jones and Kline in Portsmouth, Ohio. He attended the lectures at the Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1876 and 1877. He practised on Duck Run, Scioto County, Ohio, in 1877 and 1878. In 1879 and 1880, he attended Medical College at Columbus, Ohio. In 1880 and 1882, he practised at Sciotoville, Ohio, and from 1882 to 1884, at Tolesboro, Kentucky. In the fall of 1884, he went to Bellevue Hospital Medical College and was there one year. He received the ad eundem degree there. In the fall of 1885, he went to Stephensport, Kentucky, and remained there until July, 1890. He then accepted the position of House Surgeon of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, New York, and remained there until June, 1892, when his health broke down. In October, 1892, he began practising in Portsmouth, Ohio, as a specialist for the eye, ear, nose and throat, and remained there until June, 1895, when he went to Columbus, Ohio, and was there for five years. In January, 1900, he went to Ashland, Kentucky, and has been there ever since. He was a specialist until January 1, 1902, when he began general practice. He is a member of the New York Academy of Medicine. He was married December 24, 1899, to Miss Adrian Bowers, daughter of C. C. Bowers of Ironton, Ohio. He is a member of the Baptist church and has always been a Republican.

Dr. Charles Marshall has always been an energetic student and an industrious worker. The word "last" is not to be found in his lexicon. Starting as a boy from a small country town, he became every obstacle in his way, so that he is less sanguine and less of a temperamental would have been, well, not incommensurable. By hard work, close study and that of constant application, he slowly worked his way up to the position of House Surgeon for the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital of New York City. While there he made such men as Doctor J. E. St. John Kings and Thomas Thayer his life long friends. His work in his specialty, the eye, was always well and thorough. Many there are who think the Doctor for the priceless privilege of having their sight restored, passing from darkness into light. He is always generous in a heart and nothing he has is too good for his friends. But at the same time, he resents an injury as a slight and is slow to forget an insult. His veneration for his parents amounted almost to worship. He is an extensive reader outside of his medical studies and the books that people here most are by the best and deepest thinkers, Carlyle being an especial favorite.

Arthur Titus

was born March 7, 1826, at Harmsville, Farnham, Scott County, Ohio. His parents were Samuel and Clarissa (Carpell) Titus. He received his education in the primary schools and in the city schools of Portsmouth. From the age of 16 he paid his own way and the expenses of his education.

He pursued the study of medicine with Dr. J. B. Roy, Sr., at Harmsville, and during the years 1846 and 1847 attended lectures in the Spring Medical College at Columbus, Ohio. He began the practice of medicine at Portersville in 1850, and after practicing some years, attended lectures in the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, where he took his degree February 7, 1861.

On the 17th day of October, 1859, Dr. Titus was married to Harriet S. Chubb, to whom was born two sons, Frank H. Titus, M. D., who is now a surgeon with the U. S. Volunteers in the Philippines, and Samuel O. Titus, and one daughter, Hattie Titus, who died in infancy. His first wife died in October, 1880, and in January, 1881, he married Mrs. Martha Mathews, widow of Rev. Sanford B. Mathews, who survives him.

In the spring of 1863 Dr. Titus removed to Chestine, Ohio, where he entered in June of that year in Co. A, 10th Regiment Ohio National Guards. In March, 1864, he was appointed Assistant Surgeon in the First Regiment of West Virginia Cavalry, was later promoted to Surgeon of the Third West Virginia Cavalry, and during the latter months of the war, served as acting Brigade Surgeon of the Third Brigade, Third Division of Cavalry, Custer's famous "Red Neck Tie" Brigade.

Returning home at the close of the war, he removed to Wheelersburg, Ohio, where he practiced medicine and surgery until 1872, when he sold his practice to Dr. James L. Taylor and removed to Sturgeon, Mo., where he remained until 1881. While in Missouri he served two years on the U. S. Pension Examining Board. He removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1881, where he remained in the active practice of his profession until his death. He served on the U. S. Pension Examining Board for Scioto County from 1885 to 1893. He was surgeon for the C. & O. and B. & O. Railroads, and Physician of the Scioto County Children's Home for many years, and Surgeon for the United Commercial Travelers from its organization to the time of his death.

Dr. Titus united with the Free Will Baptist church in his youth, and remained a member of that church until he came to Portsmouth, where, there being no church of that denomination, he joined the Bigelow M. E. church and was a faithful member until his death.

He was a prominent member of the Hempstead Academy of Medicine, a charter member of the Scioto County Medical Society, and a member of the Knights Templar.

As a Physician and Surgeon Dr. Titus was eminent in his profession, and most highly esteemed by his professional brethren.

He was a public spirited citizen, enjoying to the fullest the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

He died March 8th, 1902, at the age of 76 years and one day, and was buried in the village cemetery at Wheelersburg, Ohio.

Lorenzo Dow Allard.

The grandfather of the subject of this sketch, Joseph Allard, was born in or near Sheffield, England and was married to Mary Gardner. Their son, Thomas Allard, the father of our subject, was born near Sheffield, January 27, 1829, and was brought to the United States by his parents in 1833. He was married to Harriet A. Brown, daughter of Royal and Rachel (Beauchamp) Brown, January 11, 1852. Royal Brown was a minister in the Methodist Protestant Church of Flat, Ohio, to which place his father, David Brown, had come from New York in 1815. Thomas Brown enlisted in Co. H, 176th O. V. I., September 2, 1864, and was mustered out with the Company, June 14, 1865. Doctor Allard was the second of a family of six children and was born February 19, 1855, near Flat in Pike County, Ohio. He was raised on a farm and attended the country school till he reached the age of 15, when he began to teach, which profession he followed till his twentieth year. He then entered on the study of medicine under C. M. Firch, M. D. of Portsmouth, Ohio. He matriculated in the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati, in 1876, and was graduated March 1, 1879. He located immediately in Flat and continued to practise there until May 13, 1896, when he removed to Portsmouth, where he has practised ever since. He has a very pleasing and comfortable residence at 716 Gay-street. In 1890, he took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic. He has been a member of the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine, since May, 1894. He was one of the charter members of the Pike County (Ohio) Medical Association. In May, 1894, he became a member of the Ohio State Medical Society and since 1895, he has been a member of the American Medical Association. He was united in marriage July 20, 1880, with Miranda Buckley, daughter of Isaac and Anna (Reed) Buckley of Jackson, Ohio. Isaac Buckley was a son of William Buckley who came to Jackson County from Maryland and was of English descent. Mrs. Allard's mother was a daughter of James Reed of Oak Hill, Ohio. They have only one child, Leonora, now a school girl in the fifth grade. Doctor Allard has always been a Republican and was formerly a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, but is now a member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth.

Both as a professional man and a citizen, the Doctor fills the measure of a true man. His naturally cheery and hopeful disposition carries into the sick room an elixir that cannot be found in drugs. Patient and painstaking he gives to his patients the most careful and skilled attention. Full of faith in his chosen calling, he avails himself of all the aids to advancement in the way of books, journals and all the societies,—local, state and national. He had a varied and long experience in country practise where he was thrown wholly on his own resources in many difficult cases. This training has well fitted him to meet and cope successfully with the most severe and difficult cases. In the practise of his profession, he is intensely practical, and in his diagnoses, never rests until the cause of the disease is discovered. He is one of the most orderly of men. In the language of a friend of his, and a very close observer, "Dr. Allard is the best organized man I ever saw. His horse and buggy, instruments, all physical appliances, books and papers, are exactly where they should be, ready for instant use." In his mental characteristics he is the same. He is an extensive and careful reader, a close student of the literature of his profession, and such is his system, that information gained is always ready for immediate use, and the greater the emergency, the more available are his resources. The Doctor is a most genial and companionable man, one of those sunny, magnetic dispositions whose very presence is better than stimulants.

David Barnes Cotton was born at Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, April 5, 1834. He was the youngest son of the late Dr. John Cotton, who graduated in the scientific and medical departments of Harvard College in 1814, and in 1815, moved to Marietta, Ohio, where he practiced his profession until his death. He was a lineal descendant of the celebrated

DR. DAVID BARNES COTTON.

Rev. John Cotton, the first minister of Boston, Massachusetts, who came from Boston, England, in 1833. The distinguished Cotton Mather was his grandson. Our subject has two brothers who are physicians, and his two sisters are wives of physicians. He was educated at Marietta College, where he graduated in the Class of 1853. He studied medicine at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1853 to 1856. In May, 1856, he commenced the practice of medicine in Lyons, Clinton County, Iowa, where he remained one year. On May 11, 1857, he settled in Portsmouth, where he has ever since resided. At first he was associated in business with the late Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead. He was one of the society young men of Portsmouth from 1857 to 1861. On November 21, 1861, he married Miss Mary C. Slocumb, of Marietta, Ohio. Soon after his marriage he removed to the northwest corner of Third and Court streets, where he has resided ever since. He has been engaged in the practice of medicine continuously from that time until the present, and he has been most successful. No one stood higher as a physician than he, and he stood at the head of his profession in Portsmouth, until sickness compelled his retirement. He has enjoyed much distinction in his profession. He is a member of the American Academy of Medicine, the American Medical Association, the Ohio State Medical Society, the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine, and is an honorary member of the California State Medical Society. He was a delegate to the American Medical Association which met in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1859, also to the meeting in San Francisco, California. In all his life Dr. Cotton has lived out the habits and manner of thought of his Puritan ancestors. He is of the highest integrity in business, in his church and in his profession. Unlike his distinguished father, he never had any taste for politics and kept out of it. He has had six children, one son and five daughters. He lost his oldest daughter, Nellie, at the age of thirteen months, and his son John, at the age of eighteen months. His surviving children are: Miss Grace Gaylord, Dr. Mary Hannah, of New York; Mrs. Kate Bullard Sparks, wife of Prof. Edwin Sparks, Ph. D., of Chicago; Ethel Hamilton, wife of William H. Schwartz. Dr. Cotton has stood at the head of his profession in Portsmouth for many years. At all times and in all places he is a gentleman of the most refined manners. If he ever had any fault professionally, it was because he had too much sympathy for his patients.

Frank Mott Edwards.

One of the bright young physicians of Portsmouth, was born October 23, 1863, at South Point in Lawrence County, Ohio, the son of Elisha T. Edwards and Mary Hastings, his wife. He has a brother and sister residing in Portsmouth and a brother at Athens, Ohio. His grandfather, Leonard Edwards was a native of North Carolina and emigrated from there to Lawrence County. The family located in North Carolina from Wales before the Revolution and our subject's great-great-grandfather, William Edwards, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War from Virginia. His father served in the Civil War in the 10th Kentucky Infantry and as First Lieutenant of Co. A. 173 O. V. I.

Our subject attended the Indiana State Normal School at Valparaiso, Ind. in 1888 and 1889. He took a Commercial and Scientific course there. In 1892 he took up the study of Medicine and took a three years course at Miami Medical College, graduating in 1895. He practiced medicine in Ironton for five months following his graduation. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, in July 18, 1895, and has been in general practice ever since. He was married to Miss Alberta M. Ainsworth of Ironton, Ohio, on June 30, 1897. He was appointed Coroner in 1899, to fill the unexpired term of Dr. Davidson. He was elected to that office in 1900 and is now a candidate for re-election.

William Clyde Ellis was born in Bentonville, in Adams County, Ohio, January 10, 1875. His father was John Ellis, and his mother Keziah Duncan, daughter of Abraham Duncan. Our subject was the oldest of nine children. He belongs to the well known Ellis family of Adams and Brown Counties. He attended school at Bentonville, and Manchester and West Union till he was twenty years of age. He began the study of medicine with Dr. O. T. Sproull, of Bentonville, and attended the Medical College of Ohio from 1895 to 1899. He graduated May 2, 1899. He located, at once, at Sardinia in Brown County and while there was the local Surgeon for the Norfolk and Western Railway Company. On July 7, 1902, he came to Portsmouth, Ohio, and associated himself in the practice of medicine with Dr. E. M. Foster, at Ninth and Offnere streets. On March 10, 1900, he was married to Bernice Martin, daughter of Edward Martin, of Ripley, Ohio. They have one child, Helen. He is a Democrat in politics, a Mason, an Odd Fellow, and a Modern Woodman.

James William Fitch was born at Ashland, Kentucky, October 12, 1865. His father was George Fitch, a farmer and his mother's maiden name was Mary Martin, a daughter of John Peebles Martin. Young Fitch attended school at Greenup, Kentucky, till he was twenty-two years of age. He then taught school in Kentucky, for a period of five years and in the meantime studied medicine with Dr. H. H. Warnock, of Greenupsburg. He attended the School of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and graduated in 1893. He located at Wurtland, Kentucky, four miles above Greenupsburg. In 1894, he removed to Russell, Kentucky, and remained there until October 3, 1901, when he located at 16 West Ninth street in Portsmouth, Ohio. He was married

October 18, 1893, to Ellen D. McCarty, of Lucasville, Ohio, daughter of Samuel McCarty. He has two children, Clyde Marion and Ruth. He is a member of the Bigelow Methodist Church, a Republican, a Knight of Pythias, and a Knight of the Golden Eagle. He was a member of the Pension Examining Board of Greenup, Kentucky, from 1897 until his location in Portsmouth. He is a member of the Hempstead Academy of Medicine and Examiner of the Mutal Life Insurance Company of New York.

Dr. Fitch is a man of exceptionally good habits and an exemplary. He is at all times careful, accurate and painstaking in his work. As a member of the Pension Examining Board, his highest aim has been to do justice to the soldier and to the Government. Professionally Dr. Fitch is above reproach.

Ezekiel Marion Foster was born at Manchester, Adams County, Ohio, December 7, 1868, the son of Ezekiel and Martha A. (Copple) Foster. His grandfather, Samuel Foster, was a soldier in the War of 1812. His grandfather, Henry Copple, was a soldier under General Scott, in the Mexican War. His boyhood and youth were spent on a farm in Adams County. He attended the district school and received a common school education. He commenced teaching school in 1886 and continued two years. He attended the North Liberty Normal in the summer of 1886, and the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1887. In 1888, he read medicine with Doctor J. W. Guthrie of Manchester, Ohio. He attended the Kentucky School of Medicine during the summer of 1890, and the Louisville Medical College during the winter, and in the summer of 1891, the Kentucky School of Medicine again, and the Louisville Medical College the next winter. In the Kentucky School of Medicine, he took the regent's medal or second honor for the first year class. The second year in the Kentucky School of Medicine, he took the gold medal for best examination in Anatomy. In the Louisville Medical College, he took special prizes for the best examination in surgery, and graduated March 3, 1892, taking first honors in a class of one hundred. He commenced the practice of medicine in 1892, at Manchester, Ohio. He remained there three years and came to Portsmouth, Ohio, May 28, 1895, and has practised medicine there ever since. He is a Republican and a member of the Sixth Street M. E. Church. He was married to Clara Grimes, daughter of Charles and Mary (Perry) Grimes of Manchester, Ohio, October 4, 1892. His wife is a descendant of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry. The Perrys were of Irish descent, but came from London to this country and located at Maysville, Kentucky. Our subject has one child, Jennie, age nine. The Doctor is one of the most active and energetic members of his profession. He has high ideas as a physician and a citizen and he lives up to them. In his profession he is a great student and his devotion and application to his chosen work is remarkable. This has brought him deserved success and obtained for him the confidence of the community.

Margaret Fulton

is one of the practising physicians of Portsmouth of the Regular School. She studied medicine at the Laura Memorial College at Cincinnati for four years, and graduated in April, 1900. She was a resident physician at the Presbyterian Hospital in Cincinnati for twelve months. After her graduation she located in Portsmouth, in July, 1901, for the practice of medicine, and has her office at the family residence, No. 102, East Second street. Miss Fulton has, in the short period she has practised her profession, shown great proficiency in her work and a natural aptitude for it.

Lorin Hall,

the youngest son of William Hall and Margaret (Kinney) Hall, was born August 23, 1854, at Portsmouth, Ohio. He attended the public schools of Portsmouth till he was fifteen; then his father died and his brother Wyllys became his guardian and they removed to Piqua, Ohio. He attended the public schools there until he was nineteen, and then entered Kenyon College from which he graduated in four years with degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then attended the Medical School of the University of Michigan for two years. He took his degree of Doctor of Medicine later at Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York City, in 1880, being twenty-six years of age. He then spent six months abroad visiting the medical centers in the various cities of the continent. When he returned, he was appointed Assistant to the Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the Medical Department of the University of Michigan. This position he held for three years. He then went to Salt Lake City, Utah, to engage in the practice of his profession. During the nine years of residence there, he with an associate had charge of St. Mark's Hospital. When the Gentiles got hold of Salt Lake City, he was appointed by the City Council to the Commissionership of the Board of Health, which existed only in name. He wrote an ordinance comprising a working scheme for such a department which was passed by the city, and held this position for three years or until a change of politics in the city's administration. He returned to Portsmouth, in 1896, and has been engaged in the practice of medicine ever since. He is a Republican and an Episcopalian. He has also a degree ad eundem of Master of Arts from Kenyon College.

He was united in marriage to Mary H. Daniels, daughter of Thomas L. Daniels, of Piqua, Ohio, September 21, 1886. They have two children: Margaret Kate, born August 28, 1887; and Thomas L. D. Hall. Both were born at Salt Lake City, Utah. Doctor Hall stands as high in his profession, as any one in it. He has been remarkably successful in his practice.

Stephen Simpson Halderman was born in Ross County, Ohio, on January 31, 1852. His father, Rev. John J. Halderman, was a native of Beaver County, Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Daniel Halderman, was a native of Germany. His mother, Isabelle Kinnison, was a native of Greenbrier County, Va. Her father was an Englishman by birth.

Our subject was educated in the common schools. He began the study of medicine in November, 1872, and graduated from the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati, Ohio, March 1, 1875.

He was married to Anna Katherine Gorath, August 26, 1873, and located in Sciotoville, February 18, 1876. He practiced medicine there 14 years. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, on the southeast corner of Ninth and Gay streets on January 1, 1890, and has practiced medicine since that date. He is a member of the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine, The American Medical Association, The Ohio State Medical Society and The National Association of Railway Surgeons. He was appointed a member of the United States Board of Pension Examining Surgeons in July, 1885, and served until July, 1889. He was again appointed on that Board in 1893, and served until 1897. He was surgeon for the Cincinnati, Portsmouth & Virginia Railway Company from 1890 to 1902. He was appointed Surgeon on the Norfolk & Western Railway in April, 1895, which position he now holds. He was one of the charter incorporators of the Central Savings Bank of Portsmouth, Ohio.

In politics, he is a Democrat, but in 1896, he supported the Gold-Democratic ticket, and is a believer in sound money. He is a communicant of All Saints Church and has been a Vestryman for the past ten years. His children are: Ruhama, the wife of Eugene G. Anderson; Henri G., a Doctor of Medicine and a graduate of the Medical College of Ohio, in 1901; Laura and Katherine, daughters at home. He is a Knight Templar Mason.

"By dint of hard and honest work, continued an incessant application and the improvement of every and all opportunities, Dr. Halderman has placed himself in the fore front of his calling. He is a hard, earnest worker in his home, state and national Medical Societies. His idea is that what is good for the individual is good for the whole profession, and that one can accomplish more for himself and for the people by working together in harmony with his brothers. While he is in the broadest sense, a general practitioner, he likes best and succeeds well in that part called surgery, for which his tastes, inclinations and mechanical ability fit him. - He is an ardent worker in his church, and aids in every way in his power the advancement and betterment of his city and its people intellectually, physically and morally. In politics, he is active and aggressive. In his stay in Portsmouth, he has taken front rank in his profession, and as a citizen and business man, he is second to none."

Joel Dudley Hendrickson

was born in 1865, at Tolesboro, Lewis County, Kentucky. His father was Daniel Hendrickson and his mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Rummans. She was a descendant of Daniel Boone. His great-grandfather, O. K. Hendrickson, was a Hollander and was a First Lieutenant in the Continental Army, Revolutionary war. Daniel Hendrickson, his father, was First Lieutenant in the 45th Kentucky Infantry and was promoted to Captain. He lost his life in the Civil war and is supposed to have been drowned in Red River, Louisiana. Our subject's boyhood and youth were passed at Tolesboro, Kentucky. At the age of twelve, he commenced working in a grocery store for F. M. Carr. He studied at home and saved his money. At the age of fourteen, he took a course at Lebanon which prepared him to teach school. He taught in winter and went to school at Lebanon in summer until he graduated in the scientific course. He then commenced studying medicine under Doctor W. H. Campbell of Vanceburg, Kentucky. He graduated at the Kentucky school of Medicine at Louisville, in June, 1894. He was married in Jefferson, Indiana, February 12, 1893, to Mattie Clark Bane. They have three children: Lizzie Leoto, Henry Fulton, and Catherine Gertrude. He came to Ohio in September, 1895, and commenced practice at Friendship, where he continued until the spring of 1899. He then removed to Portsmouth and practised for two years, in partnership with Doctor S. B. McKerrihan. He graduated from the Illinois School of Electro-Therapeutics, August, 1901. He now conducts the Portsmouth Electrical Sanitarium on the corner of Market and Front streets. He has always been a strong Republican; in his religious belief he is a Protestant. Doctor Hendrickson is bright, witty and vivacious. He is among the first in his profession. Socially he is a general favorite. He is a genuine "Kentucky gentleman."

Peter James Kline

was born in Ross County, Ohio, July 4, 1840, the son of Colonel Henry L. Kline and his wife, Mary E. McCreary, a granddaughter of General James H. Menary. He attended the district schools of his native home until he was fourteen years of age. He then entered Salem Academy where he pursued his studies until 1862. He enlisted August 7, 1862, in Company I, 81st O. V. I. for three years. He was made Corporal June 27, 1864, and was appointed Sergeant, November 10, 1864, and mustered out with the company, July 13, 1865. He was in all the battles his regiment was in during the war, and was always ready for rations or duty. He was on the march to the sea and thereafter to Washington. He marched 1,100 miles on foot and never missed a duty. On his return from the army, he took up the study of medicine, under Doctor Samuel C. Hamilton and attended the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, and was graduated March 1, 1871. He then opened an office in South Salem. In 1873 he matriculated in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, of New York, where he graduated in 1874. He located in Portsmouth April 23, 1874. He was Treasurer of the Hempstead Academy of Medicine in 1881, and was its President in 1883. He was Pension Examiner under President Hayes and under President Harrison and was re-appointed under President McKinley in June, 1897, and is still serving in that position. He was a member of the City Board of Education for six years, between 1886 and 1895. On April 19, 1878, he was appointed a member of the Board of Health and served for four years. He is a leading member of Bailey Post, No. 164, G. A. R., of which he has served as Commander. He is also a member of the First Presbyterian Church. March 2, 1871, he was married to Elida E. Pricer, daughter of David H. Pricer and Amanda Wilson Pricer. They have two children: Lena, the wife of Edward S. Reed, a member of the wholesale dry goods firm of Reed, Jordan & Company, of Portsmouth; and Charles Flint, a medical student at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York.

As a physician, Doctor Kline has the confidence of all his medical brethren and of the public generally. He stands easily at the head of his profession. It would not be too much to say that he is the most popular physician and man in Portsmouth. Everyone likes him. He can always be found at the front in every project for the public good. He possesses a wonderful store of human sympathy, and is constantly expressing it. Make up a full catalogue of all the civic and domestic virtues, and he possesses them all. But Doctor Kline is mortal, like the rest of us. He has some weaknesses and, in justice to our readers, we propose to tell one of them. Doctor Kline can be induced to do almost anything for an old comrade of the Civil War. He has reason to be proud of his own record in that war; but just let an old soldier ask him anything and the Doctor will do it at once. He can be imposed on in this way easier than any other.

The Doctor is a pleasant, easy and entertaining public speaker. He is on good terms with his audience at all times, and can always touch a popular chord, but on the occasion of Soldiers' Reunions he is unexcelled. He is always at home at a Soldiers' Reunion. He never misses one in fifty miles of his residence and one is seldom held without his being invited. A camp-fire fires his heart at once, and on these occasions, while he is speaking, he is again the young soldier of 1861 and 1865. He has never forgotten the enthusiasm of his youth, and he can bring some of it back to his old comrades. He has an inexhaustible fund of war reminiscences and is constantly adding to his store. He has forgotten nothing of his army life, and can tell of it so that his hearers feel that they were eye witnesses. There is nothing so interesting as an older person who can recall his youth, in such a way as to make his hearers feel the fire of it. While the Doctor is on the shady side of sixty, when he talks to the soldiers, he forgets the chasm of years between him and his youth, and causes his hearers to forget them too. It is to be hoped that the Doctor will hold the spirit of his youth as long as he lives and as to that, his friends wish he may rival Methuselah.

William Dever Micklethwait was born November 2, 1875, in Clay Township, Scioto County, Ohio. His parents were William R. Micklethwait and Abigail Dever, his wife. He received his early education in the Portsmouth public schools and was graduated from the High School in the class of 1895. He attended the Ohio State University at Columbus, Ohio, for two years and studied pharmacy. He took the medical course and received the degree of M. D. at the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati. He was House Physician of Ensworth Deaconess Hospital, at St. Joseph, Missouri, from 1900 to 1901. He then went to Atchison, Kansas, and went into general practice and at the same time took charge of the Doctor Allaman Company's private hospital of that city. He was appointed district medical examiner for Court of Honor, Atchison Lodge, No. 786. He remained there until April, 1902, when he returned to Portsmouth and bought property on the southwest corner of Offnere and Eleventh streets where he is located and practises his profession in all its branches. He is a Republican and a member of Sixth Street M. E. church.

Doctor Micklethwait is a young man of learning and ability and much force of character. He inherits the good qualities of both sides of the house. On the maternal side he is the great-grandson of Solomon Dever. His grandfather, William Dever, for whom he is named, has a sketch herein. These two were far above the average in natural ability, both physical and mental. Upon the father's side, his ancestry are of equally rugged stock, his grandfather having immigrated from England in the early part of the last century.

From both parents he has inherited a strong vigorous constitution, a clear head, honesty and uprightness, a strong will and that persistency of purpose and capacity for constant application and work that must inevitably carry him to the upper walks of his profession.

Arthur Rembrandt Moore was born at Portsmouth, Ohio, January 2, 1871. His boyhood was spent at Portsmouth. His parents were Samuel G. and Mary E. (Bradford) Moore. He attended the public schools of Portsmouth and graduated from the High School in 1889. He read medicine with Dr. P. J. Kline during vacations. He spent one year at the Miami Medical College and three and one-half years at Bellevue Medical College, New York, graduating in 1892. He practised medicine at Haverhill in this county two years and then went to Europe for further medical study. He spent one and one-half years in the Hospitals of Vienna and Berlin and returned to practice medicine in Portsmouth, where he has been ever since. He is a Republican; a member of the Bigelow Methodist Episcopal Church; a member of Hempstead Academy, and of the Modern Woodmen. He married Miss Gertrude LaCroix, daughter of the late John P. LaCroix, Professor of Languages at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, June 19, 1901. She is a grand-daughter of Andrew LaCroix one of the French emigrants of 1790, to whom was assigned lot 15 in the French Grant.

Dr. Moore is well read in his profession and possesses that highly sympathetic nature so advantageous and so necessary to one of his profession. He is a constant student and is an enthusiast in his devotion to medicine and surgery. He is always ready to adopt new methods and stands for the greatest research and advancement. He has deserved the confidence of the community and has it. He also possesses to the highest degree the confidence of his professional brethren.

Samuel Bell McKerrihan was born October 22, 1848, in Green County, Pennsylvania. His father was Joseph McKerrihan a native of Ireland, and his mother's maiden name was Eliza Jane Parker. He spent his boyhood in Washington, Green County, Pennsylvania. He attended school at Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pennsylvania. He took the Classical Course for two years and then he pursued a Normal course at Haneytown Normal School for eighteen months. In June, 1869, he began teaching school and taught twenty-two months in Cameron, Marshall County, West Virginia. At that place he began the study of medicine under Dr. S. B. Steiger and studied with him for four years. He attended the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati from September 1, 1873 until 1877; and graduated from that institution in March, 1877. From 1874 to 1879, he practised his profession at Pleasant Valley, Marshall County, West Virginia. In March, 1879, he removed to Moundville, West Virginia and practised medicine until November, 1883. At that time he took a post graduate course at the Medical College of Ohio, and attended the hospital. He there met Dr. Cyrus M. Finch, as he was going to Columbus to take charge of the Central Insane Asylum. Dr. McKerrihan came to Portsmouth May 30, 1884, and has been here ever since. He was U. S. Pension Examining Surgeon for the County from July, 1885 to 1889; and again from September, 1893 to July, 1807. He has always been a Democrat. He was married October 3, 1877, to Florence H. Crow of Marshall County, West Virginia, and has five children: Minta, Mabel, Russell, Pearl and Howard.

Milton Smith Pixley was born June 2, 1842, near Wheelersburg, Scioto County, Ohio. His father was Seymour Pixley. His mother was Elizabeth, widow of Nathan Orm, whose maiden name was Hayward. He was reared at Wheelersburg and attended school there. In 1859 and 1860, he was in the sophomore class at Ohio Wesleyan University. Doctor Pixley began the study of medicine in the fall of 1861 with Doctor Joseph Carson, of Portsmouth, Ohio, and attended the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati, in 1861 and 1862. He read medicine in the spring and summer of 1862, and up to August 18, 1863, when he entered the first O. V. I. as Hospital Steward and served till July 24, 1865. On returning from the army, he practised in Rome, Adams County, in the fall of 1865. During the winter of 1865 and 1866 he attended the Miami Medical College and graduated in 1866. He located in Catlettsburg, Kentucky, to practice medicine and remained there one year. In August, 1867, he located in Portsmouth, Ohio, and has been there ever since. He has been City Physician, a member of the Council, and a member of the School Board of Portsmouth. He is a communicant of All Saints Church and has been a Vestryman and a Junior Warden and is such now. He is a member of the Hempstead Academy of Medicine, and was Secretary of the Scioto County Medical Society during its existence. Doctor Pixley was married, June 30, 1875, to Miss R. Alice Gilruth, daughter of William Gilruth of Haverhill, Ohio, and has had five children. Earl Gilruth, the oldest son, born June 29, 1876, was killed November 18, 1901, at Elizabeth, New Jersey in a railroad accident; Charles Austin was born in 1877 and died at the age of four years. His daughters are Bessie and Marie; and he has a son, William, aged thirteen. Doctor Pixley is a Republican and is conservative in all his views. He was Secretary of the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine in 1886. On February 7, 1877, he located on Ninth street where he has since resided. In 1876, he and John T. Miller secured the passage of a resolution in Council to buy ten pairs of English sparrows at $3.00 per pair. In 1886, the city had sparrows to sell. These birds have become a nuisance. This action of Dr. Pixley as to English Sparrows is the only blemish on his record. It only shows that a good physician should not go outside of his profession.

Joseph Spangler Rardin was born in Bern Township, Athens County, Ohio, December 25, 1862. His father Levi Rardin owned a large farm adjoining that of William Rardin, grandfather of the subject of this sketch. William Rardin was one of the early settlers in that locality in 1822, his nearest neighbor being three miles distant, at the present town of Bartlett in Washington County. His great-grandfather, Henry Rardin, came down the Ohio river from Georgetown, Pennsylvania, in 1807. His great-great-grandfather, Dennis Rardin, emigrated to central Pennsylvania about 1750 from Dublin, Ireland, in company with, at least, one brother, John. They were Protestants and both left large families which drifted throughout the United States. The records of Westmoreland County show that Dennis Rardin died in 1789, and that his son Henry settled the estate prior to his moving down the Ohio into the then great Northwest Territory. He landed at Marietta, Ohio, afterwards moving into Washington County, where he died October 17, 1836, at the age of ninety-nine years. William Rardin, grandfather, was born in Pennsylvania, April 29, 1797, and married Elizabeth Andres about 1816. They began housekeeping near Bartlett in Bern Township, soon after their marriage, where he died December 11, 1876. Levi Rardin, the father, was born in Bern Township, Athens County, Ohio, January 12, 1822. He died on the farm adjoining that of his birth October 4, 1867, from an attack of acute dysentery.

Doctor Rardin's mother was Miss Fanny Lortilla Selby, daughter of Dyar and Tabitha Selby. She was born near Bartlett, Washington County, Ohio, November 9, 1826, and is still living on the old home farm in Bern Township, Athens County, with her son, Williard. Her mother's maiden name was Calhoun. Dyar Selby and his wife came down the Ohio about 1817, landing at Marietta, later settling near Bartlett, Ohio. Doctor Rardin has two brothers living. Jared J. Rardin a sketch of whom is found elsewhere in this book and Williard W. who owns the old homestead in Athens County, where he lives with their mother. Two sisters and one brother are dead. Eunice E., wife of J. M. Graham, died March 5, 1882, at the age of twenty-nine. Elizabeth Emmeline died October 17, 1867, at the age of ten years. Charles C. died September 16, 1867, at the age of sixteen.

Doctor Rardin spent his boyhood until he arrived at the age of nineteen on the farm, and attended the district school in winter. He was an apt pupil and began to teach at the age of sixteen. At that age, he entered Bartlett Academy which he attended at intervals between teaching and farming until 1882, when he entered the Ohio State University at Columbus, Ohio. Here he took a thorough course in the sciences and continued his teaching in the public schools of Franklin and Madison Counties until 1887, when he entered Starling Medical College, from which he graduated with honors in 1890 in a class of thirty-seven. He located at once at Portsmouth, Ohio, and began his profession, where he has continued to practice and now resides. In 1895, he spent several months in the Hospitals of New York City, furthering his professional attainments, being a matriculant of the Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital. For some years past in connection with his growing practice, he has done a large amount of surgical work and has achieved some reputation in that line. He is largely interested in a private hospital, fitted after modern ideas, where certain classes of medical and surgical cases can be better treated. He was married January, 1896, to Miss Caroline, Kehoe, daughter of the late Charles T. and Eliza D. Kehoe, well known residents of Portsmouth for many years past. Two children have been born to them, Helen Lansing and Charles Sanford. The latter died April 31, 1902. They have a very comfortable home at 108 Gallia avenue, which they enjoy very much, and at which place the Doctor also has his office. Doctor Rardin belongs strictly to the class of self made men. By toiling away patiently without support, except his own efforts, he has reached his present enviable position in his chosen profession. He is a Republican by politics and was brought up in the U. B. Church, but since living in Portsmouth, he has been an active member of Bigelow M. E. Church.

The Doctor's sterling qualities as a student and tireless worker have given him a standing among his colleagues second to none. Having special fondness and fitness for surgery he has availed himself of the training of some of our most noted surgeons in the great medical centers of learning and brings to his patients the advantages of this experience and training. Like all ardent medical students he is a faithful attendant on his local, state and national medical societies, ready to give and receive through papers and discussion that medical discipline that can be obtained in no other way. His quiet and unostentatious but earnest life among his home people has given him a high place in the respect and affection of all who know him, both as a friend and as a doctor.

Abram Goebel Sellards was born March 16, 1838, in Greenup County, Kentucky. His father was Andrew J. Sellards and his mother Mary G. Hartley, daughter of John Hartley. His father was a farmer. He had a common school and academical education. He began teaching school at the age of twenty-one and taught for two years. He enlisted in the 10th Kentucky Cavalry on September 15, 1862, for one year, and was made a Sergeant. He served out his time and was in two engagements. From 1863 to 1865 he was Deputy Clerk of Greenup County. In 1865, he began the study of medicine with Doctor A. M. Alexander of Burkeville, Kentucky. He attended lectures at Miami Medical College and graduated there in 1868, and began the practice of medicine at Powellsville, Scioto County, Ohio, in the spring of 1868, and remained there until the fall of 1871, when he went to Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, and graduated there in the spring of 1872. He then located in Greenup Kentucky, and remained there till 1893, when he removed to the city of Portsmouth, where he has resided ever since. He is eminently successful in his profession. He was a Pension Examining Surgeon in Greenup for ten years and in Portsmouth for four years. He was married March 22, 1865, to Emma E. Woodrow, daughter of William G. Woodrow of Greenup County, Kentucky. He has the following children: Howard, now a physician in Portsmouth; Margaret; Ernest Moxley, a physician in Ashland, Kentucky, and William S., a pharmacist. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church since 1873, and he is an elder in the Second Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio. He is and always has been a Republican.

Gustavus Adolphus Sulzer

The subject of this sketch was the eldest of the five children,—four sons and a daughter,—of Gustav W. F. Sulzer and Christiana L. Sulzer, nee Sulzer, and was born in Philadelphia, January 11, 1869. His father was born in Strassburg, Germany, in 1847, and emigrated to the United States in 1866, locating at Philadelphia. His mother was born at Bristol, Pennsylvania, of German parents, October 22, 1850, and was united in marriage to Gustav W. F. Sulzer, in March, 1868. The early education of our subject was obtained in the public schools of Philadelphia, in the grades below the High School. On completion of the last grade of the Grammar department, he entered the Spring Garden Institute (Polytechnic College) with a view to becoming a mechanical engineer. He was graduated in 1886, after three years of study, with the highest honors and the college gold medal. He then took up the study of practical mechanics at the Baldwin Locomotive Works at Philadelphia. After a few months he was offered the position of draughtsman and superintendent of construction by the Keystone Engine Works, of Philadelphia. He accepted and immediately entered upon his duties but after a few months he resigned the position and took up the interests of his father, who was engaged in the manufacture of plumbers' supplies. Here he served in numerous capacities until 1889. From 1884 until 1887 he attended special lectures on technical subjects in the various institutions of the city devoted to scientific study and research among which are, Wagner Institute, the Academy of Natural Sciences and Franklin Institute. He matriculated in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1889 and was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1892. While a student he was a member of the Guiteras Medical Society. After graduation, he took up the study of the eye, ear, nose and throat at the Pennsylvania Hospital and shortly entered private practice in general medicine, still continuing his special work. He became Assistant, by appointment, at the Eye Clinic of the Pennsylvania Hospital in 1893, and served till 1898, with an intermission of six months, when he was appointed resident physician and instructor in Physical Science in the Williamson Mechanical School in Delaware County, Pennsylvania. After returning from his service at the latter institution, he received the following appointments: Assistant at the Wills Eye Hospital, Ophthalmologist to the Charity Hospital and Assistant to the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, all, institutions situated in Philadelphia. In 1897, he began to concentrate his studies to the eye with the intention of making the practise of ophthalmology his life work.

Thoroughly equipped by comprehensive study and wide experience for the responsible profession he chose to exercise, he came to Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1898, and opened an office in the Damarin Building. He has since removed to East Second street.

He was elected to membership in the American Medical Association in 1899, and in the Hempstead Memorial Academy of Medicine the same year. He was the delegate of the latter body to the annual session of the former at Columbus, Ohio, in 1899, and again the following year, at its session held at Atlantic City, New Jersey. The desire of the Scioto County Board of Pension Examining Surgeons for a special expert examiner for the eye, ear, nose and throat, led to the appointment of Dr. Sulzer to that position, in May, 1900, by the Commissioner of Pensions.

He was united in marriage to Mabel Edna Munshower, daughter of Nathan and Jeanette (Hopkins) Munshower of Columbus, Ohio, June 4, 1900. They have one child, a daughter, Christine Jeanette, born April 15, 1901.

Dr. Sulzer is a believer in the principles and doctrines of the Republican party, but devotes his time exclusively to his practice.

Although but recently a citizen of Portsmouth, Dr. Sulzer has nevertheless attained an enviable position for strict integrity and honest endeavor. His work among his patients is most painstaking and thorough. No minute detail is omitted nor is any part of the work overlooked that would in any way contribute to the success of the undertaking or the benefit of his patient. Having had a most liberal and extensive training in the great medical school of the University of Pennsylvania, he is well qualified for his position. His social relations are of the most pleasing character and his intercourse with his fellow practitioners is frank, cordial and courteous, which with his eminent success has well earned for him the confidence of all his professional colleagues.

Frank Lauman Watkins was born June 28, 1879, at Clifford, Ohio, the son of George H. Watkins and Lillie I. Glaze, his wife. His mother was the daughter of Jonathan Glaze, one of the pioneers of Scioto County, Ohio. His grandfather Watkins, was a soldier in the Civil War. He died and was buried at Alexandria, Virginia. Our subject's boyhood and youth were spent at Clifford until he was six year of age, when his father removed to Wakefield, Pike County, where he attended the common schools and graduated from his Township High School in 1895. He taught school one year in Pike County. He took up the study of medicine with Doctor O. C. Andre of Waverly. He entered the Ohio Medical University at Columbus in September, 1897, and was graduated in April, 1901. The last year of his course he served in the Protestant Hospital in Columbus. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, in June, 1901, and has his office at 169 East Ninth street. He was married December 27, 1901, to Miss Dolly Dutton, daughter of Rasselas and Mary (Walton) Dutton of Columbus, Ohio. He is a Republican in his political views. He is a Mason and an Elk.

Doctor Watkins has equipped himself well for his chosen work by study and clinical experience. He believes in and carries out the most modern ideas in his treatment. He gives his patients the benefit of the most recent methods. He has taken a course approved by his brethren in medicine and his attention to the duties of his profession indicates that his advancement therein will be rapid and sure.

THE PROFESSION OF DENTISTRY.

We find no notice of dentists in Portsmouth in the public prints until December 20, 1836, when Dr. J. S. Wood was advertised.

On July 3, 1838, Dr. Gustavius Hills advertised, and on December 20, 1839, Dr. C. Walling advertised. He opened an office with Dr. Hempstead.

On May 27, 1842, Dr. Emil Monciny advertised. It was said he was a Dane.

In 1850, Dr. John W. Spry began as a dentist in Portsmouth and continued until his death. On May 2, 1855, he was married to Miss Louisa Davey by Rev. B. H. Spahr. He died of consumption, February 21, 1868, aged 45 years. His widow still resides on Sixth street in Portsmouth, and his son, Allen Spry, is one of the mail carriers.

November 17, 1857, Dr. George W. Gibbs began the practise of dentistry in Portsmouth and continued it during his life. He died September 22, 1873, aged 53 years. He has been a resident of the city twenty-eight years. He was assessed as a physician in Portsmouth in 1848. He was married to Susan Gilbert, daughter of Giles Gilbert, May 4, 1851. They had three children, Jesse Gibbs, who died when a young man; Ed Gibbs, the postal clerk, and Mrs. W. B. Hudson, of Minneapolis, Minn. Mrs. Gibbs died August 13, 1887.

May 30, 1860, E. M. Williams advertised as dental surgeon.

September 17, 1864, Dr. I. M. Wright located in Portsmouth.

May 21, 1865, Dr. E. E. March located in Portsmouth. He remained in Portsmouth several years, and then went to Lawrence, Kan., where, on September 6, 1871, he killed his wife, aged 37; his daughter, aged 8, and himself, aged 34. He committed the two murders and suicide with a razor.

In 1874, Dr. C. H. Stephenson, who had been in Portsmouth two or three years, sold out to Dr. Charles P. Dennis. Dr. Stephenson removed to Ripley, O. Dr. Dennis had located in Portsmouth, O., December 12, 1873.

In 1875, Dr. W. W. Moore advertised. He practised politics as well as dentistry, and liked politics the best. He, however, soon tired of the field and returned to West Virginia. Dr. D. M. McBriar, of Columbus, was in Portsmouth at the same time.

On May 20, 1876, Dr. D. McBriar sold out to Dr. T. G. Dennis.

August 10, 1878, Dr. William D. Tremper came to town.

Charles Parker Dennis was born April 8, 1833, near Batavia, in Clermont County, Ohio. His father, James Dennis, was a son of James Dennis, who came to Ohio from Pennsylvania and settled near Batavia. The wife of his grandfather, James Dennis, was Anna Murray, and her father served in the Revolutionary War from Pennsylvania. He was a native of Ireland. He was in the battle of Brandywine, and was wounded there. Dr. Dennis' mother's maiden name was Sarah A. Parker, a daughter of Isaac and Anna Parker, his wife, both natives of New Jersey, who settled in Turkey Bottoms, Clermont County, and were of English descent. Doctor Dennis was reared on his father's farm, one and one-half miles from Williamsburg at what was called Tunnel's Mill in Clermont County. He attended the country schools and afterwards taught school for two years, and attended the Miami University between times while he taught. He was Principal of the Oxford Public Schools in 1861. Directly within the next two or three days after the battle of Bull Run, he enlisted sixty-three men in the village of Oxford. With them he enlisted in Company "D", 47th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, July 10, 1861, as a private. He was made a Sergeant on the organization of the company, and was made First Sergeant, August 7th, 1861. He was appointed Sergeant Major October 20, 1861, was promoted to Second Lieutenant of Company "D", December 21, 1861; to First Lieutenant of Company "B", December 15, 1862; transferred to Company "F" December 21, 1863; promoted to Captain November 6, 1864, but not mustered. He was mustered out November 18, 1864, by reason of the expiration of his term of service. He took part in all of the battles in which the 47th Ohio Volunteer Infantry participated. The skirmishes in which he took part are not mentioned, but the battles are: Carnifex Ferry, W. Va., September 10, 1861; Lewisburg, W. Va., May 23, 1862; Jackson, Miss., May 14-17, 1863; Vicksburg, Miss., (seige of) May 18, to July 4, 1863; Vicksburg, Miss., (assaults) May 19-20, 1863; Resaca, Ga., May 13-16, 1864; Dallas, Ga., May 25 to June 4, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, Ga., (general assault) June 27, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., (Hood's First Sortie) July 22, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., (siege of) July 28, to September 2, 1864; Jonesboro, Ga., August 31, to September 1, 1864. Doctor Dennis was wounded four times in the service: at Miller's Ferry in December, 1861; in a skirmish on New River with a minie ball in the left limb. In the assault on Vicksburg he was wounded on the 19th of May, 1862, with a buckshot, which traversed the front of his body from side to side. He had the finger ends of his right hand mangled with a minie ball at Kenesaw Mountain, on the 26th of June, 1864.

At the close of the war, he located in New Richmond. He studied dentistry from 1870 to 1873, and was graduated from the Ohio Dental College at Cincinnati. In 1873, he located in Portsmouth on West Second street and practised his profession in one place for twenty-eight years, retiring from practice in 1901. He has always been a strong Republican. His father and he were anti-slavery men, and were familiar with that portion of the "underground railroad." He assisted many a slave to escape and is proud of the fact. He has been a Presbyterian for forty years. He was a member of the First Presbyterian church of Portsmouth until 1875, when he became one of the charter members in the organization of the Second church and was made an elder therein. He changed his membership back to the First church a few years later and has been an elder in that church for three years past.

He was married to Sarah M. Lane, daughter of Herman and Isabel Lane, of Oxford, Ohio, December 12, 1861. They have one child, George James, a practising physician of Chicago. He is a graduate of the Portsmouth High School and of the Dental School of the University of Michigan. He has also received the Medical Degree from the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati and from the Medical School of the Northwestern University at Chicago, Illinois. In June, 1902, our subject was appointed a member of the City Board of Review for the period of five years.

He is a good citizen from every point of view. He abhors and hates all that is dishonest and unfair. He is zealous and faithful in the discharge of every duty in every social relation.

Ellsworth Custer Jackson was born in South Webster, Ohio, December 18, 1864, the son of Samuel and Affier (Allen) Jackson. His grandfather William Jackson has a separate sketch herein. When he was a child, his parents removed to Jackson County, Ohio, where his boyhood and youth were spent. He attended the public schools and two terms at Oak Hill Academy. He taught school three years in Jackson County and took a one year literary course at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. He spent two years at the Ohio Dental College, at Cincinnati, Ohio. He completed his course March 6, 1895, and began practice in Portsmouth, Ohio. He is a Republican. He was married December 25, 1896 to Haley M. Ervin, daughter of James and Mira Ervin. He has one child, Le Monne E.

Stewart Dana Ruggles was born at Henderson, Henderson County, Kentucky, on February 10, 1875. His father's name is Caleb F., and his mother's maiden name was Henrietta Dixon. His grandfather Ruggles was a native of Massachusetts, who emigrated to Kentucky, but sent his son, the Doctor's father, to Harvard College where he graduated. The Doctor attended the University of Arkansas, at Fayetteville, in that state, for two years. He then attended the Northwestern University, at Chicago, and took up the study of dentistry. He was graduated as a Doctor of Dental Surgery, in June, 1896. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, in the practice of his profession, July 1, 1896, forming a partnership with Dr. Charles P. Dennis, as Dennis & Ruggles. This continued until January 1, 1901, when Dr. Dennis retired from practice and Dr. Ruggles continued alone. He is a member of the Delta Sigma Delta fraternity, and an Elk. In his religious views, he is a Presbyterian and is a member of the First Church of Portsmouth.

William Davis Tremper was born May 9, 1851, in New Richmond, Ohio. His father was Johnson Tremper and his mother's maiden name was Laura Jeffries. He was the fifth of his father's ten children. He attended the High School in New Richmond, also the Ohio University from 1868 until 1870. Then he commenced the study of dentistry under Doctor Mollyneaux of New Richmond and Doctor J. Taft of Cincinnati, Ohio. He attended the Ohio Dental College of Cincinnati and was graduated in 1872. He then located at Ypsilanti, Michigan, and was there until 1878. He came to Portsmouth, August 10, 1878, and began the practice of his profession in Portsmouth and has continued it ever since. On December 6, 1880, he was married to Mary Todd Hayman, daughter of Hon. R. H. Hayman. His children are Richard Hayman, a student in the Portsmouth High School; Laura, a student of Oxford College for Women; William Johnson, a school boy; and Hugh Herrick. The Doctor is a Presbyterian and a Republican. He is a member of the Elks and a Knight Templar Mason.

George Howard Williamson, son of George Williamson and Eliza Catherine (Givens) Williamson, was born September 24, 1876, in Washington Township. His maternal grandfather was William Givens of near Buena Vista. In addition to a common school education, he attended the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, in 1894 and 1895, completing the sophomore year of the Scientific course. He at once began the study of dentistry and graduated from the Ohio College of Dental Surgery at Cincinnati, in 1898. He worked at his profession at Cleveland, Ohio, from April till October, 1898, when he located in Portsmouth, Ohio. Here he has practised every since with excellent success. Doctor Williamson is a Republican, though not an active politician. He is a member of Bigelow M. E. church. He is also a member of Aurora Lodge F. and A. M. and of the Elks.

Perley Lawrence Dew was born in Nelsonville, Athens County, Ohio, August 7, 1876. His father was Silas Dew, a merchant, now at Athens. His mother's maiden name was Louise Smith. They had two children, our subject and a daughter. Young Dew went to the public schools at Nelsonville and graduated in 1889. In September, 1891, he entered the Ohio University and remained until June, 1894, when he entered the University of Medicine in Baltimore to study dentistry. He remained there one year and finished at the Ohio University at Columbus, graduating in April, 1902. He located in Portsmouth, Ohio, June 16, 1902, where he obtained an office in the Gilgen building on Chillicothe street. He is a Republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Here is what Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor says of him: "Mr. Dew is a young man noted for his fine development of athletic power; has won fame on the University grounds at Athens as a member of the O. U. base and foot ball teams. He is of good habits, gentlemanly and agreeable. No word of criticism was ever made against his character or conduct in his life here in Athens, or any where else, where he has been. He is of agreeable address, has ambition to excel in his profession, and is worthy of the esteem of the people where he is located."

CLUBS.

The Portsmouth Reading Club.

In the autumn of 1870, Miss Mary E. Switzer invited Misses Anna Glidden, Alice Bonsall, Maggie Jones and Rev. Mr. J. F. Franklin to meet at her home, the residence of Rev. Mr. Mitchell, to discuss the advisability of organizing a Reading Club. Preliminary steps were taken and on October 14, 1870, the same parties with the addition of Miss Lizzie Glover, Rev. Hosea Jones, Messrs. Sherman Johnson and E. N. Hope met at the home of Miss Maggie Jones and organized the Portsmouth Reading Club. Mr. E. E. Ewing was the first chairman, and Miss Switzer the first secretary. The following persons were enrolled the first year: Miss Bonsall (Mrs. Higgins), Miss Damarin (Mrs. A. B. Voorheis), Rev. Mr. Franklin, Miss Glidden (Mrs. Houts), Miss Glover (Mrs. Henry Hess), Miss Jones (Mrs. George Mason), Miss Rilda Martin, Miss Morris (Mrs. W. M. Pursell), Miss M. J. Peebles, Miss Switzer (Mrs. E. B. Moore), Miss Kinney, James Newman, S. B. Jennings, E. F. Draper, Sherman Johnson and E. E. Ewing. The programs during the first twenty years consisted of selections from favorite authors recitations and music. Of late years it has become quite a literary club with programs covering a wide scope, original papers, poems, discussions of current events, historical, political and scientific topics. Its membership is limited to forty.

The tenth anniversary was celebrated with a banquet at the home of Capt. and Mrs. E. B. Moore; the fifteenth at the home of Mr. J. F. Towell; the twentieth, at the home of Capt. and Mrs. N. W. Evans; the twenty-fifth at the home of Miss Damarin, and the thirtieth, at the residence of Dr. W. D. Tremper. At this banquet only four of the first year members were present, Mrs. Moore, Miss Peebles, Mrs. Voorheis, Mrs. E. E. Ewing and Mrs. Mason. Names of members retiring from the club are placed on the honorary list, which now enrolls 366 names. Twenty-three members have died. The active members enrolled at this date are: Mesdames D. B. Cotton, D. B. Dillion, N. W. Evans, H. Hibbs, L. Hall, N. Kinney, H. W. Miller, E. B. Moore, J. S. Rardin, George Scudder, W. Schwartz, J. S. Thomas, W. D. Tremper, F. Helfenstein, Julia Turley, Misses Grace G. Cotton, Alice Duduit, Gladys Evans, Lucy Hall, M. Y. Moore, M. J. Peebles, Mary Reed, Anna Ross, Thyrsa Spry, Clara Waller, Messrs. B. H. Dillon, N. W. Evans, H. Hibbs, H. W. Miller, G. D. Scudder, J. S. Thomas, W. Schwartz, Rev. J. D. Herron, Drs. Lorin Hall, Arthur Moore, J. S. Rardin, S. D. Ruggles, W. D. Tremper, G. H. Williamson.

The Woman's Literary Club was organized February 20, 1891, by a number of ladies, a few of whom had been conducting a History Class for a period of fourteen years. On April 21, 1891, it was admitted to the National Federation, but it withdrew in 1900. Its membership is limited to sixty active and twenty associate members. The following women in the order named have served as presidents: Miss Grace Cotton, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Evans, Miss Margaret J. Peebles, Mrs. Pauline Esselborn, Mrs. Julia W. Alger, Mrs. Mary E. Draper, Mrs. Mary S. Cotton, Mrs. Ella Overturf, Miss Maggie Firmstone, Mrs. Mary A. Royse, Mrs. Alma Caskey, (Vice President served as President on Mrs. Overturf's removal from the city.) Mrs. Lena Kline Reed is the President. It is a charter club of the Ohio State Federation organized at Springfield in 1894. Mesdames Mary E. Draper and Mary S. Moore have served on the State Club Extension Committee. The deceased members are: Mesdames A. W. Huber, S. B. Tewksbury, J. H. Beyerly, J. W. Alger, Misses B. R. Hall, A. E. Purdum, Kate Taylor and Mrs. S. O. Titus. The object of the club is to "Develop and improve the intellect of women, create a center of thought and action for the promotion of literary, scientific and artistic growth."

The New Century Club

was organized January 31, 1902, by the Club Extension Committee of the Woman's Literary Club, composed of Mesdames Mary S. Moore, Lena R. Labold, Charl T. Newman. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Clara M. Pursell, President; Mrs. Effie M. Walker, Vice President; Mrs. Emma J. Graham, Secretary and Mrs. Agnes C. Ricker, Treasurer. Executive Board: Mesdames Louise G. Leete, Sadie W. Hibbs and Miss Kate Reilly. The Club joined the State Federation April 21, 1902. The object of the Club is literary study. The membership is limited to forty.

The Clover Club.

The Junior Literary Club was organized in 1896 by three friends who read Shakespeare together on Saturday afternoons. The next year, through the interest, and with the guidance of Mrs. Edgar F. Draper, a member of the State Committee for Club Extension, the Junior Literary Club adopted the name of The Clover Club, and, with a few additional members, joined the State Federation in October, 1897.

The Clover Club programs have covered current events and the history of Ohio, France, Russia and England. In connection with the study of Russia, the Club secured the services of Dr. Crawford, of Cincinnati, a former consul to that country, who gave an illustrated lecture upon Russia; and as a courtesy to the Clubs that have entertained the Clover Club, an interesting lecture upon Holland was given by Miss Perry, also of Cincinnati. Twice a year the Club holds an "Open Meeting," to which guests are bidden. The membership is limited to twenty-five.

The Portsmouth Cycling Club

Was originally formed in the Spring of 1893 with about fifteen members. Alex. M. Glockner was Chairman and David Stahler Secretary. It was reorganized in the Fall of 1895, and incorporated February 11th, 1896, with Fred. N. Tynes President and Dan W. Conroy Secretary, at which time it had about thirty-five members. The purpose for which the Club was formed is the advancement of the general interests of cycling, to ascertain, protect and defend the rights and privileges of members in good standing and to promote friendly and social relations among the members thereof. The present officers are: Oscar W. Newman, President; Geo. W. Zottman, Vice President, and John W. Berndt, Secretary and Treasurer. The Club Rooms are conveniently located at 15 West Second Street, the old William Maddock residence. The membership has steadily increased since its organization, and is now more than two hundred.

The Portsmouth Commercial Club

Was organized in October, 1899, with $5,000 stock. There were 104 stock-holding members and 52 contributing members. The original officers were: Frank V. Knauss, President; Harry S. Grimes, First Vice President; John Heer, Second Vice President; Simon Labold, Third Vice President; Robert C. Myers, Secretary, and Dan W. Conroy, Treasurer. The first Board of Directors was composed of the following: Frank V. Knauss, Harry S. Grimes, Wells A. Hutchins, A. J. Finney, D. C. Williams, Chris. Heer, and Theo. Doty. The present officers are: Harry S. Grimes, President; Floyd L. Smith, Secretary, and Dan W. Conroy, Treasurer. The present Directors are: H. S. Grimes, George Walters, W. G. Williamson, F. V. Knauss, Simon Labold, A. T. Johnson, Theo. Doty. There are 156 members. The Club Room is at 15 East Second Street.

LIBRARIES.

The Public Library.

The act under which it was authorized was passed May 14th, 1878, and will be found on Page 541, Volume 75, of the Laws of Ohio. The same law is now Sections 4003 to 4006, Revised Statutes. This bill was introduced into the Legislature by Honorable R. H. Hayman, on March 23d, 1878. On October 2d, 1878, the Board of Education, of Portsmouth, Ohio, gave the building in the northwest corner of Fifth and Court Streets. On June 18th, 1879, the first library committee was appointed, consisting of George O. Newman, President; H. A. Towne, Secretary, and James F. Towell. Mr. Newman still remains President of the Board. The committee since were: Henry Tracy, who succeeded James F. Towell; A. B. Alger, who succeeded Henry Tracy, and A. T. Holcomb, who succeeded H. A. Towne, at his death. Since then the committee has been George O. Newman, A. B. Alger, and A. T. Holcomb. On August 12th, 1879, the Public Library was opened, and Colonel James E. Wharton was obtaining donations of books from every source. On January 21st, 1880, the venerable

Dr. G. S. B. Hempstead delivered a lecture at All Saints Chapel, on "Puritan Intolerance and Persecution," for the benefit of the Public Library. On September 22d, 1880, the Library had 3,953 volumes, gathered by Colonel Wharton. Up to this date the Library and improvements had only cost $400. On September 28th, 1881, there were 5,000 volumes in the Library. On February 2, 1884, the Times published an article to the effect that the idea of the Public Library in Portsmouth had originated with the Honorable R. H. Hayman. On September 22d, 1888, a new Public Library Building, to cost $3,000, was proposed, and the money was solicited by public voluntary subscriptions. On the 13th of April, 1889, the new building was about complete. It cost $3,300.

There was levied for the Public Library, when the law first went into effect, one-tenth of a mill, and it produced, the first year, about $400. The law was amended in Volume 78, Page 176, April 18, 1881, to increase the levy to two-tenths of a mill; and that produced about $900 revenue. Volume 92, Page 309, April 24th, 1896, the levy was increased to three-tenths of a mill, which produced $1,600 to $1,700 per year. The number of books in the Library at its opening was 400. The number of books at present are, miscellaneous, about 12,000, and public documents, 6000. The amount expended for books at first was about $400 per annum. The amount now expended is about $1,200 per annum. The number of patrons in the city is about 4000—adults, 3000, and children, 1000.

The following notes about the attempt to found a library in Portsmouth were taken from old city newspapers. On January 26th, 1839, the Portsmouth Library Company met and made the dues $5 per year. The subsequent history of the Company is unknown. February 25th, 1839, at a meeting, S. M. Tracy was President and Henry Bliss, Secretary. Articles of Association were adopted, and nine Directors were elected. They were: B. Kepner, Edward Hamilton, John Rose, S. M. Tracy, G. S. B. Hempstead, John F. Thornton, B. F. Conway, Thomas Charles and Henry Blake.

On July 19th, 1839, the Company had a collection of books at John Clark's room on Front Street. The Company proposed to erect a building. On December 20th, 1839, John Clark called a meeting of the Directors for December 23d. On May 2d, 1849, the Company met and organized under the charter from the Legislature. The Library Company, on February 11th, 1842, was addressed by Colonel O. F. Moore and Rev. Dr. Burr.

On May 11th, 1865, there was another effort to found a Public Library. A society was organized, with $5 per year membership. On June 25th, 1865, the Company elected officers: Rev. E. Burr, President; George O. Newman, Vice President; J. W. Bannon, Secretary, and William Kinney, Treasurer. It is not known what became of this organization.

The Carnegie Library.

On July 29th, 1901, Mr. Henry Lorberg, an enterprising young man connected with the press in Portsmouth and of excellent literary taste, interested himself and procured from Mr. Andrew Carnegie the offer to donate $50,000 to the erection of a Public Library, in the city of Portsmouth, on condition that the city should donate and expend $5,000 per year for its support. The Board of Trade took the matter up and approved it. The proposition was accepted by the city of Portsmouth, and it purchased 137½ feet front on Gallia Street, between Waller and Offnere Streets, and notified Mr. Carnegie that the site was provided. It also appointed a committee on the erection of the building composed of three Councilmen—George E. Matthews, Melvin Funk, and Edward Poffenberger; and two citizens—George E. Kricker and Charles F. Daehler. At this time no arrangements have been made to merge the present Public Library, under the control of the City Board of Education, with the Carnegie Library, under control of the City Council.

HOMES.

The Children's Home.

The movement for this institution began on January 21, 1874, at a meeting of the ladies at the First Presbyterian Church, to consider the organization of such an institution. Mrs. William Moore, Mrs. D. B. Cotton, and Mrs. D. N. Murray addressed the meeting. On the 11th of February, following, Mrs. D. B. Cotton, Mrs. Francis Helfenstein, Mrs. S. R. Ross, Mrs. J. K. Lodwick, and Mrs. Samuel Reed went to Massena to obtain information in regard to the Children's Home there. Mrs. Col. P. Kinney offered to donate two lots on Third Street for the building, but the offer was not accepted. On April 1st, following, a meeting was held at the Presbyterian Church. Judge Henry A. Towne presided. Mr. A. McFarland was Secretary. Mr. Murray Shipley, of Cincinnati, President of the Cincinnati Children's Home, was there and made an address. A subscription was taken up and $1,000 raised, of which $100 was subscribed by Mr. John G. Phelps, $100 by B. B. Gaylord, $50 by Mrs. Rachel Hamilton, $10 by James Y. Gordon, $10 each by Mrs. Dunning, Robert Bell, Miss Mary Gaylord and Dr. Cotton.

On the 24th of June, 1874, the City Council gave the use of the City Hospital in order that the Home might be started at once, and it was opened in that place on the 1st of October, 1874.

On February 13th, 1875, there was a spelling match at the Sixth Street M. E. Church for the benefit of the Home. The receipts were $70. On February 19th, $50.00 was paid for plans for the Home and another spelling match was held on the 11th of February at the Court House. Mrs. Dr. Norton won the prize being the last one on the floor. On February 26th, 1875, another spelling match was held. This time it was the gentlemen against the ladies. N. W. Evans was captain for the ladies and John Morris for the men. Col. O. F. Moore and T. C. Dammann were umpires, and E. M. Loring was pronouncer. Captain William Moore missed the first word. Miss Alice Hayes, Miss Jennie Smith, of West Union, Miss Chattie Lewis and Miss Maggie Fry were the last four ladies on the floor. George Helfenstein was the last man, and Miss Anne Hayes the last lady. Miss Hayes went down on "confinaide," and Mr. Helfenstein won the prize—a coal cell. Miss Hayes won "Booster's Geographical Gazetteer" as a second prize. The receipts were $100.

On the 8th of June, following, the Home purchased a lot in the cemetery.

On the 19th of August, 1875, the Commissioners of the County, James Lodwick, O. B. Gould and N. Shackett, sat in the court-room and listened to arguments "pro and con" in regard to the Commissioners letting the building of the Children's Home. R. N. Spry, the Prosecuting Attorney, gave it as his opinion that the Commissioners had the right to let the work. Col. O. F. Moore, H. A. Towne and N. W. Evans favored the proposition, and A. C. Thompson and J. W. Bannon opposed it.

On November 8, 1875, the contract was let to J. W. Purdum for $18,500. On November 23, 1875, the first annual report was published, signed by Mrs. H. A. Evans, Secretary. The Home had thirty-six children and cared for forty-eight during the year.

On November 8th, 1875, the children were moved to the old Infirmary building, and the City Hospital was used for a pest house.

On the morning of the 14th of August, 1876, the Children's Home was burned. The loss was $8,000. On the 23d of August, 1876, Mr. Purdum refused to rebuild. The Commissioners ordered $1,000 repairs at once. On September 24th, 1876, bids for repairing were accepted by the Commissioners. On the 15th of April, following, the Commissioners ordered advertising for bids for the completion of Children's Home. The building of the Home was completed and turned over to the County. It was kept by an association of ladies at first, consisting of 57 members, and during the period of one year 51 meetings were held. In April, 1876, through the influence of Mrs. Col. O. F. Moore, a Sunday-school was organized in the Home. Mr. Sam Reed went the first Sunday, and Miss Emma Bell and Mrs. Dan Ryan were the only teachers. Mrs. John B. Gregory afterward became a teacher and superintendent of the school. Mrs. Belle Tracy and her daughter, now Mrs. Mallory, were also teachers, as were Miss Jennie Stewart and her sisters, Miss Ella and Miss Maggie. Mr. Wm. Rhodes undertook to teach the children to sing.

When the Home was first started everybody seemed to desire to help it. Dr. Cotton was the first physician, and he rendered services for six months free of all charges. Afterward Dr. McDowell was the physician. During the time the ladies managed the Home, the Supply Committee consisted of Mrs. J. K. Lodwick, Miss Mary Peebles, Mrs. George Johnson, Miss Marion Firmstone. The ladies, during their management, received and disbursed $1,129.32. They also received many donations in clothing and provisions.

On August 6th, 1877, the County Commissioners turned the Home over to the Trustees, John G. Peebles, James Y. Gordon and William Kinney. William Kinney resigned and S. C. Morrow was appointed in his place. On March 1st, 1877, the following appointments were made: S. C. Morrow, two years; James Y. Gordon, three years; John G. Peebles, one year. Mr. James Y. Gordon resigned March 1, 1882, and was succeeded by E. E. Ewing. He served until March 1, 1890, when he resigned, and Mr. W. K. Thompson was appointed in his place and served until his death in March, 1901. Mr. Frank B. Kehoe succeeded Mr. Thompson. Mr. John G. Peebles served as Trustee until March, 1, 1901, when his son, John Peebles, was appointed to succeed him. Mr. Morrow resigned December 1, 1882, and was succeeded by Mr. Samuel Reed, who served until May 5, 1895, when he was succeeded by Mr. George D. Selby. On May 12, 1895, the Board was increased to four members and Dr. J. F. Davis was appointed. The present Board is as follows: Messrs. G. D. Selby, Frank B. Kehoe, John Peebles and J. F. Davis.

The first officers among the ladies who managed the Home were: President, Mrs. D. B. Cotton; Vice President, Mrs. C. P. Lloyd; Recording Secretary, Mrs. H. A. Towne; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. E. F. Draper; Treasurer, Mrs. James Y. Gordon. Mr. Robert Bell was the first Clerk of the Board, and served until his death in December, 1883. Since that time Mr. W. C. Silcox has been Clerk.

The cost of conducting the Home at the present time is $5,500 per year, and the number of children cared for is 50.

Aged Women's Home.

May 7, 1882, by invitation of Mrs. Cornelia Hutchins, the ladies met to organize an association.

September 16, 1882, the association had 70 members, $55.50 in the treasury, $300 subscribed, and a bequest of $500. Mrs. F. E. Duduit, Treasurer; Essie Towell, Secretary.

May 25, 1886, election. Mrs. O. C. McCall, President; Mrs. W. A. Hutchins, Vice President, First; Mrs. T. J. Graham, Vice President, Second; Mrs. George O. Newman, Secretary, and Mrs. George Helfenstein, Treasurer.

September 21, 1896, the corner-stone for the new Home was laid. Dr. P. J. Kline made an introductory address. Rev. D. S. Tappan, D. D., the prayer, and Hon. James W. Newman the regular address. The following are some facts taken from Mr. Newman's address: Meeting to organize was held May 7, 1882. Constitution adopted May 30, 1882, and its first officers elected. The first Home was a small house on Bond Street. The first inmate received November 6, 1883. In July, 1884, the old Clough Homestead, on Fourth Street, was purchased. From the beginning there has been nine inmates. Mrs. Jane Calvert made a bequest of $500, also Mrs. Rachel Hamilton. Hon. John T. Wilson donated the ground on which the new Home will stand. The lot on which the new Home was to stand was sold by Henry Massie, the founder of Portsmouth, to Uriah White. He married Mary Huston, daughter of William Huston, and a sister of Captain Samuel J. Huston. They were married by Robert Lucas, a Justice of the Peace, July 8, 1808. This information was put in the corner-stone by John G. Peebles, whose parents, John and Margaret Peebles, came to Portsmouth, Ohio, April 3, 1819. The number of the lot is 144. The new Home was to contain 15 rooms.

February 11, 1897, the Home was completed and thrown open to the public. It cost $4,220.08. Subscribed for same, $3,390. Changes were made which increased the cost to $6,446.51, including heating.

The Board of Trade was organized in 1869 and re-organized in 1901. There are 135 members, and the officers are: H. S. Grimes, President; George D. Selby, First Vice President;

Frank V. Knauss, Second Vice President; Floyd L. Smith, Secretary, and George E. Krieger, Treasurer. The Directors are: H. S. Grimes, George D. Selby, F. V. Knauss, J. W. Barnon, George M. Appel, Samuel Reed, A. T. Johnson, John Heer, A. T. Holcomb, Simon Laboid, Frank L. Marting.

Hotels and Restaurants—Banks and Bankers Building Associations—Merchants—Manufactories—Twelfth United States Census of Manufactures—The Portsmouth Telephone Company—The Portsmouth Gas Company—Insurance Agents.

HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS.

The first hotel in Portsmouth was kept by John Brown, the first citizen. It was a primitive affair, but was replete with good cheer. The landlord was popular, and so were his daughters. Two of them married Generals of the Militia—General Robert Lucas and General William Kendall.

Brown opened his hotel in about 1806, though Keyes says it was about 1804. It was a two-story log affair near the Point. Brown has a sketch in this work.

Elijah Glover started a hotel in Portsmouth, on Pig Iron Corner, some time later. He built on Pig Iron Corner, and kept there till shortly before his death.

In 1818 there was an Ohio Hotel, kept by Henry Core, which he sold out to John Peebles in April, 1819.

On September 8, 1825, Squire Cornelius McCoy began the career of hotel keeping at the "Golden Lamb," where the Hotel Portsmouth now stands.

At the same time, William Peebles was conducting the Portsmouth Hotel.

In 1830, Peebles' Hotel was advertised by John Peebles, and he had the stage office. He advertised at the corner of West and Water Streets, now Front and Jefferson Streets. He also advertised the commission business.

In 1834, C. McCoy had leased his hotel to John Watson, of Chillicothe, who changed the name to the Franklin House. In 1836, John Watson built a hotel on the site of the present Biggs House, and started in business there. His health failed, and his son, William H. Watson, and John Brown took the hotel and run it for eighteen months. Then John Brown run it eighteen months longer. On March 1, 1839, Col. T. J. Graham came from Chillicothe and took charge and run it till 1853, under the name of the United States. It made more money and entertained more distinguished people than any hotel in Portsmouth, before or since. The Colonel was a society man, and had wonderful ability as a caterer and "boniface." McCoy took charge of his hotel, when Watson left, and called it the Mansion House until 1840, when he named it the American Hotel. In 1843, A. and B. J. Van Court took charge of it. On January 19, 1844, McCoy announced he had resumed control of the American Hotel and had Mr. and Mrs. Tewksbury to assist him. He stated that he kept a reading-room, and that the stages started from his hotel. In 1844, Colonel Graham announced that he had livery in connection with the United States Hotel, and that he sent carriages to meet the steamboats at the landings. In January, 1846, the National Hotel opened. This was a disastrous venture of Major Chas. F. Reiniger. William H. Briggs, a brother-in-law of the Major, kept the hotel. It never paid, and it broke the Major. It had five stories, and was fifty-three feet front and sixty-five feet deep. The steamboat landing was at that time in front of the hotel. In 1846, the American Hotel was conducted by Ralph St. John. In this same year, it had a financial collapse, and was advertised by David Gharky, Trustee. In 1848, it seems E. Coney had charge of it for a short time, and in the same year had another, the Farmers' on Second Street. In 1848, Robert Montgomery had the McCoy Hotel, and changed the name to the Franklin House. In 1850, E. Coney had passed over to the majority, and the Farmers' Hotel was conducted by Ann Coney. In 1851, it was given up by her and was conducted by B. J. Myers.

In 1853, there was the Railroad Hotel, on Jefferson Street, conducted by Samuel G. Ramsey.

On October 5, 1853, Willis & Ripley advertised the Greyhound Restaurant. This is the first time a restaurant was advertised in Portsmouth.

On March 8, 1854, the Eagle House, between Madison and Massie, on Front, was advertised.

On October 11, 1854, Varner and Lodwick advertised a restaurant.

On October 24, 1854, the name Biggs House was first used. It was formerly the United States Hotel, and Colonel John Row succeeded Colonel T. J. Graham. It seems that no one with a less rank than Colonel could conduct that house.

On November 22, 1854, Stephen Edmunds was conducting the National Hotel. He advertised stabling for thirty-two horses.

On December 20, 1854, the Boyd House was conducted on Jefferson Street, between Front and Second.

In 1853, the Farmers' Hotel had been changed to the Clinton House.

In 1855, John W. Varner kept the Valley Restaurant.

In 1856, D. and R. L. Dodge conducted the Madison House at Fifth and Chillicothe Streets.

In 1858, in March, the Franklin House was conducted by C. W. Higgins. He changed the name to the Higgins House. In the same year Henry D. Burton was conducting the St. Charles Exchange. Burton conducted it until 1860, when A. L. Martin became the proprietor.

In 1859, the Biggs House was conducted by R. Montgomery and Sons.

In 1860, Fred. Legler was conducting the Eagle Hotel, on Front Street, between Madison and Main. He had stabling for fifty horses and a wagon yard. Fred. Legler kept in business in Portsmouth, at different places west of Market Street, and amassed a modest fortune.

In 1862, C. W. Higgins was keeping the Plymouth House, on Front Street, opposite the steamboat landing.

In 1863, Colonel T. J. Graham again ventured into business. This time he kept a restaurant, on Market Street, with a bar. He was not successful.

In 1864, Fred. Legler was conducting the White Bear Hotel, and made it pay. Everyone liked Fred, and he was a popular landlord. He died in 1880 at the early age of forty-seven.

In 1864, Amos L. Higgins was conducting the Eagle Hotel, on Front Street.

On April 12, 1865, W. H. H. Taylor, better known as Horseshoe Taylor, took the Biggs House. He had the Midas touch, when it came to the hotel business. He changed the name to the Taylor House and made $30,000 while he ran it. The main point in his conducting the hotel was, that he was always in the dining-room at meals and carved all the meat at a side table. He kept his eyes on the waiters all the time. Another good quality, he never forgot to put anything in the bill of a departing guest. He welcomed his guests in a manner which was delightful, and while his bills were always all they could bear, he made every departing guest feel he had his "money's worth." He kept a number of old horseshoes in sight, about his desk, and he made out all the bills.

On June 3, 1865, George Washington Jones bought the McCoy Hotel, then known as the Golden Lamb, and changed it to the Jones House. He wanted to popularize it.

In 1865, Lewis H. Young was conducting an eating house in Portsmouth.

In 1866, Marshall McElhaney was conducting a hotel on the southwest corner of Gallia and Chillicothe Streets, where the Post Office now stands. Henry Starks was keeping the White Bear at the same time.

The Farmers' Hotel, at the corner of Third and Market, was kept by Dennis Ragan.

In 1867, The Handley House, formerly the Higgins House, was kept on the south side of Second Street, between Market and Court. J. H. Handley, proprietor.

In 1867, D. S. Newman kept the Grand Hotel, on Front Street.

On September 28, 1867, Pat Kenrick advertised the St. Charles Exchange just opened. He conducted it for seventeen years. It was very popular, and he made and saved money there.

On November 2, 1867, John Wilson opened the Sheridan House, on Fifth Street, next the St. Mary's Parish School. The venture was not a success, and when he died the house was closed. It is now owned by the Sisters.

On June 28, 1868, Fred. Legler opened the Legler House, on Front Street, next east of the Hotel Portsmouth, and conducted it until his death, in 1880. After his death his family conducted the house for a number of years.

On April 10, 1869, W. H. H. Taylor sold his lease on the Taylor House to Pat Prendergast.

On June 19, 1869, Michael Goodman took charge of the Germania Hotel, on the southwest corner of Gallia and Chillicothe Streets.

On August 28, 1869, Wash Jones sold the Jones House to John W. Varner for $9,000.

On May 25, 1870, an addition, on Market Street to the Taylor House, was being erected. It took the place of an old frame which formerly stood there. It was four stories high and cost $15,200.

On August 3, 1870, John W. Varner was rebuilding his hotel. He called it the Merchants' Hotel.

In September, 1870, Carter & Co. were conducting the Europa Hotel, on the south side of Second Street, between Market and Court.

On March 6, 1871, occurred the great fire which destroyed the Taylor or Biggs House; an account of it will be found elsewhere. The loss to the owner of the Biggs House was $30,000, with no insurance. The loss to Pat Prendergast, the lessee, was $10,000. Mr. Biggs had been solicited to insure the house the day before the fire but neglected to do so. His new addition, costing $15,200 and erected in 1870, was destroyed. The Biggs House was immediately rebuilt, but while it was rebuilding, John W. Varner coined money at his hotel.

On November 1, 1871, the name Taylor House was changed to Biggs House, and has since remained.

On March 27, 1872, S. B. Jennings purchased an interest in the Biggs House with Pat Prendergast, and the firm became Prendergast & Jennings. The rebuilt Biggs House was not reopened till April 18, 1872. There was a formal opening, and 800 to 1,000 persons were present. A gold-headed cane was presented to the venerable William Biggs. Mr. Albert McFarland made the presentation speech. There was a great supper. Currier's Band, from Cincinnati, was present.

In 1842, Colonel Graham charged $2.00 per week at the United States Hotel. Wheat was 30 to 40 cents per bushel, corn 10 cents and fresh beef 3 cents per pound. Those were halcyon days for the hotel boarder.

May 28, 1873, B. F. Coates and Phil Kelley bought the Varner House for $15,000. Prendergast & Jennings leased it for five years.

On June 8, 1873, the Taylor House was conducted, at Third and Market, by William H. H. Taylor and J. A. McDonald. Taylor did not have the ability of his father and the enterprise collapsed.

On July 2, 1873, Prendergast & Jennings leased the old Varner House and changed the name to the Massie House.

On November 10, 1870, the New Merchants' Hotel was opened and J. W. Varner was Manager and William H. Taylor, Clerk. At this time John Wilson was conducting the Newman House, on Front and Massie Streets. On February 3, 1875, Lester E. Wood was conducting the Massie House.

February 3, 1875, Augustine Krauser took the Central Hotel, Southwest corner of Third and Market Streets.

January 19, 1876, George W. Todd, of Pomeroy, leased the Massie House.

On October 11, 1876, Oliver Wood was conducting the Arlington House.

On February 28, 1877, John Cooper, colored, was conducting a first-class restaurant on Second Street.

On April 11, 1877, R. D. Poor had taken charge of the Massie House.

On September 15, 1877, Colonel Oliver Woods leased his hotel to A. C. Emory.

In July 18 1877, the Biggs House was taken by Jennings and Williams. Mr. Prendergast retiring.

James Biggs had purchased the Massie House, leased to John N. Royce, and was conducting it.

On May 5, 1880, Hugh L. Reagan had purchased the Massie House, and was conducting it as the St. Nicholas Hotel.

December 10, 1881, S. B. Jennings sold out his interest in the Biggs House to William H. Williams, his partner.

On August 18, 1883, Frank Robinson succeeded William H. Williams in the Biggs House.

On February 6, 1886, the name of the St. Nicholas was changed to the Dever House. Dempsey W. Dever owned it, and A. J. Dever and wife conducted it.

On May 28th, 1888, Thomas T. Taylor and Fred. D. Brodbeck purchased the lease of the Biggs House to G. W. Babcock.

November 1, 1893, Samuel L. Gilbert took charge of the Biggs House, and Thomas T. Taylor retired.

November 18, 1893, the Hotel Portsmouth changed hands. Mr. Gross gave it up and Mr. Mansard took it.

On January 21, 1899, Nathaniel L. Bryan took charge of the Biggs House.

On September 8, 1900, Mr. Merriman succeeded N. L. Bryan in the Biggs House. He conducted it until March 6, 1900, when the hotel was closed.

On January 1, 1902, Mr. Thomas A. King re-opened the Biggs House.

The Washington Hotel was built by the Washington Hotel Company, incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, with $100,000 capital, in 1898. The first President was Daniel McFarland, now deceased, and the first Secretary and Treasurer was Lon McFarlin, also deceased. The original Directors were: L. D. York, Philo S. Clark, A. M. Damarin, George M. Appel, A. A. Branch, Charles Daehler, and Alex. M. Glickner. The Company purchased the property from the Whitney Corner to the Portsmouth National Bank, including the Mirklewalte, Maxwell First National Bank, J. H. Johnson, and Loan National Bank Buildings, tore them down and erected a five-story building 82½ feet front on Second Street by 134 feet deep on Market Street five stories in height with a basement. The hotel cost $150,000 and it cost $25,000 to furnish it. It has eighty-five sleeping rooms, twenty-two with baths. It opened March 4, 1900. It has telephones and electric lights in all rooms, and storage refrigerators, filtering systems, steam laundry, steam cookers, elevators, etc. It has every up-to-date improvement and convenience, and is one of the most modern hotels in Ohio. The landlord has the most popular name in the world—Smith—and tries to live up to it. He named the hotel "The Washington" for the father of his country, and thought "Washington" and Smith a winning combination, which it has proved to be. The hotel rate is $5.00 per day and it is worth it. Mr. Smith is a very popular landlord. He does all he can to please the traveling and general public. Mr. Smith leases the real estate, owns the furnishings, and is the proprietor of the hotel. The hotel is a credit to the city, to its landlord, and to the Company which built and owns it.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

The Commercial Bank of Scioto.

The old Commercial Bank of Scioto was chartered by special act of December 14, 1817. Its capital was $100,000. The committee to organize it were: William Kenial, Will Caldwell, Thomas Waller, John Brown, Jr., Jacob Offner, Joseph Walder, Josiah Shackford, Nathan K. Clough, John H. Thornton, William Daley and John R. Turner. On December 17, 1817, the first notice of its organization appeared in the Supporter Gazette, at Chillicothe, Ohio. Thomas Waller was the first President and Elijah McIntyre was the first Cashier. He served until 1820, and was succeeded by Jacob Clingman, who served until 1833. Thomas Waller died July 12, 1823, and John R. Turner succeeded him as President. When organized the bank opened on a second floor on Front Street, on Poplar Alley. It continued there until 1829, when it moved into the M. B. Gilbert Residence, below Lynn's livery stable, which was built for it. In 1863 Mr. H. Buchanan became Cashier. Eli Kinney went into the bank as a clerk in 1833, and remained until 1835, when he went into a bank started by Peter Kinney and William Hall. A Mr. Belt, of Chillicothe, son of Levin Belt, and brother-in-law of Buchanan, succeeded him. In 1839 he was succeeded by N. W. Chapman, a young man from the East.

August 5, 1818, the Portsmouth Gazette of this date advertises: Directors to be elected September 3, and second installments ordered paid up. Form of proxy given. Thomas Waller, President, and N. K. Clough, Cashier. This was the first issue of the first paper in Portsmouth.

October 7, 1818, the bank began discounting.

November 25, 1818, election of Directors called the first Monday in January, 1819. Elijah McIntyre, Cashier.

April 26, 1820, this bank was not paying specie, neither was the Bank of West Union. The Bank of Chillicothe was.

June 23, 1829, installment of three per cent. on stock called, to be paid before March 3.

January 7, 1830, the Directors elected were: G. W. Clingman, Washington Kinney, Aaron Kinney, James Lodwick, John McDowell, Jacob Offner, Jacob P. Noel, Ezra Osborn, N. W. Andrews, Moses Gregory, Kennedy Lodwick, J. V. Robinson, and William Hall.

May 20, 1831, three per cent. on stock called by May 25. J. Clingman, Cashier.
